Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 6, 1920.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The VICE PRESIDENT (THOMAS R. MARSHALL, of Indiana) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, at the beginning of every great spiritual enterprise we turn instinctively to Thee, for Thy guidance alone is sufficient for us. When we face the tremendous responsibilities of this hour and office we can hope to measure up to them only as Thou dost give us Thy blessing, as Thou dost direct our steps. Grant such measure of grace to Thy servants in this honorable Senate as that, with devotion to the ultimate principles of truth Thou hast revealed to us these principles in Thy Holy Word, they may faithfully and well perform the duties that are upon them and meet the responsibilities that have come to them.

Forgive our sins and fit us for the larger service of life. For Christ's sake. Amen.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, the day and the hour provided by law and custom for the assembling of the regular session of the Congress of the United States having now arrived, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senators, to ascertain if a constitutional quorum be present.

The reading clerk (John C. Crockett) called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered the roll call. There is a quorum present.

SENATORS FROM VIRGINIA AND ALABAMA.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. CARTER GLASS, who was elected a Senator at the election held on the 2d of November to fill the unexpired term of my late colleague, Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN. Mr. GLASS is present, and I request that he may be sworn in after the credentials are read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The Assistant Secretary (Henry M. Rose) read the credentials, as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA:

This is to certify that at a meeting of the board of State canvassers held at the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth the fourth Monday in November, 1920, on an examination of the official abstract of votes on file in that office it was ascertained and determined that at the general election held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1920, for United States Senator, CARTER GLASS was duly elected United States Senator from Virginia for the unexpired term prescribed by law.

Given under my hand and seal of office at Richmond this 22d day of November, 1920.

[SEAL.] B. O. JAMES,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be placed on file.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague, Mr. HEFLIN, who has been elected to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator BANKHEAD. I ask that the credentials may be read and that Mr. HEFLIN may be allowed to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Montgomery, Ala.

In accordance with section 426 of the Code of Alabama, I, William P. Cobb, secretary of state of the State of Alabama, hereby certify that at a special election held in this State, in accordance with law, on the 2d day of November, A. D. 1920, for United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD, deceased, J. THOMAS HEFLIN was duly elected United States Senator from Alabama to fill the said unexpired term of JOHN H. BANKHEAD, deceased.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Alabama this 18th day of November, 1920.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM P. COBB,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to administering the oath of office to the Senators elect? The Chair hears none. They will present themselves at the Vice President's desk.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. HEFLIN advanced to the Vice President's desk, escorted by Mr. SWANSON and Mr. UNDERWOOD, respectively, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them, they took their seats in the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. LODGE presented the following resolution (S. Res. 388), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 389), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. LODGE and Mr. UNDERWOOD as the committee on the part of the Senate under the resolution.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 390), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT-ELECT HARDING.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before making a motion to adjourn I can not refrain from calling attention to the fact that this is a memorable occasion. For the first time in the history of the country a Member of this body has been elected President of the United States. He is here with us to-day, still a Senator, and I venture to suggest that he may be recognized by the Chair to speak informally to the Senate before he leaves his service here. [Great applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. HARDING was escorted to the Vice President's desk by the Vice President, and he addressed the Senate as follows:

Mr. President and Members of the Senate, I am grateful for this greeting on the part of the membership of this body. I am the more pleased that it affords me an opportunity to say to you rather informally some of the things in my heart which I could utter probably in no other way. I am conscious of the fact that I am here to-day under somewhat unusual circumstances, and I am not unmindful that there is a delicacy about my position which one can not escape except through some form of self-effacement which does not seem quite possible.

No Member of this body could be more reluctant to leave it than am I. I may say to the Senate that I came here with very high respect for this body, and I am leaving it with greater respect than that with which I came. If one could always direct his own political fortunes to his liking, I should have preferred my membership here to any office a citizen may hold in this Republic or elsewhere in the world. I like the freedom, the association, the patriotic sense of responsibility which abides here. I am conscious of the great place which Congress holds in this Government under our Constitution, and from my service here I am particularly sensible to the obligations of the Senate. When my responsibilities begin in the executive capacity I shall be as mindful of the Senate's responsibilities as I have been jealous for them as a Member, but I mean at the same time to be just as insistent about the responsibilities of the Executive. Our governmental good fortune does not lie in any surrender at either end of the Avenue, but in the coordination and cooperation which becomes the two in a great and truly representative popular government.

This brings me to the thought particularly in my mind. Something has been said about the senatorial oligarchy. Of course, everyone here knows that to be a bit of highly imaginative and harmless fiction. But I do recognize how essential is the helpfulness of Congress, and particularly of the Senate, in the making of a successful national administration. I want to express to-day the wish of a colleague for the confidence and the cooperation of the Members of this body in the four years which begin next March 4. I do not limit this sincere request to one side of the aisle. One can not promise agreement in all things with an opposite party which is sometimes insistently wrong; but we may find common ground in the spirit of service; and I hope, sirs, for that agreeable and courteous and ofttimes helpful relationship with the opposite side which has added to the delights of fellow service during the past six years.

We are facing no easy task. We have our full part in the readjustment of human affairs after the world tumult. We have our tasks at home; we have our part in the inevitable work of the civilized world. I am sure that the necessity of wise solution will inspire us to work together, to take common counsel, to be tolerant of one another, and to give the best which is in all of us to attain the ends which become our Republic at home and will maintain its high place among the nations of the earth.

With propriety I can not venture upon any suggestions now, even though I am speaking as a Member of this body. Three months of the present administration remain, and I would have House and Senate join cordially in making them fruitful rather than wasted months. There is so much to be done and we have already had so much of delay that I should like unanimous recognition that there are no party ends to serve, but precious days are calling for service to our common country.

I can not resist, Mr. President and Senators, the repetition of my regret that my association on this floor and in committee rooms is ending to-day. It has been a happy and a proud experience. Let me express the hope to one and all that though there comes a change in official relationship, it will not interrupt our cooperation nor deprive us of the personal fellowship which I have found to be a great compensation for the sacrifices of conscientious public service. [Applause.]

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 7, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 6, 1920.

This being the day fixed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of the Congress, the House of Representatives of the Sixty-sixth Congress met in its Hall at 12 o'clock noon for its third session, and was called to order by the Speaker, Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Spirit, our Heavenly Father, infinite in Thine attributes, whose judgments are true and righteous altogether, reveal unto us more clearly Thy purposes and give us the desire, the zeal, the courage to conform our ways to Thine. Continue Thy favors unto us as a people and inspire those in authority with clear vision, high ideals, noble endeavors, that the concurrent branches of government may work together in harmony and in unison with Thee; that we may continue an ensample to all the world for true, just and equitable government. And grant that the whole family of mankind under Thy divine influence may become indeed citizens of Thy kingdom; that Thy will may be done in earth as it is in Heaven, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name, and the eternal good of mankind.

Since we last met, our Father in Heaven, two strong, pure and efficient Members of this House have passed over the Great Divide leaving the world the poorer for their going. Bless we pray Thee those that knew and loved them, especially those bound to them by the ties of kinship, with the eternal hope of the immortality of the soul, revealed in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Members elect desiring to take the oath of office will now come forward.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. SNELL. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. HAMILTON FISH, Jr., Representative elect from the twenty-sixth congressional district of New York, may take the oath of office at this time. He has not received his certificate, but he was elected by about 22,000 majority and there is no contest.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is this a Republican Member elect?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did he come to have so small a majority as 22,000? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, Representative elect ROBER A. JAMES, of the fifth district of Virginia, whose certificate is in the hands of the Clerk, is in the Hall, and I ask that he be allowed to take the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. Those Members elect whose certificates are present do not need unanimous consent. They will present themselves.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Representative elect NATHAN D. PERLMAN, of New York, Representative elect from the fourteenth district of New York, the nominee of both parties, may be sworn in. There is no question about his election.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] asks unanimous consent that Mr. NATHAN D. PERLMAN, of the fourteenth district of New York, who is the nominee of both parties, be allowed to take the oath of office, although his certificate is not in the hands of the Clerk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MacCRATE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request on behalf of Mr. LESTER D. VOLK, Representative elect from the tenth congressional district of New York, who was elected by a majority of 13,000, and against whom there has been no protest filed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. CHARLES SWINDALL, duly elected from the eighth district of Oklahoma to succeed the Hon. DICK MORGAN, by something like 10,000 majority, be allowed to take the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that Representative elect CHARLES SWINDALL may be sworn in at this time, although the certificate of election has not yet been received by the Clerk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following Members elect presented themselves at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law:

CLARENCE J. MCLEOD, thirteenth congressional district of Michigan.

FRANCIS F. PATTERSON, Jr., first congressional district of New Jersey.

LESTER D. VOLK, tenth congressional district of New York.

NATHAN D. PERLMAN, fourteenth congressional district of New York.

HAMILTON FISH, Jr., twenty-sixth congressional district of New York.

CHARLES SWINDALL, eighth congressional district of Oklahoma.

HARRY C. RANSLEY, third congressional district of Pennsylvania.

ROBER A. JAMES, fifth congressional district of Virginia.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 593.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed by the Speaker, on the part of the House of Representatives, to join with the Committee on the part of the Senate, to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House, Mr. MONDELL, Mr. FORDNEY, and Mr. CLARK of Missouri.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 594

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed with business.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 595.

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the hour of daily meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] may be permitted to address the House for one hour after the reading of the Journal on Thursday of this week, not to interfere with privileged business.

Mr. CALDWELL. On what subject?

Mr. MADDEN. On the Japanese question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] may address the House on Thursday next for one hour immediately after the reading of the Journal, not to interfere with privileged business. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, by instruction of the Committee on Committees I present the names of seven Members to be elected by the House as new members of the Committee on Appropriations, to be assigned on that committee in the order indicated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves the election of seven members of the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be members of the Committee on Appropriations:
MARTIN B. MADDEN, Illinois.
DANIEL R. ANTHONY, Kansas.
SIDNEY ANDERSON, Minnesota.
PATRICK H. KELLEY, Michigan.
JOHN JACOB ROGERS, Massachusetts.
JOHN A. ELSTON, California.
S. WALLACE DEMPSEY, New York.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate resolution 389.

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

Also,

Senate resolution 388.

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE DICK T. MORGAN, OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It becomes my painful duty to inform the House of Representatives of the death of my colleague, Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, a Representative from the eighth district of the State of Oklahoma in the Sixty-sixth Congress, which occurred at Danville, Ill., on the 4th day of July, 1920.

My colleague was held in high esteem by the people of his district and by all of his colleagues here, and we all sincerely mourn his passing. At an appropriate time I shall ask the House to set aside a day for exercises in commemoration of his life and public services. For the present I offer the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 596.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, a Representative from the State of Oklahoma.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate a copy of these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GARLAND, OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, the death of a Member of this House and a personal friend puts upon me the painful duty of announcing to the House that the Hon. MAHLON M. GARLAND, a Representative at large from the State of Pennsylvania, died at his residence in Washington on the 19th of November last. He was highly esteemed by all of his colleagues here and greatly beloved by all the people living in his State. At the proper time I shall ask the House to adopt its usual method of announcing to the people the esteem which the House placed upon his character and his services. He was kind in private life and efficient in public life. I offer the following resolutions:

House resolution 597.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. MAHLON M. GARLAND, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate a copy of these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolutions were agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. ROMJUE, for 10 days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. DRANE, for an indefinite period, on account of serious sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect to our deceased colleagues, DICK T. MORGAN and MAHLON M. GARLAND, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 7, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 7, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in Thy presence there is fullness of joy. At Thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore. Whether it is in the far-off land of our dreams and hopes or amid the toil and cares of this present life, our companionship with Thee is the measure of the blessedness of our lives.

We seek Thee to-day to journey with us in the problems that confront us, giving to us the constant inspiration of Thy truth and of Thy Spirit, that we may rightly discern the way of life for this Nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

BERT M. FERNALD, a Senator from the State of Maine, and PARK TRAMMELL, a Senator from the State of Florida, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed with business.

The message also announced that a committee of three Members had been appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to join with the committee on the part of the Senate, to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, and had appointed Mr. MONDELL, Mr. FORDNEY, and Mr. CLARK of Missouri as a committee on the part of the House.

The message further communicated to the Senate intelligence of the death of Hon. MAHLON M. GARLAND, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, a Representative from the State of Oklahoma, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. UNDERWOOD appeared, and

Mr. LODGE said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to join a similar committee on the part of the House of Representatives to notify the President that Congress is organized and awaits a communication from him have performed that duty, and I am instructed by the President to say that he will communicate with Congress to-day.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that Mr. GLASS be reassigned to the committees on which he served at the last session. Having been sworn in as a new Member on yesterday, I believe that technically he will have to be reassigned to the committees. I send to the desk an order to that effect, and ask unanimous consent that it be agreed to.

There being no objection, the order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That Mr. GLASS be assigned to service on the following standing committees of the Senate: Appropriations, Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, District of Columbia, Expenditures in the Interior Department, and Fisheries.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I request that Mr. HEFLIN be assigned to the committee places filled by former Senator Bankhead and later by former Senator Comer, which are now vacant. I send to the desk an order to that effect and ask for its adoption.

There being no objection, the order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That Mr. HEFLIN be assigned to service on the following standing committees of the Senate: Civil Service and Retrenchment, Coast and Insular Survey, Commerce, Conservation of National Resources, Post Offices and Post Roads, and Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague, Mr. UNDERWOOD, for the term beginning March 4, next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Montgomery, Ala.

In accordance with section 426 of the Code of Alabama, I, Wm. P. Cobb, secretary of state of the State of Alabama, hereby certify that at the general election held in this State, in accordance with law, on the 2d day of November, A. D. 1920, for the office of United States Senator from Alabama, OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD was duly elected to fill said office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Alabama, at the capitol, in the city of Montgomery, this 18th day of November, 1920.

[SEAL.] WM. P. COBB,
Secretary of State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of the Jacksonville Wholesale Grocers' Association, of Jacksonville, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit common carriers from increasing interstate rates, fares, and charges without the permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Live Oak, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit, for the purpose of canning and export from Alaska, fishing of salmon in the Yukon River, its tributaries, and adjacent waters, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HENDERSON. I send to the desk a resolution adopted by the Yerington, Nev., Parent-Teachers' Association, and ask that it may lie on the table. The resolution is one indorsing the Sheppard-Towner bill for the protection of maternity and infancy, and that bill is on the calendar, reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table, as requested.

UMI

Mr. STERLING presented a resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota in favor of the enactment of legislation relating to appropriations to reimburse owners of land flooded by Government artesian wells, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring)—

Whereas the Congress of the United States in years past has appropriated money for the sinking of four 6-inch wells on the shores of Lake Andes, in the county of Charles Mix, State of South Dakota, for the purpose and object of keeping said lake filled with water to at least its normal depth, which result has been fully and successfully realized, to the great pleasure, satisfaction and enjoyment of the general public, and all persons interested, with the exception of certain landowners, whose lands abutting the shores of said lake have become flooded and covered with water; and

Whereas the owners of said flooded lands have instituted proceedings with a view of inducing Congress to appropriate money for the draining of said lake to such an extent as to reclaim their flooded lands, which if done will, to a very great extent, destroy the beauty and benefits of said lake: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That the Congress of the United States and our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and hereby are, memorialized and petitioned to appropriate a reasonable amount of money to indemnify and reimburse the owners of said flooded lands, and that no action be taken or money appropriated for the draining or lowering of said lake; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Congress of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. STERLING also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota in favor of legislation to repeal the Canadian reciprocity act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring) convened in extraordinary session at the capitol in the city of Pierre, S. Dak.:

Whereas the Federal Government has negotiated a treaty with Canada for the purpose of promoting reciprocal trade relations with that Dominion; and

Whereas said treaty has been submitted to the Congress of the United States and was on July 26, 1911, ratified by an act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas said treaty has never been ratified by or for the Dominion of Canada and therefore has never become effective; and

Whereas it is evident that if such treaty should be ratified by or for the Canadian Government it will become a law of the land and be detrimental to the agricultural interests of South Dakota and especially injurious to the interests of the wheat growers of the State and of the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That we respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States the need of repealing said act of Congress entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes, approved July 26, 1911," and we therefore request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the repeal of said act and to take whatever other action may be necessary to the end that such treaty shall never become a law by ratification thereof by or for the Government of the Dominion of Canada.

The secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit engrossed copies of this resolution to the Members of the United States Senate and Representatives in Congress of South Dakota, the Secretary of the Senate and Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

Dated at Pierre, S. Dak., this 25th day of June, 1920.

Mr. STERLING also presented a memorial of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota respectfully represents to the Congress of the United States that—

Whereas it is self-evident that a civilized nation should not longer permit the price of wool, cotton, and food products to be fixed or manipulated by speculation and without regard to the cost of production; and

Whereas all other producers know in advance the approximate prices they can obtain for their products, but the farmer when he plants his crop or begins preparing his stock for market has no assurance that his products, the most important of all, being absolutely necessary for the existence of humanity, will even repay the actual cost of production and frequently these producers suffer immense losses; millions of dollars having been lost during the past year by our farmers in the preparation of cattle, hogs, and sheep for market; and

Whereas if the prices of staple farm products were stabilized by the General Government, it would add immensely to the stability and security of agriculture, and be equally beneficial to the ultimate consumer; and

Whereas it is our belief that the stabilization of such prices could be accomplished in such a manner as would require the National Government to finance only the surplus, which is usually small compared with the entire crop, but the stabilizing of this surplus would fix the price of the entire crop, and if any surplus should prove too large for profitable disposition by the Government the prices for the following year could be reduced and the prices of other products increased, thereby resulting in the increase of any crop in which a shortage may exist; and

Whereas under the present system gambling and speculation are deemed necessary to make a market, but the fluctuations are so great that frequently from 50 per cent to 100 per cent is added thereby to the price of such products after leaving the farmer's hands and before preparation for use, all of which is lost to the producer and paid for by the ultimate consumer; and

Whereas the stabilization of the prices of certain agricultural products will automatically assist to a great extent in stabilizing the cost of meat production:

Now, therefore, on behalf of the farmers and stock raisers of South Dakota and of the entire Nation, we urgently request the Congress of the United States to enact a law requiring the President of the United States, through a commission of experts fairly representing both the producing and consuming public, to fix and guarantee the prices of such farm products, thus assuring the producer a fair and reasonable price for his products and automatically eliminating gambling and speculation therein.

Certificate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Secretary's Office.

I, C. A. Burkhart, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed memorial, to wit, House Memorial No. 1, was duly passed by the sixteenth session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre.

[SEAL.] C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HARRISON. At the instance of the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], I present a telegram from the State Bankers' Association of South Dakota, touching live-stock products. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and printed in the RECORD.

The telegram was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., December 4, 1920.

Hon. ED. S. JOHNSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The agricultural and live-stock interests of this country are in peril. The prices have been reduced far below the cost of production. If farmers are forced to sell their grain at the present prices, many of them will be bankrupt. If the stock raisers are forced to sell their immatured stock the herds will be depleted and the stock industry jeopardized. It is the judgment of those best posted and in close touch with these interests that Congress should immediately legislate guaranteeing to the agriculturist a minimum price for his surplus crop and do this while the crop is still in his hands if such a price could be fixed for at least the cost of production, which should not be less than $1 per bushel for corn, 75 cents per bushel for oats, $2.25 per bushel for wheat, and $3 per bushel for flax at the terminals. This we think would immediately stabilize prices. This price, or a price which should be deemed fair to all, should, in our opinion, be made to cover the surplus grain on hand. At the end of the crop year there may be other plans that will save the producer from bankruptcy, but it is essential and important that something be done at once, as otherwise there is no inducement to the food producer to crop his land next year, even if he were able to do so. Such legislation as suggested, or some other plan if thought better that will get immediate relief, should meet the approval and practically the unanimous consent of Congress. In our judgment, proposed extension of credit will not meet the present crisis. Our producers will be able to partially liquidate their indebtedness if they could secure for their products the cost of production. Agriculture is the greatest and most important basic industry, and the stabilization of the price for farm products will also be of tremendous benefit to the business and industrial world. It is urged upon you as a representative of the great agricultural State of South Dakota that you use all means at your command to hasten legislation as indicated.

JOHN W. WADDEN,
President State Bankers' Association.

Mr. KNOX presented petitions of sundry citizens of the city of Chester, Delaware County, Pa., and members of the Ministers' Association of the city of Chester, Delaware County, Pa., praying for the relief of the people of Armenia, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MOSES presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Dover, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Club of New London, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. COLT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pawtucket and Central Falls, R. I., praying that full citizenship be granted to the American Indians, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a petition of employees of the custodian department of the Federal building (post office) at Newport, R. I., praying for favorable action on the minimum-wage bill, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry Lithuanians of Providence, R. I., remonstrating against the unwarranted invasion of Lithuania by Polish outlaws and urging the recognition of the Republic of Lithuania, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of 20 officers and members of the Every Tuesday Club, of Kingston, R. I., remonstrating against the encroachments upon scenic beauties of the national parks for commercial purposes, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the Minneapolis Retail Jewelers' Club, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for a revision of the law imposing an excise tax on jewelry, which was referrred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KEYES presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Somersworth, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Dover Woman's Club, of Dover, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

THE STEEL STRIKE OF 1919.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it will be recalled that about a year ago a movement was inaugurated known as the "Interchurch movement" which eventually culminated in an association of some 30 so-called evangelical churches of the country, claiming a membership or communicants to the number of some 26,000.

A commission was appointed by this organization on industrial relations which conducted an inquiry into the steel strike of 1919. The report of that commission, of which I have here a copy, is accompanied with recommendations for Federal action, so that it is in the nature of a petition proper to be submitted under the present order of business.

I desire at this time to submit the report and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, with directions to communicate to the Senate such views as they may care to submit concerning the recommendations of the report.

With the permission of the Senate, I desire to call attention to some highly interesting features of the report. I read from page 4, as follows:

> The public mind completely lost sight of the real causes of the strike, which lay in hours, wages, and conditions of labor, fixed "arbitrarily," according to the head of the United States Steel Corporation, in his testimony at a senatorial investigation. It lost sight of them because it was more immediately concerned with the actual outcome of the great struggle between aggregations of employers and aggregations of workers than it was with the fundamental circumstances that made such a struggle inevitable. This investigation and report deal primarily with the causative facts—with abiding conditions in the steel industry—and only secondarily with conflicts of policies and their influence on national institutions and modes of thought.
> Out of the first set of undisputed facts, these may be cited in the beginning:
> (a) The number of those working the 12-hour day is 69,000. (Testimony of E. H. Gary, Senate investigation, vol. 1, p. 157.)
> (b) The number of those receiving the common labor or lowest rate of pay is 70,000. (Letters of E. H. Gary to this commission.)
> This means that approximately 350,000 men, women, and children are directly affected by the longest hours or the smallest pay in that part of the industry owned by the United States Steel Corporation, which fixes pay and hours without conference with the labor force.
> Since this corporation controls about half the industry, it is therefore a reasonably conservative estimate that the working conditions of three-quarters of a million of the Nation's population have their lives determined arbitrarily by the 12-hour day or by the lowest pay in the steel industry.

Touching the subject of hours of labor, the commission finds:

> Approximately one-half the employees were subjected to the 12-hour day. Approximately one-half of these in turn were subjected to the 7-day week.
> Much less than one-quarter had a working-day of less than 10 hours (60-hour week).
> The average week for all employees was 68.7 hours; these employees generally believed that a week of over 60 hours ceased to be a standard in other industries 15 to 20 years ago.
> Schedules of hours for the chief classes of steel workers were from 12 to 40 hours longer per week than in other basic industries near steel communities; the American steel average was over 20 hours longer than the British, which ran between 47 and 48 hours in 1919.
> The only reasons for the 12-hour day, furnished by the companies, were found to be without adequate basis in fact.
> Wages: The annual earnings of over one-third of all productive iron and steel workers were, and had been for years, below the level set by Government experts as the minimum of subsistence standard for families of five.
> The annual earnings of 72 per cent of all workers were, and had been for years, below the level set by Government experts as the minimum of comfort level for families of five.
> This second standard being the lowest which scientists are willing to term an "American standard of living," it follows that nearly three-quarters of the steel workers could not earn enough for an American standard of living.

Two other significant things:

> In western Pennsylvania the civil rights of free speech and assembly were abrogated without just cause both for individuals and labor organizations. Personal rights of strikers were violated by the State constabulary and sheriff's deputies.
> Charges of bolshevism or of industrial radicalism in the conduct of the strike were without foundation.

The excerpts read will sufficiently characterize the document and without detaining the Senate further to acquaint it with its contents, I trust that the committee will at least recommend the publication of the report as a public document. A special reason for such action is disclosed in the following paragraph from the report:

> For the country at large the source of information about conditions in the steel industry and the progress of the strike was, of course, principally the press. The wide discrepancies between the facts now disclosed and most of the press reports at the time are the subject of exhaustive analysis elsewhere. The findings are that most newspapers, traditionally hesitant in reporting industrial matters, failed notably to acquaint the public with the facts, failed to take steps necessary to ascertain the facts, failed finally to publish adequately what was brought out by the brief investigation of the United States Senate committee.

A note, however, says:

> A notable exception to the general rule was shown by a series of articles during the strike carried by the New York World.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator if that report contains information as to the average salaries or the wages earned per annum by the several classes of employees?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not recall that there was any average calculated, but of course the average wage is a matter of very little consequence. It is disclosed that there are a limited number of employees of the Steel Corporation and other steel companies who do, in fact, earn very large wages, sometimes running to $20 a day.

Mr. THOMAS. Does it give the minimum?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It gives the minimum.

Mr. THOMAS. In figures?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In figures.

Mr. THOMAS. What are they?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not now recall; but there are elaborate tables.

Mr. THOMAS. My reason for asking is that I am informed that they are much larger than the average salaries of the ministers who prepared the document.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should not be surprised if that is correct; but the legitimate conclusion from that is that ministers are very poorly paid.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not cite it as an argument, but merely as a fact. I agree with the Senator that they are poorly paid.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the report may be referred as heretofore requested, with instructions as stated.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from what he has been reading? There was so much noise in the Chamber at the time that I was one of the Senators who could not hear him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is the report of a commission appointed by the industrial relations department of the interchurch movement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the report was referred, with instructions as requested, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to report to the Senate an original joint resolution, which I ask may be read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212), directing the War Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, ought not that resolution go to the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a report from a committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the joint resolution has not as yet been referred to the committee. I will ask the Senator from North Dakota if the joint resolution has ever before been brought to the attention of the Senate?

Mr. GRONNA. No; it has not. The joint resolution was presented to the Committee on Agriculture; the committee held rather extensive hearings upon it, a subcommittee was appointed; it was then presented to the whole committee and unanimously reported out by the whole committee.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that the record may be straight, the Senator ought to introduce the joint resolution at this time and have it referred to his committee, or to whatever committee may be appropriate, and the committee could report it back. Then the Senator could ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The point raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was made in the committee when the resolution came up, and the committee decided that it was not necessary under the rules of the Senate to have the resolution introduced and referred to the committee if it originated in the committee. It was ordered by the committee to be reported as a committee resolution under paragraph 4 of Rule XIV of the Rules of the Senate, which provides that—

> Every bill and joint resolution reported from a committee, not having previously been read, shall be read once, and twice, if not objected to, on the same day, and placed on the calendar in the order in which the same may be reported.

Mr. SMOOT. That, I think, Mr. President, sustains the position that I have taken, namely, that it must first be presented to the Senate and then referred to the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. The rule to which I have referred does not say so.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator what the record will show in this case? The record shows in the case of all bills and joint resolutions that they were presented to the Senate on a certain day; that they were referred to a committee upon a certain day; that they were reported from a committee upon a certain day, and were considered and disposed of upon a certain day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate may take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair and then discuss the matter if it is so desired. Clause 3 of Rule XIV provides that—

> No bill or joint resolution shall be committed or amended until it shall have been twice read, after which it may be referred to a committee.

Clause 4 of the rule provides that—

> Every bill and joint resolution reported from a committee, not having previously been read, shall be read once, and twice.

The two, construed together, must mean that the Senate intended that a regular committee of the Senate could, of its own motion, without the introduction of a bill or joint resolution, submit such a measure to the Senate. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say that this joint resolution—which I have had no opportunity to examine, which I have not read, and which has not been read at the desk—apparently seeks to revive the Finance Corporation. Technically, I suppose, it may be said that we are still in a state of war; but practically the Finance Corporation has gone out of existence. The Finance Corporation was created by an act reported from the Finance Committee, which framed it. I do not know whether the Finance Committee has had this matter under consideration at all. I do not now happen to be a member of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that this joint resolution does not reenact any law. It will be seen, when it is read, that it simply is a direction to a body provided and organized under the law to go ahead and perform its functions. It does not change any law; it does not attempt to change any law; and it seems to me, therefore, that it properly comes from the Committee on Agriculture, because it pertains purely and simply to an agricultural proposition.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LODGE. I yield; yes.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator whether the resolution is long or short?

Mr. GRONNA. It is very short.

Mr. REED. In order that we may know what we are talking about, I suggest that it might be read informally for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not quite express the full view of the Chair. The Chair believes that he did not read quite all of the rule. It reads:

> Every bill and joint resolution reported from a committee, not having previously been read, shall be read once, and twice, if not objected to, on the same day, and placed on the calendar in the order in which the same may be reported.

Now, under another rule the first reading can take place today, and that ends it for to-day. If the Senator wants it read, that ends the action on it to-day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to take no action which will delay the consideration of this measure, at least until I know what the measure is; but up to this time the Senate is in the dark in regard to the proposition. The Senator from North Dakota asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution. I am not willing to give unanimous consent for the present consideration of a matter when I do not know what it is, and I am asking if the joint resolution can not be read at the desk for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before the reading takes place I wish to inquire whether the Chair has held that the joint resolution can properly come before the Senate as reported by the committee without having first been formally offered and referred to a committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has so ruled.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was out for a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) was read, as follows:

Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country.

Whereas there exists in the agricultural sections of the country unprecedented and unparalleled distress on account of the inability of the farmers to dispose of the corn, wheat, cotton, live stock, and other commodities now in marketable condition at prices that will pay the cost of production; and

Whereas the people of Europe are in dire need of the agricultural products now in possession of the farmers of this country but are unable to purchase on account of existing financial conditions; and

Whereas under an act of Congress there was established the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of financing the exportation of American products to foreign markets; and

Whereas the activities of the War Finance Corporation were suspended in May, 1920, by an order of the Secretary of the Treasury; and

Whereas the banks of the country are unable to extend credit to the farmer in order that the farm products may be held until they can be sold in a fair and reasonable market: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation are hereby directed to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated, with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural products to foreign markets.

Resolved, second, That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby directed to take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking, to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at the lowest possible rate of interest.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I now ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I shall have to ask that the joint resolution go over. It is a very important matter, and I think probably it ought to be enlarged if it is to pass. Many of the mills of New England are closing down because they are carrying great quantities of unsold goods; and if the Finance Corporation is to be revived for that purpose, I think the joint resolution ought to be made to cover the industries.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I believe it will cover them.

Mr. LODGE. I should like an opportunity to examine it. I can not tell from one reading from the desk.

Mr. GRONNA. No; I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to know what is in it. I want to help the farmers if I can.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator has a right to object, of course. I have simply done my duty as directed by the committee. I have been asked to make every possible effort to have this joint resolution passed to-day, for the reason that in the West and in the South banks by the dozens are failing because farmers are unable to market their products. It is a real emergency, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Mills are closing, many of them, and thousands of workingmen and operatives are being thrown out of employment because the mills are obliged to close, as they are unable to carry further the unsold goods which they now have on hand. It seems to me this is a very large and difficult question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before the objection to consideration is disposed of, I desire to ask the privilege of following this joint resolution in the RECORD by a statement of Mr. Meyer, former head of the War Finance Corporation, in which he discusses the importance and the value of reestablishing it. I should like to have that statement printed in the RECORD following this joint resolution, as a matter of information to Senators.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to its being printed in the RECORD. I have no doubt that the Finance Corporation would be glad to be reestablished.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand, then, that the statement will be published in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. EUGENE MEYER, JR., FORMERLY MANAGING DIRECTOR OF THE WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

Mr. MEYER. Senator KENYON, I assume it is in order for me to report a little about the trip of the committee of which you are a member and of which Senator CALDER is chairman. Senator CALDER, the chairman, not being here, I was a little reluctant to have it appear in the form of a report of that trip.

Senator KENYON. Well, give your own observations.

Mr. MEYER. I was simply an attendant of the committee, having been asked by Senator CALDER to make some observations on financial matters.

Senator KENYON. Have you stated your position and official connection?

Mr. MEYER. I was formerly a director of the War Finance Corporation, from the time of its incorporation, and managing director from July 1, 1919, until June 1, 1920.

When Senator CALDER undertook to investigate reconstruction and production for the Senate committee, of which he was chairman, he asked me as to the housing situation and for some suggestions, and I pointed out that the housing situation was only one factor of a general situation in which scarcity of capital was the fundamental fact which was making the trouble, and he asked me how the housing industry could get capital, and I told him that it could not under the circumstances; he asked me how the circumstances could be changed so that it could be done. I said if we had more earning and less spending it could be done. That led to my suggestions on the whole situation, and after that I accompanied the Senator on his trip.

Mr. MEYER. The figure Mr. Scroyer presented is one which is typical of what we encountered when Senator CALDER, Senator KENYON for a part of the way, and I and some other assistants recently made a trip around the country. The conditions in Cleveland and Chicago, the first places we visited, where coal and steel and iron and coke are the principal products, were not so bad—the conditions there are not so distressing. There is some unemployment in Chicago, and it is growing, but even in the last two weeks the bottom has dropped out of the iron market. And I think there will be no exception there to the blight that has been sweeping the country the past few months. I have talked to many people in the last few months, and they have generally agreed that conditions were going to be bad, but—and then they figure out that the special business they are interested in would be exempt from trouble. And in every instance these special features to be exempted have fallen to the general tendency of prices and the congestion of markets. The characteristic feature of the situation might be described as a congestion in the circulation of business; and it is spreading in all directions.

Senator CALDER, the chairman of the committee, asked me to give a little impression of the trip, and I will do so.

Senator KENYON. Just the agricultural features of it.

Mr. MEYER. The grain and the corn and pork products were duplicated in the cattle situation which we visited in Colorado. Senator THOMAS is familiar with that. We have heard from other sections of the Northwest, where cattle and grain is the principal business, that we did not have a chance to visit. Senator KELLOGG knows it is the same in his territory.

Coming back we stopped in Kansas City, which is the center in the Mississippi Valley of the grain and cattle business, where the banking strain has been especially acute during the last few months and where the Federal reserve bank discounts reached their highest points compared with the resources of the district. They have been getting in some money and decreasing the inflation, and they find the way to decrease inflation is to move goods. A man goes to his local bank and pays off his loan and the bank can pay off the member banks and the member bank repays its loan from the Federal reserve bank. Hitting business over the head with a club will not decrease inflation, no matter how much it may be advocated. It may cause senselessness, but will not cause the kind of sound liquidation which is needed now.

We went from Kansas City to St. Louis, and a number of leading men from Memphis appeared to present southern conditions. Senator SPENCER sat with Senator CALDER, and we heard from the men from the South concerning cotton and cottonseed oil and cottonseed cake. On account of its being a one-crop territory, if one were to discriminate between extremes of hopelessness, perhaps the South has suffered more acutely than any other part of the country. I think it is not unnatural, because the South has depended upon exports more than any other activity, with the exception of the copper industry. About five-eighths of the cotton and the copper in America in the past has always gone for export.

Now, the Secretary of the Treasury, with whom I am obliged to differ, although it is unpleasant to differ with a man who has been your superior officer, is giving the total dollar values of exports as his reason for saying that there is no need for more exports, and perhaps he even intimates that there is no opportunity for additional exports. The cotton exports to Germany are 25 per cent of what they were before the war. Whatever the figures in dollars may be, the amounts are what interest the producer. The farmer does not produce dollar exports; he produces bales of cotton and bushels of wheat and products measured in pounds and tons. You may be misled by the dollar value of exports and you may be misled on the total figures. The statisticians say that the volume is 25 per cent in excess of what it used to be before the war. But I have made a little compilation of the cotton situation simply as an index. The exports from September 4 to November 27, 1920, were 1,481,450 bales, about the same as last year up to date. These 1,481,450 bales compare with the last prewar year, 1913, for the same period, when the amount was 3,837,139 bales, and the year before that it was 3,808,429 bales, and the year before that it was 3,710,514 bales, and the year before that, 1910, 10 years ago now, it was 2,915,511. These are bales of cotton which is what they produced in the South. And if we were to go into the cottonseed meal and the cottonseed cake, the exports this year are very much less in comparison.

Now, the condition, I think, is so well understood, Mr. Chairman, that with your permission and the permission of the other gentlemen here I will not go further into them. What can be done is the interesting thing.

Senator FRANCE. You have not the figures on grain?

Mr. MEYER. I have not, but I will compile them for you.

Senator FRANCE. It would be important to have them in the record.

Mr. MEYER. I suggested to the chairman that in connection with these hearings it would be interesting to have the chief of the Bureau of Domestic Trade and his chief statistician on the subject of foreign trade answer any questions that the gentlemen here are interested in. I have no organization of statisticians and engineers and typewriters at my disposal, or I would be glad to furnish it.

But it was exactly such a condition as now exists in mind that the board of directors of the War Finance Corporation, after the armistice, made a recommendation to the Secretary of the Treasury, Senator GLASS at that time, that it would be well, in view of a possible breakdown, to give authority to assist the financing of exports. And the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Senate Finance Committee, to whom the matter was presented on a recommendation made by Secretary GLASS, passed favorably upon the recommendation, as you all know. The amendment was passed by the Congress at the end of the session as a part of the Victory loan act of March 3, 1919, four months after the armistice. It is necessary to note the date because in this universal desire to abolish the war activities it is well to know that this is not a war power. It was passed in view of the reconstruction necessities and has nothing whatever to do with the power under which the corporation had functioned during the war. All the activities connected with the war were terminated on the day of the armistice so far as the loans that were used in the prosecution of the war were concerned. Not one loan was made after that except to the railroads after the appropriation failed, and we made those on the ground that demobilization was a necessary part of the military operations. They were even threatening that the railroads would cease to operate if no funds were provided, and a way was provided which seemed to meet the approval of everybody. Those loans were all repaid when the Congress passed the appropriation. We had $1,000,000,000 given to us with unusual breadth of power. The matter was no doubt discussed by the committees in Congress that the powers were very broad. And we said they were because we did not know how or where or when we might be called upon to use them. I also said that the board has always acted judiciously and conservatively in connection with the powers conferred upon it, and we proposed to administer that power and use those recourses with that same degree of high sense of responsibility. As a matter of fact, as soon as the bill was passed a number of people thought there was some easy money to be had from the Government, and we were besieged by irresponsible applicants who could not have done much if they wanted to, and who had no adequate security to give, as required under the act. The large bankers at that time saw no need for it; the large exporters were proceeding, and exchange was still pegged by Government action, and it was only after exchange was unpegged that they began to see that this power might come in as a necessity. As a matter of fact, after March 3, after the passing of this act, the Treasury loaned to the foreign Governments $1,400,000,000, so that the purchases that went on by the foreigners were financed to a great extent by direct Treasury aid from our Government to those Governments, in purchases of goods for military purposes, but which to a great extent they were able to use in their industries after the armistice had been declared. There were still some securities being sold from the other side by investors. After the war there was a great deal of money remitted by people in this country to their friends and families over there, and that helped our exports. Many people thought that exchange would go up in a little while, and there is a large amount of American money locked up in speculation in exchange. We brought to this country large amounts of securities of the foreign countries and towns. Switzerland and Holland and Italy, and the cities of Berne, Copenhagen, and Stockholm, and others. In that way a very large flow of our goods has been financed. There is not any use to deny that our exports are large in dollars, but our exports are very unbalanced, and it was exactly that sort of thing that I urged upon the Secretary that he might do when business was prosperous, and there was no unemployment. I pointed out that in financing exports some commodities undesirable in America would move to Europe. There were special points where, for instance, the low-grade cotton was stored, as in Memphis, to the extent of 240,000 bales. Poland and Czechoslovakia and Germany were the only countries that have bought that cotton. That did not appeal to him at the time.

We took upon ourselves the full power of discrimination in all loans; for instance, we found that the tobacco market was good last year, and we refused to finance tobacco. That was tobacco generally. A little later Senator BECKHAM and Mr. BURNES came up and told us about the black-patch tobacco area in Kentucky, where they grew perhaps 80 per cent of their crops for foreign-country markets. There was no other market for that tobacco and 80,000 farmers were involved, and we got the Secretary to consider that situation. I merely mention that because this organization could go on and help each case in its markets and do an immense amount of good for it.

At first, toward the end of the year 1919, a few large corporations began to sit up and take notice that they were unable to sell their products. Because of the exchange situation, they could not sell for cash, and a number of corporations who could give good security came to us and we financed some farm machinery and some electrical machinery and some locomotives. I think that was all.

The problem of how to finance the export of agricultural products was more difficult, because we had to get responsible agencies, and the farmer in Kansas has not the organization which enables him by good business representation and good legal representation to get from the foreign countries the securities needed to make a good loan.

Senator NORRIS. I would like to ask you there whether it would be a practical proposition, where farmers are organized like the Farmers' Union, represented by the man who preceded you, that an organization like that, representing 40,000 persons, could get assistance?

Mr. MEYER. I believe there would be a way to finance the export of farm products. I was just coming to that, Senator.

Senator NORRIS. Excuse me. Proceed.

Mr. MEYER. Both the cotton situation and the wheat situation were presented to us. We worked out a way to finance exports of cotton and wheat and condensed milk. Those are the three commodities. I want to give you a detailed concrete illustration.

Senator GORE. That is what I want to know about.

Mr. MEYER. I want to tell you all I know about it. We financed $11,500,000 of wheat to Belgium. The Belgian Government gave its treasury certificates for that wheat to the exporters; the exporter would not be able to come to us and borrow all that money; no one concern would borrow $11,000,000 to loan to Belgium, even if he was a large exporter. But what the exporter did was to arrange with a group of bankers, and this group of bankers took the obligation of the Belgian treasury and brought it to the War Finance Corporation and gave it their own notes, and unqualified obligation, with the security of the Belgian Government as additional security. Gentlemen, there will not be a dollar lost on that loan.

Senator FRANCE. They were American banks?

Mr. MEYER. Oh, absolutely. We loaned only to Americans. The bill was drawn in that way—that we loan only to American exporters or bankers, only for American products.

Representative RIDDICK. When was that loan made?

Mr. MEYER. The wheat was shipped every few months. I think the loan was made along in the spring—along in April.

Senator SWANSON. What was the length of time?

Mr. MEYER. It was payable at different dates, the Belgian treasury certificates; I think they began to mature in nine months.

Senator SWANSON. What did the $11,000,000 average?

Mr. MEYER. I think it might have averaged 12 or 15 months.

Senator GORE. What year was that?

Mr. MEYER. This year.

Senator NORRIS. What interest did the obligation draw?

Mr. MEYER. Now, Senator, I do not want to answer that without absolute knowledge, and I will answer that in the record by going to the office and asking about it. It was 6 per cent at one time, and we subsequently raised the rate to 7 per cent, or even 7½ per cent, when money became tighter.

Senator HARRISON. That is a case where the Belgian Government took the paper, or indorsed the paper?

Mr. MEYER. The security was a Belgian treasury certificate. The exporters came to the corporation and borrowed the money on that security.

Senator HARRISON. What I want to know is how it can be done with Germany.

Mr. MEYER. I don't think it can be done on an entirely satisfactory scale until we have a peace resolution. That is a matter of international law. A finance corporation came to us in March to export some goods to Germany. We expressed ourselves as directors of the War Finance Corporation as willing to do the business, provided it was in accordance with the policy of the United States Government. Our loans would not have been to Germany; they would have been loans to American bankers or American exporters who had seen fit to arrange for the credit for their business.

Senator SWANSON. They were good men and absolutely responsible?

Mr. MEYER. Absolutely. One would not want to make better loans than were proposed to us. We left the responsibility for the matter to be decided as a matter of policy by the Treasury Department, as we naturally had to under the international situation, and we never received a decision on the point, because before we received a decision we were requested to suspend all operations, and naturally that died with it.

Senator CAPPER. What date was that?

Mr. MEYER. About the middle of March was when we presented the matter.

Senator NORRIS. That is, our Treasury Department asked you to suspend all operations?

Mr. MEYER. On May 10; that is, the Secretary of the Treasury requested the War Finance Corporation to suspend.

Senator NORRIS. Since that time you have done nothing?

Mr. MEYER. No new loans were made in connection with the exports, with the exception of those which were a matter of obligation at that time.

Senator NORRIS. Did that suggestion come from the corporation?

Mr. MEYER. No, sir; I opposed the request and gave reasons why I thought we should not suspend, and why, for instance, we should move low-grade cotton and copper where the mines were mining and storing up 50 per cent of their products. I am interested in that situation—in the copper situation—and wish to make that clear, as I always do when I discuss the copper industry. I am proud of having had something to do with the industry, in building it up. What I did was to tell the Secretary I thought there should be something done to ship the copper to the countries that needed it. I told him I would not vote on it or act on it, but even if I had an interest in the industry that should not be any reason for not discussing it. I want to mention that because I always mention it when I speak of copper, because I used to act as a banker in the development of the copper properties that furnished a necessary material that helped to win the war.

Senator HARRISON. Did the Secretary give any reason for his request to suspend business or for not answering on the policy toward business with Germany?

Mr. MEYER. No; only at that time it seemed there was a little disturbance in Cologne. But the disturbance blew over in a few days. The matter was not pressed. The idea was—in fact, I do not mind saying that the Secretary, I think, would not disagree that he does not conceive it to be proper for the United States Government to make advances to bankers to export to Germany while we are still at war.

Senator GORE. Let me ask you there: Under all the conditions, if it were not for the Secretary's objection, and you had the authority now that you had then, could you finance such a proposition to Germany?

Mr. MEYER. Absolutely, if there were no objection from the State Department; if it is not against the law of the United States Government.

Senator NORRIS. You would not need any law for that, would you?

Mr. MEYER. If it is legal for American business men to do business with Germany—and it seems to be, because they are doing it—if that is legal, why shouldn't it be proper for the War Finance Corporation to loan to Germany as well as to France or to any other country? I can not see any reason.

Senator NORRIS. The only reason you are not doing it is because of the action of the Secretary?

Mr. MEYER. I want it understood that I am entirely disconnected with the corporation. I resigned; there seemed to be nothing else for me to do.

Senator CAPPER. When did you resign?

Mr. MEYER. As of June 1, 1920.

Senator KENYON. Would not the trading with the enemy act prevent that?

Mr. MEYER. If trading with the enemy is wrong, it should be stopped. It can be done by license, Senator KELLOGG says. And then, I say, if this finance for exports is available, it should be available for anyone that gets a license.

Representative TINCHER. At the time you were asked to suspend, what funds did the board have available?

Mr. MEYER. A paid-in capital stock of $500,000,000, which was invested in Government bonds and Treasury certificates when it was not being otherwise needed in loans. We had engaged in loans at that time, I think, perhaps $120,000,000 to $140,000,000. I can not remember the figure on that date.

Representative TINCHER. Leaving $350,000,000 available.

Mr. MEYER. We had on April 1, 1919, made an issue of two hundred millions of our own bonds, sold them to investors, sold them easily, and when we wanted to pay them back we had difficulty in getting them back. I would like to divert just at this point a minute because the Secretary points out that the War Finance Corporation selling bonds would be a very disastrous thing because it would compete with Treasury certificates. It is a peculiar fact, but we could not get our bonds back at the time when people were not anxious to buy Treasury securities, and long after they were paid off and interest stopped running there were a few million held. But the War Finance Corporation can sell two hundred and fifty to five hundred million of 6 per cent notes slightly under par, if they allow a selling commission to bankers and brokers, as they should.

Senator GORE. Just what date did the War Finance Corporation cease to function?

Mr. MEYER. It stopped making new advances to foreign trade May 10; some business was in process by commitment from the corporation, and that was carried out, but no new business was entertained.

Senator GORE. Could the corporation function now without a new law or resolution?

Mr. MEYER. If the Secretary of the Treasury wanted to, it could in 10 seconds.

Senator GORE. Is that so?

Mr. MEYER. Absolutely. I can give you a copy of the act here and can read you the words. It says one year after the proclamation of peace by the President. Section 21 provided that "notwithstanding the limitation of section 1 the advances provided by this section may be made until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government as fixed by proclamation of the President."

That is the time limit. As long as you are bringing up that point, I would like to say that on May 10, in connection with the Secretary's announcement, he intimated that this May 10 period was way beyond the intention of Congress. Let me analyze that. This act was passed March 3, 1919. The President was here, as you remember. He was about to return to Paris. It was quite clear that he could not return for some weeks and that after his return if the treaty went through with all possible dispatch that could possibly have been expected, some time must elapse, bringing it along pretty well into the autumn, so that the year from the proclamation of peace by the President under the most optimistic expectations would not have been May 10, 1920. It might have been before this date, but, of course, gentlemen, when Congress passed an act because it saw certain conditions interfering with our economic relations with Europe, and with the Central Powers, as well as the rest of Europe, when it provided a special board with special resources of unusual character to assist the situation which might be distressing to our people, and made the time one year after the proclamation of peace, they did not have the date in mind; it was a condition that they had in mind, the restoration of our economic relations.

Now, that date for making peace has been deferred far beyond the time contemplated by Congress. Probably, but with the deferring of the date has gone the deferring of the conditions, and the conditions were what Congress must have had in mind, as I should judge.

Of course, the Secretary of the Treasury has interpreted the act to an unusual degree. I wrote this law, and when I say this, I say it, gentlemen, please understand, with no spirit of egotism, but that law was written by my direction. I named every word in it, and I did it to finance American business, to give credit to foreign buyers, taking the Government out of direct loans to foreign Governments.

So that it was a bridge to get over the interval between the direct loans of this Government to foreign Governments to the time when American business men and bankers would undertake the burden of our international economic relations, to a time that was supposed to be a date after peace was made.

Senator GORE. While we were waiting for the parachute to come down?

Mr. MEYER. Exactly. The Secretary interprets the intent of Congress. The intent of Congress is only expressed in the words of the law and the testimony of those who testified before the committee and any discussion in the Congress. The Secretary, after saying what he said about the matter, stated that Mr. Meyer would explain. I think Mr. Rathbone said a few words, and possibly Mr. Leffingwell, but I was the only witness that went into the detail of that authorization which the Senate and the House of Representatives passed with an appreciation of the conditions that might confront us.

Senator HARRISON. Did you appear before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, with Secretary McAdoo?

Mr. MEYER. Secretary McAdoo had nothing to do with this, because he was then no longer Secretary. He appeared regarding the original act; I did not appear. I had nothing to do with the writing of the original act, but only with the writing of the amendment to finance foreign trade. There was no reference to this in the original act.

Mr. RIDDICK. Do you suggest any amendment to this in the interest of agricultural interests?

Mr. MEYER. I would like to speak about the statement of the gentleman who referred to what I said at Kansas City. I do not believe he understood me at Kansas City. I did not mislead anybody to think that the War Finance Corporation would try to cure the world or undo the destruction of war, but it can most effectively help conditions throughout the country, including agricultural conditions. The expression of a favorable attitude on the part of the Government would in itself be a tremendous factor in restoring the confidence of the people, which is badly shaken.

Mr. TINCHER. The announcement of the intention to purchase wheat did more for the wheat market than the mere purchase of $11,000,000 worth of wheat.

Mr. MEYER. I do not think at that time it was a vital factor, because the market was fair at the time. I do not remember what the price of wheat was. We never went into the details of the prices and did not start in to regulate the business of the country through this agency. I do not understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has any authority under the law to constitute himself a regulator of prices downward or upward, although I observe he has a great deal to say on the subject. I say this with all due respect to his position. We are all in favor of deflation in an orderly way, but prices may be just as much too low as they are at other times too high.

Senator NORRIS. I think it would be a practical thing, if this War Finance Board were operating now, to look into the conditions in Germany.

Mr. MEYER. To see what business would result?

Senator NORRIS. Are the conditions there now so that a loan could be financed that would enable them to purchase from us? Would you have any funds to use?

Mr. MEYER. There is $370,000,000 on deposit in the Treasury for the War Finance Corporation. I would not like to see that money used. The Secretary has used it already for general purposes. He canceled the War Finance Corporation's holdings of Treasury certificates. He used them to reduce the debt (which is not much of a way to reduce the debt). Provided the corporation was restored, I see no reason not to believe that with its power and an expression of attitude by the Treasury Department that it is entirely receptive to applications to finance exports for Germany or Austria or Czechoslovakia; I see no reason not to believe that a great deal of perfectly safe, sound business will not be presented to the corporation that can not now be financed.

Senator NORRIS. The only thing needed to put that in operation would be the action of the Secretary of the Treasury himself, would it not?

Mr. MEYER. Absolutely.

Mr. LAZARO. From what I can understand, then, your remedy is that the Secretary shall take action immediately, and that is the only remedy that will afford the producers relief for their products sold at these low prices?

Mr. MEYER. I will agree to discuss this proposition of the War Finance Corporation, or the whole situation, but I had confined myself to the War Finance Corporation up to the present.

Senator NORRIS. I do not like to have the witness diverted. He has not claimed that was the only remedy.

Mr. LAZARO. I was asking whether he considered that the only remedy.

Mr. MEYER. I say it would be one remedy.

Mr. LAZARO. Can you think of any other remedy?

Mr. MEYER. I prefer to answer that question later, if I may. The business we were considering at the time we suspended operation amounted to $100,000,000. Naturally we wanted to issue the corporation's bonds to raise the money, but there was no occasion to do it on account of suspension. For instance, a loan of $8,000,000 was made to a group of banks in various parts in the United States for the purpose of financing cotton exports and the banks in turn had the security of a syndicate of all the important spinners of Czechoslovakia, guaranteed by the seven largest banks in Czechoslovakia, and the whole indebtedness, in turn, was guaranteed by the Government of Czechoslovakia.

Under more or less similar arrangements the War Finance Corporation financed the export of $12,000,000 of wheat to Belgium and $5,000,000 of condensed milk to various countries in Europe. At the time that it was requested by the Secretary to suspend financing exports it had applications involving the export of $17,500,000 of copper; $2,200,000 fabricated steel to Italy; $5,000,000 "Black Patch" tobacco from Tennessee and Kentucky; $4,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a large southern exporter; $25,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a group of southern bankers; $3,000,000 for cotton to Italy by a group of bankers; $9,000,000 by a group of bankers for export of cotton to Italy; $24,000,000 for the export of cotton by a syndicate of banks headed by one of the largest national banks in the United States; $2,400,000 by a group of bankers for coal to Italy; $4,000,000 by a group of bankers for cotton to Italy; $4,000,000 for ships to be bought or constructed in this country for Italy; in all, $100,000,000 in applications promising practical results with adequate security, according to the opinion of the directors of the War Finance Corporation.

These are not repetitions; they are separate applications, although they sound in some cases the same. In addition to these definite propositions, various other negotiations were under way for further extensive loans which no doubt would have materialized in large financing of exports of various kinds of American products.

Senator FRANCE. Were there any applications for credits for trade with Russia?

Mr. MEYER. No; I do not believe there was a concrete proposition; there had been discussion about it, but nobody ever came with a definite proposition.

Senator FRANCE. The Russians had cash?

Mr. MEYER. They had cash that was taken at Omsk, the title of which was somewhat in doubt.

The Secretary was able to enforce his views. We could not issue any bonds without his approval, because under the law he has the duty to approve the terms and prices as to the issuance of bonds. Of course, it is impractical to operate that board without it being harmonious. I do not believe we ever had a dissenting vote on any proposition, because whenever anybody dissented it was discussed and the views were reconciled, so practically every action was unanimous.

Senator KENYON. How would you get along if the board was revived?

Mr. MEYER. That is a question which this committee has to consider. I think you ought to have a frank talk with the Secretary about it and tell him how you feel, and ask him whether or not his feelings are so strong that if Congress acted in a way to renew the functions of this corporation to make it mandatory, or merely make it clear what was intended and desired, whether or not he would be able to cooperate and in all good faith carry out the intention of Congress. I believe the Secretary of the Treasury is a loyal officer of the Government, and I can not imagine he would give you any answer except that he would cooperate. He might not feel like being responsible, and tell you that; I do not know. He is strongly opposed to it.

Mr. TINCHER. When they stopped were the employees let out?

Mr. MEYER. Not all; there are $130,000,000 assets that have to be cared for.

Senator FRANCE. For the sake of the record, and it is important even in the days of war to keep some semblance of the truth in our public records, it should be said that the $20,000,000 of gold which were offered to the merchants of this country for goods which were to be shipped to Russia was gold in the hands of representatives of the great cooperative societies of Russia made up of the Russian peasants. That gold had been earned by those Russian peasants with the sweat of their brow from the soil of Russia and had not been taken by the Bolsheviki or anybody else at Omsk or any other place. It was money earned by the Russian farmers, just as our farmers earn it, and it was paid into the treasuries of their cooperative societies. As soon as it was refused in this country it was immediately transmitted to London, and London filled their orders.

Mr. MEYER. I did not have any reference to that particular gold. The gold that I heard of was some that was shipped over and back again. That is the only gold that I ever heard of.

Senator FRANCE. I believe my information is correct.

Mr. MEYER. As to that gold I have no doubt; but there was some gold shipped over and shipped back again, but we had no concrete proposition before us at any time.

Senator KENYON. What rate of interest did you say these bonds would have to bear to sell at par?

Mr. MEYER. The War Finance Corporation bonds?

Senator KENYON. Suppose this is revived and they issue these bonds?

Mr. MEYER. I think that under present conditions the bonds would have to be at 6 per cent, and perhaps some discount in the selling price. It would depend upon the length of the bonds. Two months ago I investigated the subject and the bankers thought a two-year 6 per cent bond might be sold at 99¾. Some thought a quarter per cent ought to be allowed to carry the expenses of sale and distribution.

The cotton applications before us were larger than any other, but that is very natural, because cotton is the principal item of export in this country, and in presenting the matter to the Senate committee I called attention to the importance of the cotton situation to the whole country as a national proposition and not purely a local southern proposition. I stated, after giving an analysis of 83 per cent of all our exports before the war:

"I believe that cotton is normally the largest single item of our exports in dollar value, but the benefit arising from the stimulation of the cotton export business is reflected in general business. Taking cotton as a foremost example, we will all recall that when cotton ceased to be exported the price fell, all of the industries which had been sellers in the South found their business cut off; there was no sale for automobiles in the winter of 1914 in the southern territory. Pianos, shoes, furniture, all products of the North, ceased to be marketable in the South because cotton could not be sold and because prices declined." There was no shipping of machinery from the North to the South in the winter of 1914, as the result of the cotton situation following the declaration of war.

I repeat this because of the importance that cotton is to the national economic situation, and it can not be overestimated. Industries that do not know they depend on cotton are intimately related to it.

Senator FRANCE. I was not combating anything you said in your general statement. As bearing out what Mr. Meyer has said, it might be interesting at this point to include these figures in the record of the portion Poland needs to-day—300,000 tons of flour, 350,000 bales of cotton, $15,000,000 worth of fertilizer and agricultural implements, and other items. Those are desperate and the immediate needs.

Senator NORRIS. Those exact figures were given to me, in corroboration of what you say, by the representative of the Polish Government, and he said that they will need those articles of food commencing about the middle of January, and that they can not live any longer unless they get something like that.

I wanted to ask you another question. I have been wondering if any of these organizations of producers of cotton, corn, or wheat, or live stock were willing to assume the risk of a sale of their product to purchasers in foreign countries, whether this board, through its knowledge of conditions, etc., would be able to lend them their material assistance, even though they did not become bound financially?

Mr. MEYER. Of course, you must simplify the machinery, because you can not lend to the farmer individually. Those organizations are not incorporated, and I should think that the cooperation of the banks, of the banking units in the country interested, in the South in cotton, and in the grain district the local banks that are now in touch with the central banks and the Federal Reserve System could undertake a great deal of that business. For instance, in New Orleans they formed a cotton export corporation, which has been created under the Edge law. At the time the Edge law was passed great hopes were held out for export financing in that direction. They formed and expected to cooperate with the War Finance Corporation. The War Finance Corporation was suspended and they have done nothing. Mr. Hecht, president of a national bank in New Orleans, said that with a $6,000,000 cotton corporation, even with $6,000,000 paid in, they would be able to do relatively little in a big situation, such as the cotton situation, without the cooperation of the War Finance Corporation. With the cooperation of the War Finance Corporation not only the banks of the big centers but the banks of the entire country and of the smaller places would cooperate, and it would involve very little expense.

In Chicago they are going about preparing for a $100,000,000 bank. Mr. McHugh recommended the formation of that bank, and I hope a number of banks will result from the formation of that one. Mr. McHugh says it is most desirable that the War Finance Corporation should function, because he realizes that he will be able to make their corporation very much more useful in this agricultural situation.

Senator KENYON. Is anybody opposed to reviving the War Finance Board except the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. MEYER. Yes. I know two men in the United States—one a banker in New York and the other in St. Louis. The New York banker says that the Government should stay out of the banking business, although his closest associate, who has studied the problem a great deal, disagrees with him. The man in St. Louis says the reason it should not be revived is because no one should embarrass the administration.

Senator KENYON. Was that before election?

Mr. MEYER. Yes; it was.

Mr. RIDDICK. I understand that if the War Finance Corporation should be revived the Secretary of the Treasury would have discretion as to approval.

Mr. MEYER. It seems to me he should have that discretion.

Mr. RIDDICK. Would not some of the big corporations get the money instead of the agricultural interests in the event the War Finance Corporation should be revived?

Mr. MEYER. I do not believe there is any danger of that. Some manufacturing corporations came first, and therefore they appear to be a little larger proportionately than you might expect, because our real production in the mass is agriculture. But it was because the machinery for the agricultural interests was slower in coming into motion, and out of the one hundred million that we had definitely proposed on May 10, 1920, I think seventy-five million was for agricultural products.

Senator KENYON. What about the question that the gentleman from Nebraska raised, that the product from the farm would pass in a short time into the hands of private parties and be exploited by them, and it would be of no assistance to the farmer?

Mr. MEYER. I want to say this, that even if you find no way of reaching him directly, the farmer would be getting the benefit of the War Finance Corporation.

Senator KENYON. How long would it take to actually put this into operation if we started this week?

Mr. MEYER. The Secretary could do it in 10 seconds, but I can not tell you how long it will take Congress to act nor in what way they will act.

Senator KENYON. Nobody can do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEYER. One of the Senators was good enough to send a gentleman to see me regarding Poland, and he told me that the locomotives, whose financing for export that the Secretary criticized, saved the rolling stock from the Bolsheviki and enabled the Poles to get it out of the invaded territory. I think that gentleman was sent to me by Senator CURTIS.

This question is going to be raised, and I would like to tell you about it—the question of inflation and deflation. I think that orderly deflation consists in helping the orderly marketing of products. In 1914 the cotton producer was compelled to sell at a low price, and the speculator who had the money picked it up and kept it until there was a demand, and without any intention to do it, I am quite sure the Secretary in his policy is bringing about that situation now. Who can buy except the consumers and the people who are speculating? There is one seller, and that is the producer, and the speculator is going to take the stuff that is being forced on the market at an inordinately low price.

Mr. SUMNERS. If you find the corporation can not handle all the business of the farmers who already own these commodities and whose financial responsibility is not an element in the situation, should desire to have the good offices of this organization to help them find a market for their output, and themselves carry the debt, would you people under your present organization, or under a reasonable modification of your organization, be able to render a service along that line?

Mr. MEYER. That is a very interesting question, because I can recall to Senator WADSWORTH a very interesting case bearing directly upon that subject. You remember, Senator WADSWORTH, that you brought to my attention the situation of the canners in New York?

Senator WADSWORTH. I do, very well.

Mr. MEYER. The canners came down to Senator WADSWORTH and he sent them to us. Five million dollars had to be raised immediately or the tomatoes and beans and fruits and vegetables grown in unusual quantity and at unusual cost in the autumn of 1918 in New York State would be lost unless means were found to finance the canners. They were small people, but they needed a great deal of money for their business under those conditions, because labor costs were high. They did not have banking facilities, and it looked as though the crops were going to be lost, as people are now losing their crops.

It appeared very difficult for us to operate quickly and efficiently at first blush, but we went up to Syracuse and Buffalo and, I think, Rochester, and investigated the situation on the spot. We worked out a scheme for a central warehousing company and got the canners to supply $100,000 to back the warehouse up. We instituted an extremely businesslike bonded-warehouse system. We made them insure their plants and have everything properly inspected. I went to Buffalo and went to one of the biggest bankers there and said, "We are troubled about the canners' situation. They need help. Local banks are too small to meet the situation. What will you do? Will you help them?"

He said, "Oh, no; we lost money on the canning business 13 years ago." I said, "Wait a minute," and I showed him the warehouse certificate and told him what we were doing. The bank said, "That is good enough for us." And we granted $210,000; and it was all paid back in a few months.

When the sugar situation arose out in Colorado, Gov. Harding happened to be out there and we asked him to see the banks and we fixed that up out there. Many other cases we had then in mind, and I wrote to the Secretary that this was the plan in connection with the War Finance Corporation, that we were to loan the money in the manner I have described and as we had on other loans. The plan was to get the people to create paper, to create securities which would become marketable, and we would make that marketable by saying, "We will take this loan," and we did this over and over with great success.

There was $20,000,000 required for a steel plant, and we said, "Yes; we will lend it to you, but go to the bankers and get what you can, and tell them that we will take what is left," and there was nothing left. In New York State they have a very good State law to-day. There the banks are not incorporated under the Edge law, for some reason their lawyers have in mind; I do not know what it is. If the War Finance Corporation could take over obligations to the extent they were not taken by the public generally, most all of it would go to the public. That is the reason why the corporations want it; they will do more business and they will do it at a more reasonable cost. They also want the cooperation of the War Finance Corporation in foreign-trade activities, because if they finance something with a Government institution the foreign borrower has a different attitude; they will exercise a greater degree of responsibility, and of course the War Finance Corporation would study the security thoroughly.

Mr. BYRNES. There are millions of bales of cotton in the South that are laying in the open, wasting. Suppose there are a million bales of cotton in the South where the people who own cotton may carry the loan or the obligation, if we could get a million bales of cotton to move out now and the men see things beginning to move in that country, it would save the whole situation.

Mr. MEYER. That ought to be done.

Mr. BYRNES. Could your organization help move that million bales if the people in the South would take care of them and carry the obligation for a year or a year and a half?

Mr. MEYER. That is one of the situations we had in mind when we stopped, that there was a lot of cotton that was not borrowed on or to such a small extent that the cotton could be shipped and it would have been cashed in and liquidated and out of the way and out of the warehouse. Of course, they really do not need any financial help. I suppose the Cotton Export Corporation that is now being formed would be competent to do that. Of course, they will want the best security they can get. Let me tell you what we did in Czechoslovakia in cotton financing. The exporter got a group of seven banks in Czechoslovakia. All the banks guaranteed the security of the spinners' syndicate, and then they took the Government guarantee because we wanted to get their approval, so that there would be no intervention against repayment in dollars when due.

Senator KENYON. And some of that has been paid back?

Mr. MEYER. Two million was paid back on November 1, and I think a million and a half the other day.

Senator GORE. The Cotton Export Corporation, is that the New Orleans corporation you mentioned?

Mr. MEYER. I do not know what the name of the new company is.

Mr. BYRNES. The American Cotton Export Corporation.

Senator GORE. What State is it organized in?

Mr. MEYER. They are canvassing every State in the South. It was organized in South Carolina. It is fully subscribed.

Senator WADSWORTH. In the case of the canners, as I remember, you devised a scheme by which the producers were organized?

Mr. MEYER. Yes.

Senator WADSWORTH. It is not impossible that you could go a step lower and reach the agricultural producer himself, and with the cooperation of the local banks help him devise a means of standardizing his security, as you did in the case of the securities of the organizations in the case of the canners?

Mr. MEYER. Everything is possible, Senator, to people who want to do something. There is not any use in talking about how to do a thing you do not want to do. The first thing you need is to want to do it. This has to be done by people who see the situation in its serious nature and in its grave proportion and believe in it and want to do it. If we had wanted to we could have said to the Senator when he sent these canners to us, "But they can not give us any security," and what you would have said, Senator WADSWORTH, probably, would have been, "That is true; it is too bad, but that is a hardship of war."

But we wanted to do it. The first step in doing a thing is to want to do it, and then you can find a way. Of course, if you do not want to do it it is easy to find reasons why it can not be done.

Senator WADSWORTH. "It never has been done?"

Mr. MEYER. Yes. I have with me, gentlemen, thinking some of you might like to look at them, copies of the act, and I will leave those here, together with some copies of a few remarks I made at the invitation of the committee of bankers on the subject of foreign trade finance, and to those who have time to consider it I will be glad to furnish copies.

Mr. CAMPBELL. May I ask a question with respect to a change of the name of the corporation in case additional legislation would be desirable? Would it be desirable to change the name to the Peace Corporation?

Mr. MEYER. I think if there is a will to do the work the name would not stop it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If there should be any objection to continuing the activities of the War Corporation, it might be called the restoration corporation or the peace corporation?

Mr. MEYER. Yes; I think if it had the name of the restoration corporation there might be less debate on the part of Congress, but that is a matter to which I attach little importance. Congress can make its intent known by resolution. The only amendment in the machinery that appears to me to be necessary, and could be very easily done, is an amendment by which the banks would be able to borrow from the corporation by simply an indorsement on an obligation instead of giving their own notes, because when they give their own obligations it means a lot of resolutions by the board of directors and considerable detail, and if they took it to the War Finance Corporation as they do their rediscounts to the Federal reserve banks it would be very much simpler, mechanically. Outside of that, I see very little to change as far as the mechanism of the law is concerned. If it was desired to declare the intent of Congress, it could do so by resolution. I merely offer these suggestions, having thought of them; you know very much better how to do it than I, or by changing the act so that it will state a definite date instead of one year after proclamation of peace by the President, say December 1, 1921, or such other date as the Congress might desire.

Senator NORRIS. There is one question that I would like to ask you particularly. Do you think that the law, with a Secretary of the Treasury who is not friendly to it, would be as effective as though some one were in charge of it who believed in it?

Mr. MEYER. Senator, I am not an expert on that subject. [Laughter.]

Senator NORRIS. I thought maybe you might suggest some amendment that would place it in the hands of somebody else to carry it out. You have got to leave a discretionary power.

Mr. MEYER. I am not afraid to answer any question on which I consider myself qualified by knowledge or experience, but I think perhaps that if Congress had a definite attitude on this question the best way to settle that would be in a friendly conference with the Secretary as to whether or not he desires to administer a law which he disapproves and which he might prefer not to administer; or he might very possibly and reasonably, and I can conceive that he may say that he is there to carry out the will of Congress, and do it in all good faith and do it quite as well or better than anybody else that could be chosen outside. If Congress decides that it wants the War Finance Corporation to function, I should like to see the most friendly relations between the Treasury Department and the corporation, and it is most important that it should be in harmonious administration and cooperation, because its scale of operation will be so important in the whole situation as to make it desirable to have the corporation function in entire harmony with Treasury policies.

Mr. RIDDICK. Do you not think the Secretary of the Treasury was influenced by the statements of public men that they believed that war-time legislation should be readjusted?

Mr. MEYER. I think that is not at all impossible. I may say about that that there was quite a little sentiment in more than one quarter at the time the Secretary acted in favor of closing down the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. Forgan, a member of the advisory board of the Federal Reserve System, chairman of the First National Bank of Chicago, when I asked him if he approved of the discontinuance of the corporation, said he had advised the Secretary in accordance with the Secretary's decision. I asked him, "How do you feel about it now?" and he said he did not have any feelings now. I said, "When you advised the Secretary, did you advise him for the reasons he made public, namely, that business was prosperous and unemployment negligible?" He said, "Yes." I asked him if business was prosperous now, and he said it was not, and he then admitted that he felt a change in conditions warranted a reversal in policy. The principal bankers of New Orleans declare that whatever the conditions may have been in May, the conditions now are such as to materially warrant a change in their opinion. In Omaha I consulted privately some of the principal bankers and others, and they were unanimously in favor of continuing the corporation, and in every city bankers testified before the committee, and those whom we had a chance to talk to were unanimously in favor of this action.

Mr. HEFLIN. What was the attitude of Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, toward closing it?

Mr. MEYER. I did not discuss it with him at the time.

Mr. HEFLIN. You know what his attitude was?

Mr. MEYER. I did not discuss it with him at the time, and I have not discussed it with him since. I understand that he is in accord with the Secretary, but I have no specific information; I do not know. He was a member of our board when the recommendation was made to the Secretary for this amendment by Congress. That was the only amendment to our power that we ever asked for from Congress, and we had a great many suggestions, and we objected to everything except this big situation in foreign trade, which warranted our consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Massachusetts makes the formal objection I should like to call his attention to what the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had in mind.

The War Finance Corporation under the law have authority, if they are rehabilitated, to do the very things that the Senator from Massachusetts suggests he would like to have them do. This joint resolution does not in any way curtail any of their authority. Under the law creating the corporation they have authority to take care of manufactured products the same as agricultural products. The committee, by reporting the joint resolution, simply called attention to the fact that they want—and that is the object of the joint resolution—not only to have the War Finance Corporation rehabilitated, but to have them take cognizance of the agricultural situation in the country. The joint resolution does not take away from the corporation the authority that they would have to handle manufactured products the same as they did handle them when they were in active operation. So that the real point is to get the War Finance Corporation rehabilitated, and they will then have all the authority that they ever had; and in this joint resolution, having rehabilitated them, we simply call attention to the awful agricultural situation.

I hope, therefore, that the Senator will not object.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to answer it if I can.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is it not true that the War Finance Corporation at the present time has appropriated a billion dollars of credit?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think so. The act provided for the appropriation of a billion dollars of credit.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And is it not also true that $80,000,000 of credit has been extended through the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not give the Senator the exact amount, but a great many millions.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Leaving about $900,000,000 of credit. Now, I should like to ask the Senator if it will not require another bond issue of nearly a billion dollars before the War Finance Corporation can get into action, and whether the Agricultural Committee has contemplated the further inflation of our bonded indebtedness by a billion dollars in putting this joint resolution through?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I shall be glad to answer the very proper question that the Senator has asked as best I can. The action desired at this time does not contemplate an appropriation. It is the opinion of the committee and of those who are actively behind the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation that one of the greatest influences that will be felt on the exportation of products to Europe will be the coordinating of corporations engaged in export, such as those organized under the Edge law, recently passed—the coordination and the assistance that they will have from this War Finance Corporation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. The evidence before the committee disclosed that in some of the great operations in which the War Finance Corporation participated they did not use any money whatever. The simple fact that the War Finance Corporation were behind the proposition, were giving their support to it, and sometimes promised to take the bonds that the private interests themselves issued, resulted in all of the bonds being subscribed by private parties, and private capital did the whole thing. Sometimes they took some of them. So that the managing director of the corporation, Mr. Meyer, was of the opinion in the hearing that it probably would not be necessary to have any appropriation; that if any bonds were issued they would sell their own bonds, as the law provides they shall do; that in most instances they would not have to dispose of any of them, because the private corporations and individuals engaged in the exportation of products would be able, if they knew that the War Finance Corporation was behind the proposition, to finance it themselves at very reasonable rates of interest.

I can not say what it may be necessary to do, but that is my judgment on the matter—that one of the greatest effects of it all is the moral effect it will have.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska—and he will recall the statement of Mr. Meyer on yesterday—that Mr. Meyer stated specifically that it was not the intention to ask for any further issuance of bonds, nor would it be necessary. If the Senator from New Jersey and others will read the statement which has been printed—I think it has been sent to nearly every Senator, but perhaps they have been too busy to read it—they will find in the statement of Mr. Meyer practically what I am trying to state, that it is not the intention to make any appropriation, nor will it be necessary to issue any bonds.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator where the money is coming from, then, to furnish these credits?

Mr. NORRIS. Why, it will come mostly from private parties.

Mr. GRONNA. It will come from private parties; and in the same statement Mr. Meyer gives the amount of money on hand which they have the authority to issue bonds for, if necessary, under the old act.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, if they did not have authority to get behind any exporting proposition there would not be the incentive on the part of the private parties to go into it. Mr. Meyer gave us a great many illustrations in the way of cases where private parties were interested in the exportation of products of great value, and they were unable to finance them until the War Finance Corporation got behind them, and in many instances the War Finance Corporation never did anything else except to get behind them. When the time came it was unnecessary to use a dollar from the War Finance Corporation's appropriation to have the matter go through.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Meyer's name has been mentioned once or twice in this discussion. I assume that there was other testimony than that of Mr. Meyer's at the hearings before the committee?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Is all the testimony available to the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. It is if it is printed. All the testimony was taken down by a stenographer.

Mr. THOMAS. I think we ought to have the benefit of the report of all the hearings.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the committee ceased taking evidence only yesterday, and, as a matter of fact, all the testimony may not be printed. I can not say whether any of it has been printed, but it is to be printed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to answer that question.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a subject of such tremendous importance and so far-reaching in its character that I think the Senate should have at its disposal the printed hearings.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator that that should be the case; but, on the other hand, we are confronted with the fact that time is of the very essence of this proposition.

Mr. THOMAS. We had better make haste slowly.

Mr. NORRIS. As fast as the hearings can be printed that will be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] that a few minutes ago there was unanimous consent given to print the statement made by Mr. Meyer before the committee on yesterday. It is to go into the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not content to base my action here upon the testimony of one man, if other hearings were had as well. I want both sides of this proposition.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I believe I have the floor for a moment. I am sure the committee can get out very speedily the other testimony if Senators want to see it.

What I wanted to say when I asked permission to interrupt the Senator from Nebraska a few minutes ago was that it was clearly presented that there was no purpose to issue any Government bonds, but that the War Finance Corporation in the past has financed its own paper, and can easily do so again.

Mr. McLEAN. I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if the Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the committee?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; he did.

Mr. McLEAN. Does he favor this proposition?

Mr. NORRIS. He does not. He is opposed to it.

Mr. McLEAN. Are his reasons printed?

Mr. NORRIS. They will be printed. Mr. President, I agree with Senators that this evidence should be printed. There has been no disposition on the part of the committee not to print it. But Senators know that when evidence is taken before a committee it is two or three days before the printing can take place. I presume that this testimony is being printed with all the expedition which takes place in any other similar case. It is an extraordinary proposition, I admit, to ask that the joint resolution shall be taken up perhaps before the hearings are printed, but we are presented, we think, with an extraordinary situation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I should like to direct attention to the fact that all the comments on the joint resolution have been confined to that feature of it which deals with the War Finance Corporation. There is another very much more serious aspect of the resolution, and that is its presupposition that the Federal Reserve Board has utterly neglected its duties, and substantially it is a direction to that board to change its policy altogether with reference to reserves. It proposes to put the country not upon a reserve banking system but upon an investment banking system. Therefore I think the Senate should give very serious consideration to the question before it is finally acted upon, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] suggests.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think it is perfectly obvious that the character of the joint resolution is of the most serious kind. I am not expressing any opposition to it. I realize the adversity in the great agricultural districts of the country, as I recognize it in New England, but after what has been said by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] it is perfectly clear that such a measure as this should not be pushed through under unanimous consent without an opportunity to see the testimony, and without Senators also having an opportunity to read over the act creating the War Finance Corporation, which carries with it a charge of $500,000,000 on the Treasury of the United States. I think the joint resolution ought to go over if for no other reason, and I make objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled that this is the first reading, and that it must lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. It goes over for a second reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes over for a second reading, when it will then go to the calendar, unless taken up by unanimous consent. That is all there is to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as this matter has been debated informally I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] a question with respect to it, if I may have his attention.

I am not sure that I heard accurately the colloquy between the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], but as I understood it, the Senator from Nebraska said it would not be necessary to have another bond issue, but that the War Finance Corporation would be able to finance its own operations. I have not seen the testimony and have had no opportunity to ascertain what method would be adopted by the War Finance Corporation in aiding the movement of crops and the marketing of them. Will the Senator suggest to the Senate what plans are in mind whereby we may aid the farming element under the joint resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Ohio I will say that this corporation, of course, will be engaged in exportation of products entirely. The difficulty which now interferes with the exportation of farm products, which are so much needed in Europe, is that the people who need them are not able to pay cash, and the people who have the products must have cash. Much of it is mortgaged, and can not be moved until it is paid for.

The War Finance Corporation, as I understand it, in their past operations have not been controlled by any fixed or settled rule. They take up the question of the exportation of a product and get in touch with the people who want to buy, and perhaps a corporation is organized. It is suggested that under the Edge law there would probably be a good many corporations organized, and that the War Finance Corporation would act in coordination with them. For instance, a Government would buy wheat or cotton, and they would guarantee a firm of bankers in a foreign country, and the corporation here that was going to sell would accept that guaranty, and they would probably also get a guaranty of the War Finance Corporation.

It might be that they would put up all the money; it might be that they would put up a part of it; and it might be, as Mr. Meyer said, in case they would put up none, the fact that they were willing to guarantee it would result in a guaranty by exporters and bankers and corporations of this country, who would furnish their own money to pay for the products that would be sold abroad on time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa calls for the regular order. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I submit the following amendment intended to be proposed by me to the joint resolution reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

It is to add, after the last paragraph of the joint resolution, the following:

That factors' paper with cotton or other stable agricultural products as collateral shall be eligible for rediscount in Federal reserve banks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table, and be printed.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. Sharkey, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, transmitted to the Senate sundry messages in writing; and also announced that the President had, June 14, 1920, approved bills of the following numbers and titles:

S. 547. An act authorizing the enlistment of non-English-speaking citizens and aliens; and

S. 4167. An act to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge, approaches, and extensions or additions thereto, by the city of St. Louis, within the States of Illinois and Missouri.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the message, as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: When I addressed myself to performing the duty laid upon the President by the Constitution to present to you an annual report on the state of the Union, I found my thought dominated by an immortal sentence of Abraham Lincoln's,

"Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us dare to do our duty as we understand it,"— a sentence immortal because it embodies in a form of utter simplicity and purity the essential faith of the nation, the faith in which it was conceived and the faith in which it has grown to glory and power. With that faith and the birth of a nation founded upon it came the hope into the world that a new order would prevail throughout the affairs of mankind, an order in which reason and right would take precedence of covetousness and force, and I believe that I express the wish and purpose of every thoughtful American when I say that this sentence marks for us in the plainest manner the part we should play alike in the arrangement of our domestic affairs and in our exercise of influence upon the affairs of the world. By this faith, and by this faith alone, can the world be lifted out of its present confusion and despair. It was this faith which prevailed over the wicked force of Germany. You will remember that the beginning of the end of the war came when the German people found themselves face to face with the conscience of the world and realized that right was everywhere arrayed against the wrong that their government was attempting to perpetrate. I think, therefore, that it is true to say that this was the faith which won the war. Certainly this is the faith with which our gallant men went into the field and out upon the seas to make sure of victory.

This is the mission upon which democracy came into the world. Democracy is an assertion of the right of the individual to live and to be treated justly as against any attempt on the part of any combination of individuals to make laws which will overburden him or which will destroy his equality among his fellows in the matter of right or privilege, and I think we all realize that the day has come when democracy is being put upon its final test. The old world is just now suffering from a wanton rejection of the principle of democracy and a substitution of the principle of autocracy as asserted in the name but without the authority and sanction of the multitude. This is the time of all others when democracy should prove its purity and its spiritual power to prevail. It is surely the manifest destiny of the United States to lead in the attempt to make this spirit prevail.

There are two ways in which the United States can assist to accomplish this great object: First, by offering the example within her own borders of the will and power of democracy to make and enforce laws which are unquestionably just and which are equal in their administration,—laws which secure its full right to labor and yet at the same time safeguard the integrity of property, and particularly of that property which is devoted to the development of industry and the increase of the necessary wealth of the world. Second, by standing for right and justice as towards individual nations. The law of democracy is for the protection of the weak, and the influence of every democracy in the world should be for the protection of the weak nation, the nation which is struggling towards its right and towards its proper recognition and privilege in the family of nations. The United States cannot refuse this rôle of champion without putting the stigma of rejection upon the great and devoted men who brought its government into existence and established it in the face of almost universal opposition and intrigue, even in the face of wanton force, as, for example, against the Orders in Council of Great Britain and the arbitrary Napoleonic Decrees which involved us in what we know as the War of 1812. I urge you to consider that the display of an immediate disposition on the part of the Congress to remedy any injustices or evils that may have shown themselves in our own national life will afford the most effectual offset to the forces of chaos and tyranny which are playing so disastrous a part in the fortunes of the free peoples of more than one part of the world. The United States is of necessity the sample democracy of the world, and the triumph of democracy depends upon its success.

Recovery from the disturbing and sometimes disastrous effects of the late war has been exceedingly slow on the other side of the water and has given promise, I venture to say, of early completion only in our own fortunate country; but even with us the recovery halts and is impeded at times and there are immediately serviceable acts of legislation which it seems to me we ought to attempt, to assist that recovery and prove the indestructible recuperative force of a great government of the people. One of these is to prove that a great democracy can keep house as successfully and in as businesslike a fashion as any other government. It seems to me that the first step towards proving this is to supply ourselves with a systematic method of handling our estimates and expenditures and bringing them to the point where they will not be an unnecessary strain upon our income or necessitate unreasonable taxation, in other words, a workable budget system, and I respectfully suggest that two elements are essential to such a system; namely, not only that the proposal of appropriations should be in the hands of a single body, such as a single appropriations committee in each house of the Congress, but also that this body should be brought into such cooperation with the departments of the Government and with the Treasury of the United States as would enable it to act upon a complete conspectus of the needs of the Government and the resources from which it must draw its income. I reluctantly vetoed the Budget Bill passed by the last session of the Congress because of a Constitutional objection. The house of Representatives subsequently modified the Bill in order to meet this objection. In the revised form I believe that the Bill, coupled with action already taken by the Congress to revise its rules and procedure, furnishes the foundations for an effective national budget system. I earnestly hope, therefore, that one of the first steps taken by the present session of the Congress will be to pass the Budget Bill.

The nation's finances have shown marked improvement during the past year. The total ordinary receipts of $6,694,000,000 for the fiscal year 1920 exceeded those for 1919 by $1,542,000,000, while the total net ordinary expenditures decreased from $18,514,000,000 to $6,403,000,000. The gross public debt, which reached its highest point on 31 August, 1919, when it was $26,596,000,000, had dropped on 30 November, 1920, to $24,175,000,000. There has also been a marked decrease in holdings of government war securities by the banking institutions of the country, as well as in the amount of bills held by the Federal Reserve Banks secured by government war obligations. This fortunate result has relieved the banks and left them freer to finance the needs of agriculture, industry and commerce. It has been due in large part to the reduction of the public debt, especially of the floating debt, but more particularly to the improved distribution of government securities among permanent investors. The cessation of the Government's borrowings except through short-term certificates of indebtedness has been a matter of great consequence to the people of the country at large, as well as to the holders of Liberty bonds and Victory notes, and has had an important bearing on the matter of effective credit control. The year has been characterized by the progressive withdrawal of the Treasury from the domestic credit market and from a position of dominant influence in that market. The future course will necessarily depend upon the extent to which economies are practiced and upon the burdens placed upon the Treasury, as well as upon industrial developments and the maintenance of tax receipts at a sufficiently high level.

The fundamental fact which at present dominates the Government's financial situation is that seven and a half billions of its war indebtedness mature within the next two and a half years. Of this amount, two and a half billions are floating debt and five billions Victory notes and War Savings certificates. The fiscal programme of the Government must be determined with reference to these maturities. Sound policy demands that government expenditures be reduced to the lowest amount which will permit the various services to operate efficiently and that government receipts from taxes and salvage be maintained sufficiently high to provide for current requirements, including interest and sinking fund charges on the public debt, and at the same time retire the floating debt and part of the Victory loan before maturity. With rigid economy, vigorous salvage operations and adequate revenues from taxation, a surplus of current receipts over current expenditures can be realized and should be applied to the floating debt. All branches of the Government should cooperate to see that this programme is realized.

I cannot overemphasize the necessity of economy in government appropriations and expenditures and the avoidance by the Congress of practices which take money from the Treasury by indefinite or revolving fund appropriations. The estimates for the present year show that over a billion dollars of expenditures were authorized by the last Congress in addition to the amounts shown in the usual compiled statements of appropriations. This strikingly illustrates the importance of making direct and specific appropriations. The relation between the current receipts and current expenditures of the Government during the present fiscal year, as well as during the last half of the last fiscal year, has been disturbed by the extraordinary burdens thrown upon the Treasury by the Transportation Act, in connection with the return of the railroads to private control. Over $600,000,000 has already been paid to the railroads under this Act,—$350,000,000 during the present fiscal year; and it is estimated that further payments aggregating possibly $650,000,000 must still be made to the railroads during the current year. It is obvious that these large payments have already seriously limited the Government's progress in retiring the floating debt.

Closely connected with this, it seems to me, is the necessity for an immediate consideration of the revision of our tax laws. Simplification of the income and profits taxes has become an immediate necessity. These taxes performed an indispensable service during the war. The need for their simplification, however, is very great, in order to save the taxpayer inconvenience and expense and in order to make his liability more certain and definite. Other and more detailed recommendations with regard to taxes will no doubt be laid before you by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

It is my privilege to draw to the attention of Congress for very sympathetic consideration the problem of providing adequate facilities for the care and treatment of former members of the military and naval forces who are sick or disabled as the result of their participation in the war. These heroic men can never be paid in money for the service they patriotically rendered the nation. Their reward will lie rather in realization of the fact that they vindicated the rights of their country and aided in safeguarding civilization. The nation's gratitude must be effectively revealed to them by the most ample provision for their medical care and treatment as well as for their vocational training and placement. The time has come when a more complete programme can be formulated and more satisfactorily administered for their treatment and training, and I earnestly urge that the Congress give the matter its early consideration. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Board for Vocational Education will outline in their annual reports proposals covering medical care and rehabilitation which I am sure will engage your earnest study and command your most generous support.

Permit me to emphasize once more the need for action upon certain matters upon which I dwelt at some length in my message to the Second Session of the Sixty-sixth Congress: the necessity, for example, of encouraging the manufacture of dyestuffs and related chemicals; the importance of doing everything possible to promote agricultural production along economic lines, to improve agricultural marketing and to make rural life more attractive and healthful; the need for a law regulating cold storage in such a way as to limit the time during which goods may be kept in storage, prescribing the method of disposing of them if kept beyond the permitted period, and requiring goods released from storage in all cases to bear the date of their receipt. It would also be most serviceable if it were provided that all goods released from cold storage for interstate shipment should have plainly marked upon each package the selling or market price at which they went into storage, in order that the purchaser might be able to learn what profits stood between him and the producer or the wholesale dealer. Indeed, it would be very serviceable to the public if all goods destined for interstate commerce were made to carry upon every packing case whose form made it possible a plain statement of the price at which they left the hands of the producer. I respectfully call your attention, also, to the recommendations of the message referred to with regard to a federal license for all corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

In brief, the immediate legislative need of the time is the removal of all obstacles to the realization of the best ambitions of our people in their several classes of employment and the strengthening of all instrumentalities by which difficulties are to be met and removed and justice dealt out, whether by law or by some form of mediation and conciliation. I do not feel it to be my privilege at present to suggest the detailed and particular methods by which these objects may be attained, but I have faith that the inquiries of your several committees will discover the way and the method.

In response to what I believe to be the impulse of sympathy and opinion throughout the United States, I earnestly suggest that the Congress authorize the Treasury of the United States to make to the struggling Government of Armenia such a loan as was made to several of the Allied Governments during the war; and I would also suggest that it would be desirable to provide in the legislation itself that the expenditure of the money thus loaned should be under the supervision of a commission, or at least a commissioner, from the United States, in order that revolutionary tendencies within Armenia itself might not be afforded by the loan a further tempting opportunity.

Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of the Congress in their behalf, and have thus fulfilled the condition set by the Congress as precedent to a consideration of granting independence to the Islands. I respectfully submit that this condition precedent having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of those Islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet.

I have not so much laid before you a series of recommendations, gentlemen, as sought to utter a confession of faith, of the faith in which I was bred and which it is my solemn purpose to stand by until my last fighting day. I believe this to be the faith of America, the faith of the future, and of all the victories which await national action in the days to come, whether in America or elsewhere.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message will lie on the table and be printed.

PRICE OF WHEAT (H. DOC. NO. 904).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1919, entitled "An act to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder," I transmit herewith report of the proceedings had by the Department of Agriculture under the authority of said act.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1915, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, I transmit herewith the sixth annual report of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920.

The attention of the Congress is invited to the recommendation of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for the establishment of a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce for the regulation and encouragement of commercial aviation. The national aviation policy as formulated by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and the constructive recommendations therein set forth for the consideration of the Congress have the hearty approval of the departments concerned as well as myself.

A bill (S. 4552) granting certain lands to the State of Washington for the use of the State University, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4553) to amend section 6 of an act approved January 17, 1914, entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4554) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Federal Power Commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation, the development of water power, the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4555) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

A bill (S. 4556) to provide revenue for the Government and to stabilize the live-stock industry; and

A bill (S. 4557) to provide revenue and to maintain the wool-producing and manufacturing industries of the United States in a condition of preparedness for national requirements; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 4558) for the consolidation of forest lands in the Carson National Forest, N. Mex., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 4559) to amend section 13 of an act known as the Federal reserve act, approved December 23, 1913, as amended; and

A bill (S. 4560) to limit rate of interest chargeable to Federal reserve banks to 5 per cent per annum; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4561) providing for the levying, collection, and payment of taxes upon contracts for the future delivery of grain, grain products, and cotton, and options for such contracts; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 218) requesting the United States Tariff Commission to investigate the subject of tariffs imposing duties on importations of farm products from foreign countries, including the subject of reciprocity with Canada and other countries, and to submit a report to Congress; to the Committee on Finance.

DEPUTY MARSHALS FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BALL submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31) which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That section 188 of the Code of the District of Columbia, in so far as it relates to the compensation to be received by the deputy United States marshals in and for the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, repealed. That this act take effect and be in force from and after the date of the passage.

COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENTAL ACTIVITIES.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee of the House and Senate, to be composed of five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Vice President, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof, be, and the same is hereby, created and authorized and directed to investigate the various activities of the several departments and agencies of the Government and submit reports to Congress from time to time recommending the reorganization of the various departments and agencies and the placing under one department or agency the various activities of the Government relating to the same or correlated subject matter, with a view to doing away with duplication in Government work and promoting efficiency and economy in the Government service. The committee shall submit a final report to each House of Congress on or before the first Monday of December, 1923, unless further time be given by a resolution of Congress. Said committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and the House of Representatives and during any recess of the House of Representatives or the Senate or of Congress; to employ experts, clerks, stenographers, and such other assistants as may be necessary, such experts, clerks, stenographers, and assistants to be paid such compensation as said joint committee shall deem just and reasonable; to send for persons and papers and to issue subpœnas to secure their attendance and production; and to administer oaths and do whatever may be necessary to secure the information desired, and the expenses of such committee shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

REORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. KNOX (for Mr. McCORMICK) submitted a resolution (S. Res. 393), which was referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That there be appointed a special committee of the Senate to be composed of 10 Members, 6 to be chosen from the majority party and 4 from the minority party, to consider measures for the reorganization of the executive departments and the creation of a department of public works and a department of public welfare.

ENFORCEMENT OF IMMIGRATION LAWS.

Mr. KING submitted a resolution (S. Res. 394), which was referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of Labor is directed to report to the Senate particulars as to the expenditure of the appropriation in the deficiency appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920 of $750,000, and in the deficiency appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 of $300,000, for the enforcement of the law against alien anarchists; and of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1920 of $100,000 and for the fiscal year 1921 of $100,000 for the deportation of aliens; and of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1921 of $2,600,000 for the enforcement of the immigration laws, including the names of all persons employed and paid out of such appropriations, or any of them, and the particular functions and duties performed and services rendered severally by such persons, and what portions, if any, of such appropriations remain unexpended at this date.

ADDITIONAL SENATE PAGES.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 391), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to employ five additional pages for the Senate Chamber at $3 per day each during the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in March last I offered a resolution asking for certain information from the Secretary of Agriculture. Tardily the Secretary has responded to the resolution. I do not think that the information furnished quite adequately answers the demands of the resolution; but, be that as it may, I ask that the report transmitted by the Secretary of Agriculture in response to the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I think it will enable that committee to understand a little more fully the character of the service rendered by the department, and the number of employees, and to that extent aid in the preparation of the appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GOVERNMENT OF HAWAII.

Mr. NEW. On May 28 the bill (H. R. 13500) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended, to establish an Hawaiian homes commission, and for other purposes, was reported to the Senate by the Committee on Territories, and is now on the calendar. Since that report was made a delegation from Hawaii has come to Washington and its members are now here asking for a hearing on the bill. I think it is proper that such a hearing be granted; and, in order that it may be granted, I move that the bill to which I have referred be recommitted to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDRESS BY WADE H. ELLIS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have before me a copy of an address delivered by Hon. Wade H. Ellis before the Order of Washington, in the city of Washington, on December 4, 1920, on the subject of "Radicalism and free speech." Mr. Ellis was formerly attorney general of Ohio, and during the administration of President Taft was Assistant Attorney General of the United States. The address referred to discusses this subject with special reference to present legislation and also with special reference to the immigration problem. I ask that it may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask if, under the ordinary procedure, such a request should not be referred to the Committee on Printing?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I found great difficulty in hearing the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if that is the procedure, I have no objection to the matter being referred to the committee. I think it will be found to be an address that will be well worthy of the consideration of Senators.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that it go to the Committee on Printing and take the usual course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Ohio will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Committee on Privileges and Elections were instructed under Senate resolution 357 to investigate certain campaign expenditures. That resolution was enlarged by Senate resolution 383, and under that resolution the committee were instructed to report to the Senate not later than the first Monday in December, 1920.

It has been impossible for the committee to complete their work and make their report to the Senate. I am instructed by the subcommittee—and I do so with the desire of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections—to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the subcommittee may have the time for making this report extended—the report, however, to be filed during the present session of the Congress—and that the authority conferred under Senate resolution 383 be extended likewise until the time the report is filed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. As a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and for information, I inquire of the Senator whether it is the purpose of the subcommittee to take additional testimony?

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that I think all the members of the committee were engaged in the preelection campaign, doing what they could on this referendum matter, and their time was fully taken up. Since that time we have only been able to get the committee together once, and we are in the situation of not having determined as yet what we will do, although I think there will not be a very extended further investigation. I think possibly the country is satisfied with the result of the election.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is the committee planning to pursue its inquiry about the $30,000,000?

Mr. KENYON. What thirty millions does the Senator refer to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not sure what thirty millions it was. I simply had the figure in mind.

Mr. KENYON. It did not seem to have any effect on the result of the election; but it is absolutely impossible for us to file this report now. There may be a few matters which we shall want to follow up, but I will say to the Senator that there will be very few.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that an additional appropriation will be needed?

Mr. KENYON. Absolutely none; no.

Mr. KING. It will be within the appropriation heretofore made?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes; there will be no further expense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Iowa will be granted.

THE BUILDING SITUATION.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I submit a Senate resolution, and ask its reference to the appropriate committee.

The resolution (S. Res. 392) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate No. 350, agreed to April 17, 1920, authorizing a special committee of the Senate to investigate the existing situation in relation to the general construction of houses, manufacturing establishments, and buildings, and the effect thereof upon other industries and upon the public welfare, be, and the same is, hereby amended to empower said special committee to employ counsel, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REVIVAL OF WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have here a concurrent resolution, which provides in its terms that it is the sense of the Senate and the House of Representatives that the Secretary of the Treasury permit the War Finance Corporation to function under the terms of the present law. I introduce this measure after a visit to the leading cities of the West and South, where I became convinced that this measure more than anything else would tend to revive the business of the country by assisting in obtaining proper credits for the foreign marketing of the products particularly of the western and southern sections of the country. I present it now and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 33) was read, as follows:

Whereas as a war measure the War Finance Corporation was created by the act approved April 5, 1918, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States engaged in business necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war; and

Whereas as an aid to orderly reconstruction after the signing of the armistice; by an act approved March 3, 1919, Congress amended the act creating the War Finance Corporation and empowered and authorized that corporation, in order to promote commerce with foreign countries through the extension of credits, to make advances under certain conditions to persons, firms, or corporations in the United States engaged in the business in the United States of exporting therefrom domestic products to foreign countries, this power to continue until 12 months after the termination of the war, such termination to be fixed by proclamation of the President; and

Whereas in adding these new powers to those originally vested in the War Finance Corporation Congress had in contemplation certain definite objects, namely: (a) To meet the unprecedented conditions existing in international trade by providing an outlet for great quantities of domestic products which could not be exported and sold if the foreign purchaser were required to make settlement immediately, or if such exportation had to be financed solely through ordinary banking channels; and (b) while thus promoting foreign commerce to enable producers in the United States to materially assist in supplying necessary commodities to those countries which as a result of the war could obtain adequate quantities of such commodities only upon long-time credits; and

Whereas under date of May 10, 1920, the Secretary of the Treasury, ex officio chairman of the War Finance Corporation, made public announcement that, at his request, that corporation had suspended making further advances in aid of exports except pursuant to commitments theretofore made, assigning as his reasons for this action, inter alia, that business was then prosperous, involuntary unemployment was then negligible, that foreign commerce was then developing through private enterprise, and that no necessity existed for extending further Government aid to the development of such commerce; and

Whereas it has come to the attention of Congress, through many sources, that business is not now prosperous, that involuntary unemployment is extensive and rapidly increasing, that many staple commodities in the United States have become unmarketable to such an extent that loans made against such commodities by banking institutions in the United States can not be liquidated, that the foreign commerce of the United States at this critical period can and should be increased on a sound business basis, and that this can be done with great advantage to the people of the United States if reasonable credit facilities are available to foreign purchasers, and that the fundamental purpose in amending the act approved April 5, 1918, to a great extent is being defeated by the failure of the War Finance Corporation to perform its functions: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America that such an emergency exists as fully to justify and to require the board of directors of the War Finance Corporation to make such advances as may be safely and reasonably made under the terms of the War Finance Corporation act, as amended, for the purpose of assisting in the development of the foreign commerce of the United States and the sale to foreign purchasers, on reasonable terms, of domestic products.

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to the directors of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask that the concurrent resolution go to the committee. It has not been considered by any committee at all, and there was an objection to the consideration of a similar resolution this morning.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield for one moment?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, an order was made by the Senate at the last session of Congress that the packer bill should be made the unfinished business, beginning on Wednesday.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that that measure will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. The question covered by this concurrent resolution and embodied in the joint resolution that was objected to this morning is a matter of very great importance, and very urgent and necessary, as of course the Senator from Kansas knows.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator, and I am in favor of legislation on the subject.

Mr. HARRISON. If we get tied up behind a bill of such magnitude as the packer legislation, it being made the unfinished business, there is no telling when we will get any legislation on this particular question, that is so important now.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator. I am for the joint resoution offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and probably would support the concurrent resolution; but that joint resolution went over, and the leader on this side has requested that matters of this kind go over; so I object and ask that it be sent to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What committee shall it go to?

Mr. CALDER. May I suggest, the other resolution having been considered by the Agricultural Committee, that this one go there too?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has not gone anywhere. It is on the table.

Mr. CURTIS and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where shall this concurrent resolution go? Let us dispose of these matters one at a time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Why not let it take the same course as the other, and go to the table?

Mr. CALDER. I ask that it lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is this concurrent resolution reported from any committee?

Mr. CALDER. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Is an individual Senator offering it and asking for its present consideration?

Mr. CALDER. It is a concurrent resolution, but it simply states that it is the sense of the Senate that the Treasury Department should permit the War Finance Corporation to function.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, Mr. President, that it ought to go to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What committee?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it ought to go to the Finance Committee, because that is where the War Finance Corporation was created.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection on the part of the Senator from New York?

Mr. CALDER. I simply suggested that it go to the Agricultural Committee because they were considering the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection to its going to the Agricultural Committee later, but it ought to go first to the committee which created the War Finance Corporation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us get it somewhere. That is the important thing.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the concurrent resolution should go to the Committee on Finance. That is the committee which has jurisdiction of this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will entertain a motion to send it there.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 8, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 7, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, impart unto these, Thy servants, the representatives of the people, plenteously of Thy wisdom, power and goodness, that they may meet the stupendous problems which confront them with clear minds, brave hearts, earnest endeavors, and solve them in accordance with truth, right, justice to not only our people, but to the people of all the world, that we may speedily return to the normal, that peace and righteousness may reign supreme. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

There was no objection.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the secretary of state of the State of Connecticut, inclosing a certified copy of the resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, adopted at the special session of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut September 21, 1920.

Also, a communication from the governor of the State of Tennessee inclosing a certificate of ratification of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, accompanied by resolutions and transcripts of the journals of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee.

RATIFICATION OF PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House an application of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana for the calling of a constitutional convention for the purpose of amending the Constitution of the United States so as to provide that all amendments to the Constitution of the United States shall be submitted to the qualified electors of the several States for ratification or rejection.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file minority views within two days in respect to the immigration bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, which was reported yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to have two days within which to file the views of the minority on the immigration bill. Is there objection?

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the chairman of the Committee on Immigration in the House?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not know.

Mr. VAILE. Then I am obliged to object for the present.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, before it had been introduced in this House, a bill affecting immigration, together with the report, were filed in the basket. For the first time in the history of the House legislation is being attempted here not in the regular way, but by what might be termed by the man on the street lynch-law methods. Lynch-law methods, whether by the mob or by a few people, who report a bill before it has been actually referred to a committee, I do not think can command the respect of the country.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the Committee on Immigration for at least six months held hearings upon this same subject, and did the committee not report out a bill at the Sixty-fifth Congress favorably, there being only two dissenting members?

Mr. SIEGEL. I regret to say that it is not. I regret to say that this bill is entirely a new proposition, couched in entirely new language; that it places the sole power in the Secretary of Labor to determine who shall come into this country. The bill gives him mandatory power to prevent a husband sending for his wife to come to this country without first making application to the Secretary of Labor to permit him to do so, even though she be mentally, morally, and physically fit to enter under our present immigration laws.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I note that the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], is now in the Chamber. I suggest that the gentleman from New York repeat his request.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request, to have two days within which to file minority views to the bill which was presented here yesterday, together with the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may have two days within which to file the views of the minority on the immigration bill. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman from New York make his request for one day? He can write his report to-day, and it can be filed and be available here to-morrow. The gentleman could have until 12 o'clock to-night to file his report.

Mr. SIEGEL. I had no idea when I came down here yesterday that a bill, which had not been introduced in the House, was going to be reported out in the fashion it was reported out by the committee. I had an idea that we would have at least a few days in which to consider the bill, when we could give some hearings to some who might desire to be heard in opposition to it, and I might say that there are a number of people who do desire to be heard; but instead of that the bill, together with the report, is filed within two hours after the committee met yesterday morning, previous to the meeting of the Congress. Two days is a very short time within which to file minority views under the circumstances, I submit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will take one day, I shall not object.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am entitled to two days. I do not think this bill can come up for consideration before Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman take one day?

Mr. SIEGEL. No; I can not take one day, because I can not get my report out in one day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. SIEGEL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that I be entitled——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition. I think it is very important that I be permitted to have two days within which to file these views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw the objection with the understanding that, having two days, the gentleman does not delay action on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington withdraws his objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right further to object.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California objects.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think we ought to start a wrangle over immigration at this time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that he have two days within which to file minority views. Is there further objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. LUHRING, for one week, at the request of his colleague, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana.

Mr. WISE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. DRANE, indefinitely, on account of the serious illness of a member of his family.

MINORITY MEMBERS, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if it is in order at this time for the minority to present the names of the minority members of the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. GOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri when it is proposed to present the minority names for the Committee on Appropriations? I am trying to arrange to make appointments on the subcommittees, and it can not be done until the minority present the names of the members.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, all I know about it is—[applause, the Members rising]—that yesterday morning—of course, I have nothing to do with the selection of the names except in an advisory capacity—but yesterday morning Mr. KITCHIN sent me word that they were not ready to present them. I think they will be ready to-morrow, and I will do my best to have it done.

Mr. GOOD. I thank the gentleman.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed by the House to accompany a like committee of the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that the Congress is in session and prepared to receive any message he might see fit to send to it, reports that that committee waited on the President and he informed it that he would transmit to-day a message in writing.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On June 10, 1920:

H. R. 3184. An act to create a Federal power commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto, and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

On June 14, 1920:

H. R. 6407. An act for the relief of Michael MacGarvey;

H. R. 13962. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the borough of Wilson, county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania;

H. R. 13976. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Sixteenth Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania;

H. R. 13977. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Millvale Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

H. R. 13978. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near McKees Rocks Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 903).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the message, as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: When I addressed myself to performing the duty laid upon the President by the Constitution to present to you an annual report on the state of the Union, I found my thought dominated by an immortal sentence of Abraham Lincoln's,

"Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us dare to do our duty as we understand it,"—

a sentence immortal because it embodies in a form of utter simplicity and purity the essential faith of the nation, the faith in which it was conceived and the faith in which it has grown to glory and power. With that faith and the birth of a nation founded upon it came the hope into the world that a new order would prevail throughout the affairs of mankind, an order in which reason and right would take precedence of covetousness and force, and I believe that I express the wish and purpose of every thoughtful American when I say that this sentence marks for us in the plainest manner the part we should play alike in the arrangement of our domestic affairs and in our exercise of influence upon the affairs of the world. By this faith, and by this faith alone, can the world be lifted out of its present confusion and despair. It was this faith which prevailed over the wicked force of Germany. You will remember that the beginning of the end of the war came when the German people found themselves face to face with the conscience of the world and realized that right was everywhere arrayed against the wrong that their government was attempting to perpetrate. I think, therefore, that it is true to say that this was the faith which won the war. Certainly this is the faith with which our gallant men went into the field and out upon the seas to make sure of victory.

This is the mission upon which democracy came into the world. Democracy is an assertion of the right of the individual to live and to be treated justly as against any attempt on the part of any combination of individuals to make laws which will overburden him or which will destroy his equality among his fellows in the matter of right or privilege, and I think we all realize that the day has come when democracy is being put upon its final test. The old world is just now suffering from a wanton rejection of the principle of democracy and a substitution of the principle of autocracy as asserted in the name but without the authority and sanction of the multitude. This is the time of all others when democracy should prove its purity and its spiritual power to prevail. It is surely the manifest destiny of the United States to lead in the attempt to make this spirit prevail.

There are two ways in which the United States can assist to accomplish this great object: First, by offering the example within her own borders of the will and power of democracy to make and enforce laws which are unquestionably just and which are equal in their administration,—laws which secure its full right to labor and yet at the same time safeguard the integrity of property, and particularly of that property which is devoted to the development of industry and the increase of the necessary wealth of the world. Second, by standing for right and justice as towards individual nations. The law of democracy is for the protection of the weak, and the influence of every democracy in the world should be for the protection of the weak nation, the nation which is struggling towards its right and towards its proper recognition and privilege in the family of nations. The United States can not refuse this rôle of champion without putting the stigma of rejection upon the great and devoted men who brought its government into existence and established it in the face of almost universal opposition and intrigue, even in the face of wanton force, as, for example, against the Orders in Council of Great Britain and the arbitrary Napoleonic Decrees which involved us in what we know as the War of 1812. I urge you to consider that the display of an immediate disposition on the part of the Congress to remedy any injustices or evils that may have shown themselves in our own national life will afford the most effectual offset to the forces of chaos and tyranny which are playing so disastrous a part in the fortunes of the free peoples of more than one part of the world. The United States is of necessity the sample democracy of the world, and the triumph of democracy depends upon its success.

Recovery from the disturbing and sometimes disastrous effects of the late war has been extremely slow on the other side of the water and has given promise, I venture to say, of early completion only in our own fortunate country; but even with us the recovery halts and is impeded at times and there are immediately serviceable acts of legislation which it seems to me we ought to attempt, to assist that recovery and prove the indestructible recuperative force of a great government of the people. One of these is to prove that a great democracy can keep house as successfully and in as businesslike a fashion as any other government. It seems to me that the first step towards proving this is to supply ourselves with a systematic method of handling our estimates and expenditures and bringing them to the point where they will not be an unnecessary strain upon our income or necessitate unreasonable taxation, in other words, a workable budget system, and I respectfully suggest that two elements are essential to such a system; namely, not only that the proposal of appropriations should be in the hands of a single body, such as a single appropriations committee in each house of the Congress, but also that this body should be brought into such cooperation with the departments of the Government and with the Treasury of the United States as would enable it to act upon a complete conspectus of the needs of the Government and the resources from which it must draw its income. I reluctantly vetoed the Budget Bill passed by the last session of the Congress because of a Constitutional objection. The House of Representatives subsequently modified the Bill in order to meet this objection. In the revised form I believe that the Bill, coupled with action already taken by the Congress to revise its rules and procedure, furnishes the foundations for an effective national budget system. I earnestly hope, therefore, that one of the first steps taken by the present session of the Congress will be to pass the Budget Bill.

The nation's finances have shown marked improvement during the past year. The total ordinary receipts of $6,694,000,000 for the fiscal year 1920 exceeded those for 1919 by $1,542,000,000, while the total net ordinary expenditures decreased from $18,514,000,000 to $6,403,000,000. The gross public debt, which reached its highest point on 31 August, 1919, when it was $26,596,000,000, had dropped on 30 November, 1920, to $24,175,000,000. There has also been a marked decrease in holdings of Government war securities by the banking institutions of the country, as well as in the amount of bills held by the Federal Reserve Banks secured by Government war obligations. This fortunate result has relieved the banks and left them freer to finance the needs of agriculture, industry, and commerce. It has been due in large part to the reduction of the public debt, especially of the floating debt, but more particularly to the improved distribution of Government securities among permanent investors. The cessation of the Government's borrowings except through short-term certificates of indebtedness has been a matter of great consequence to the people of the country at large, as well as to the holders of Liberty bonds and Victory notes, and has had an important bearing on the matter of effective credit control. The year has been characterized by the progressive withdrawal of the Treasury from the domestic credit market and from a position of dominant influence in that market. The future course will necessarily depend upon the extent to which economies are practiced and upon the burdens placed upon the Treasury, as well as upon industrial developments and the maintenance of tax receipts at a sufficiently high level.

The fundamental fact which at present dominates the Government's financial situation is that seven and a half billions of its war indebtedness mature within the next two and a half years. Of this amount, two and a half billions are floating debt and five billions Victory notes and War Savings certificates. The fiscal programme of the Government must be determined with reference to these maturities. Sound policy demands that Government expenditures be reduced to the lowest amount which will permit the various services to operate efficiently and that Government receipts from taxes and salvage be maintained sufficiently high to provide for current requirements, including interest and sinking fund charges on the public debt, and at the same time retire the floating debt and part of the Victory loan before maturity. With rigid economy, vigorous salvage operations and adequate revenues from taxation, a surplus of current receipts over current expenditures can be realized and should be applied to the floating debt. All branches of the Government should cooperate to see that this programme is realized.

I can not overemphasize the necessity of economy in Government appropriations and expenditures and the avoidance by the Congress of practices which take money from the Treasury by indefinite or revolving fund appropriations. The estimates for the present year show that over a billion dollars of expenditures were authorized by the last Congress in addition to the amounts shown in the usual compiled statements of appropriations. This strikingly illustrates the importance of making direct and specific appropriations. The relation between the current receipts and current expenditures of the Government during the present fiscal year, as well as during the last half of the last fiscal year, has been disturbed by the extraordinary burdens thrown upon the Treasury by the Transportation Act, in connection with the return of the railroads to private control. Over $600,000,000 has already been paid to the railroads under this Act,—$350,000,000 during the present fiscal year; and it is estimated that further payments aggregating possibly $650,000,000 must still be made to the railroads during the current year. It is obvious that these large payments have already seriously limited the Government's progress in retiring the floating debt.

Closely connected with this, it seems to me, is the necessity for an immediate consideration of the revision of our tax laws. Simplification of the income and profits taxes has become an immediate necessity. These taxes performed an indispensable service during the war. The need for their simplification, however, is very great, in order to save the taxpayer inconvenience and expense and in order to make his liability more certain and definite. Other and more detailed recommendations with regard to taxes will no doubt be laid before you by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

It is my privilege to draw to the attention of Congress for very sympathetic consideration the problem of providing adequate facilities for the care and treatment of former members of the military and naval forces who are sick or disabled as the result of their participation in the war. These heroic men can never be paid in money for the service they patriotically rendered the nation. Their reward will lie rather in realization of the fact that they vindicated the rights of their country and aided in safeguarding civilization. The nation's gratitude must be effectively revealed to them by the most ample provision for their medical care and treatment as well as for their vocational training and placement. The time has come when a more complete programme can be formulated and more satisfactorily administered for their treatment and training, and I earnestly urge that the Congress give the matter its early consideration. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Board for Vocational Education will outline in their annual reports proposals covering medical care and rehabilitation which I am sure will engage your earnest study and command your most generous support.

Permit me to emphasize once more the need for action upon certain matters upon which I dwelt at some length in my message to the Second Session of the Sixty-sixth Congress: the necessity, for example, of encouraging the manufacture of dyestuffs and related chemicals; the importance of doing everything possible to promote agricultural production along economic lines, to improve agricultural marketing and to make rural life more attractive and healthful; the need for a law regulating cold storage in such a way as to limit the time during which goods may be kept in storage, prescribing the method of disposing of them if kept beyond the permitted period, and requiring goods released from storage in all cases to bear the date of their receipt. It would also be most serviceable if it were provided that all goods released from cold storage for interstate shipment should have plainly marked upon each package the selling or market price at which they went into storage, in order that the purchaser might be able to learn what profits stood between him and the producer or the wholesale dealer. Indeed, it would be very serviceable to the public if all goods destined for interstate commerce were made to carry upon every packing case whose form made it possible a plain statement of the price at which they left the hands of the producer. I respectfully call your attention, also, to the recommendations of the message referred to with regard to a federal license for all corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

In brief, the immediate legislative need of the time is the removal of all obstacles to the realization of the best ambitions of our people in their several classes of employment and the strengthening of all instrumentalities by which difficulties are to be met and removed and justice dealt out, whether by law or by some form of mediation and conciliation. I do not feel it to be my privilege at present to suggest the detailed and particular methods by which these objects may be attained, but I have faith that the inquiries of your several committees will discover the way and the method.

In response to what I believe to be the impulse of sympathy and opinion throughout the United States, I earnestly suggest that the Congress authorize the Treasury of the United States to make to the struggling Government of Armenia such a loan as was made to several of the Allied Governments during the war; and I would also suggest that it would be desirable to provide in the legislation itself that the expenditure of the money thus loaned should be under the supervision of a commission, or at least a commissioner, from the United States, in order that revolutionary tendencies within Armenia itself might not be afforded by the loan a further tempting opportunity.

Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of the Congress in their behalf, and have thus fulfilled the condition set by the Congress as precedent to a consideration of granting independence to the islands. I respectfully submit that this condition precedent having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of those islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet.

I have not so much laid before you a series of recommendations, gentlemen, as sought to utter a confession of faith, of the faith in which I was bred and which it is my solemn purpose to stand by until my last fighting day. I believe this to be the faith of America, the faith of the future, and of all the victories which await national action in the days to come, whether in America or elsewhere.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
7 December, 1920.

The message was received with applause.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the President's message be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have order for just a moment. I want to ask unanimous consent for one-half a minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for half a minute in which to address the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the Democratic side of the House that it is desired to have a Democratic caucus here immediately after the adjournment of the House to-day.

ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Alaskan Engineering Commission, covering the period from November 1, 1918, to December 31, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
7 December, 1920.

The SPEAKER. The message will be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 307).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of certain acts and resolutions enacted by the Ninth Legislature of Porto Rico during its third special session (April 26 to May 6, 1920, inclusive).

These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress and none of them has been printed.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
7 December, 1920.

The SPEAKER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

ANNUAL REPORT, CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 908).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by the act of Congress to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States, approved January 16, 1883, I transmit herewith the thirty-seventh annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
7 December, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and ordered printed with the accompanying papers.

ANNUAL REPORT, NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS (S. DOC. NO. 308).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1915, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, I transmit herewith the sixth annual report of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920.

The attention of the Congress is invited to the recommendation of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for the establishment of a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce for the regulation and encouragement of commercial aviation. The national aviation policy as formulated by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and the constructive recommendations therein set forth for the consideration of the Congress have the hearty approval of the departments concerned as well as myself.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
7 December, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered printed.

APPROPRIATIONS, ETC., DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a statement by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, of appropriations, expenditures, and balances of appropriations under the control of the Department of State for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
7 December, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

WHEAT GUARANTY (H. DOC. NO. 904).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1919, entitled "An act to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder," I transmit herewith the report of the proceedings had by the Department of Agriculture under the authority of said act.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
7 December, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Agriculture, with the accompanying papers, and ordered printed.

APPOINTMENT AS CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Committees to nominate MARION E. RHODES, of Missouri, as chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining and move his election.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the election is agreed to.

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it had been the intention to report a rule from the Committee on Rules this morning for the consideration of a bill limiting immigration within the next two years. Just as the committee adjourned and came into the Chamber an unanimous-consent agreement was entered into granting the minority of the Committee on Immigration two days in which to file minority views. In view of that situation on the floor of the House, I desire to announce that I shall call up the rule on Thursday morning after the reading of the Journal for the consideration of the immigration bill and shall not present it at this time.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. The chairman of the Committee on Rules gives notice that he will call up this rule on Thursday after the reading of the Journal. I believe there has been a previous order made concerning remarks to be made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The SPEAKER. That was subject to privileged matter, and that can be arranged between the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Kansas.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Wednesday, December 8, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 8, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we desire most of all to be worthy of the marvelous opportunity that Thou hast brought to us for service, to be worthy of all the ample provision that Thy providence and grace has made for us, so that each closing day may record a life invested in the larger service and that we may have the commendation of God upon it. Grant us to-day the vision of truth, of righteousness and of justice that we may perform our duties as in God's sight and receive the welcome of God in the quiet and peace of the eventide. For Christ's sake. Amen.

PETER G. GERRY, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, and GILBERT M. HITCHCOCK, a Senator from the State of Nebraska, appeared in their seats to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

EXPENDITURES OF AMERICAN PEACE MISSION (S. DOC. NO. 330).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was ordered to be printed and with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 28th of August, 1919, I submited to the Congress a partial statement of the expenses of the American mission to negotiate peace, which was printed in Senate Document No. 80, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session. It now gives me pleasure to lay before the Congress, for its information, a statement of all of the expenditures of the American commission to negotiate peace for the entire period of its existence from December 1, 1918, to December 31, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
8 December, 1920.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certified copy of the concurrent resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution granting suffrage to women (S. Doc. No. 319), which was ordered printed in the RECORD and filed, as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Hartford, Conn., October 15, 1920.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith a certified copy of the "concurrent resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States on woman suffrage" adopted at the special session of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, September 21, 1920.

Yours, very truly,

FREDERICK L. PERRY,
Secretary.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
GENERAL ASSEMBLY, SPECIAL SESSION,
September 21, 1920.

Concurrent resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States on woman suffrage.

Whereas the Sixty-sixth Congress of the United States of America, in both Houses by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof has made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States, in the following words, to wit:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"Article XIX.

"The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be and the same is hereby ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing preamble and resolution be forwarded by the secretary of the State of Connecticut to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Certified as correct by—

FREDERICK L. PERRY, Secretary.

State of Connecticut: Senate, adopted by roll-call vote September 21, 1920; house of representatives, passed by roll-call vote September 21, 1920.

CLIFFORD B. WILSON,
President of the Senate.
JAS. F. WALSH,
Speaker of the House.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
Office of the Secretary, ss:

I, Frederick L. Perry, secretary of the State of Connecticut, and keeper of the seal thereof and of the original record of the acts and resolutions of the general assembly of said State, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of the concurrent resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States on woman suffrage with the original record of the same now remaining in this office and have found the said copy to be a correct and complete transcript thereof.

And I further certify that the said original record is a public record of the said State of Connecticut now remaining in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State at Hartford this 15th day of October, 1920.

[SEAL.] FREDERICK L. PERRY, Secretary.

He also laid before the Senate a certified copy of a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Tennessee, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution granting suffrage to women, which was ordered printed in the RECORD and filed, as follows:

AUGUST 24, 1920.

DEAR SIR: Find inclosed certificate of ratification of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, accompanied by resolution and transcript of the journals of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee.

Very respectfully,

A. H. ROBERTS, Governor.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, CAPITOL, NASHVILLE,
State of Tennessee.

I, A. H. Roberts, by virtue of the authority vested in me as governor of the State of Tennessee, and also the authority conferred upon me therein, do certify to the President of the United States; to the Secretary of State of the United States at Washington, District of Columbia; to the President of the Senate of the United States; and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States that the attached paper is a true and perfect copy of senate joint resolution No. 1, ratifying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, declaring that the rights of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex, and that the Congress shall have power to enforce said article by appropriate legislation, as set out in said resolution; and that same was passed and adopted by the first extra session of the Sixty-first General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, constitutionally called to meet and convened at the capitol, in the city of Nashville, on August 9, 1920, thereby ratifying said proposed nineteenth amendment to the said Constitution of the United States of America, in manner and form appearing on the journals of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, true, full, and correct transcript of all entries pertaining to which said resolution No. 1 are attached hereto and made part hereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto signed my name as governor of the State of Tennessee, and have affixed hereto the great seal of the State of Tennessee, at the capitol, in the city of Nashville, Tenn., on this the 24th day of August, 1920, at 10.17 a. m.

[SEAL.] A. H. ROBERTS,
Governor of the State of Tennessee.

Senate joint resolution No. 1.

A joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex, and providing further that Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-sixth Congress of the United States of America, at its first session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, passed a resolution submitting to the several States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States, a certified copy of which has been received by the governor of the State of Tennessee from the Secretary of State of the United States, as required by law, and by him transmitted to this general assembly, the same being in the following words, to wit:

Sixty-sixth Congress of the United States of America at the first session. Begun and held at the city of Washington on Monday, 19th day of May, 1919.

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.

"Article —.

"The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

F. H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States and President of Senate.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Tennessee, the house of representatives concurring, That said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee.

Be it further resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of the State of Tennessee to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State of the United States at Washington, D. C., to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of senate joint resolution No. 1, the original of which is now in my possession as clerk of the senate of the first extra session of the Sixty-first General Assembly of Tennessee.

W. M. CARTER, Clerk of the Senate.

Transcript of the senate journal of the first extra session of the sixty-first general assembly.

Senate joint resolution No. 1 relative to ratifying the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Tuesday, August 10, 1920—Second day.

The senate met at 10 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Mr. Speaker Todd.

The proceedings were opened with prayer by Senator Cannon.

On a call of the roll all of the senators responded to their names except Messrs. Candler, Coleman, and Rice of Shelby.

On motion the reading of the journal was dispensed with, Mr. M. H. Copenhaver presented his certificate and was administered the official oath by Mr. Speaker Todd.

Introduction of resolutions.

By Mr. Speaker Todd, senate joint resolution No. 1, relative to ratifying the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Under the rule the resolution lies over.

Wednesday, August 11, 1920—Third day.

The senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Mr. Speaker Todd.

The proceedings were opened with prayer by the chaplain, Rev. Lin Cave.

On motion, the calling of the roll was dispensed with.

On motion, the reading of the journal was dispensed with.

Mr. J. W. Murray, senator elect, presented his certificate, and was sworn in as senator by Mr. Speaker Todd.

Resolutions lying over.

Senate joint resolution No. 1, relative to ratifying nineteenth amendment.

Mr. Candler moved that the resolution be referred to the committee on judiciary.

Mr. Fuller raised the point of order that the question as to which committee the resolution should be referred to should be left entirely to the judgment of the speaker. The chair held that the point of order was not well taken and that the motion to refer was in order.

Mr. Fuller moved that the motion to refer the resolution to the judiciary committee be laid on the table, and on the call of the roll the motion prevailed by the following vote: Ayes, 14; noes, 12.

Senators voting "aye" were: Messrs. Bradley, Burkhalter, Collins, Copenhaver, Dorris, Fuller, Gwin, Harber, Haston, Houk, McMahon, Matthews, Stockard, and Wikle—14.

Senators voting "no" were: Messrs. Cameron, Candler, Coleman, Long, McFarland, Miller, Monroe, Murray, Parks, Rice of Stewart, Summers, and Whitby—12.

The resolution was referred to the committee on constitutional amendments.

Friday, August 13, 1920—Fifth day.

The senate met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Mr. Speaker Todd. The proceedings were opened with prayer by the chaplain, Rev. R. Lin Cave.

On call of the roll, all of the senators responded to their names except Messrs. Caldwell, Clarke, Gwin, McFarland, and Monroe.

On motion, the reading of the journal was dispensed with.

Report of standing committees—Constitutional amendments.

Mr. Gwin presented the majority report, signed by Messrs. Gwin, Copenhaver, Houk, Collins, Murray, Coleman, Wikle, and Haston, on senate joint resolution No. 1, as follows:

To the speaker and members of the senate:

The committee on constitutional amendments has carefully considered senate joint resolution No. 1, and is of the opinion that the present legislature has both a legal and moral right to ratify the proposed resolution.

Full power and jurisdiction of the question is conferred upon State legislatures by the fifth article of the Federal Constitution. This power is not conferred upon some and withheld from others, but is granted to all, and any legislature may lawfully exercise the power thus expressly conferred. Therefore the provision of the constitution of Tennessee which undertakes to deny to the present legislature the right to exercise such power is clearly null and void, because in direct conflict with the United States Constitution. The attempt to deny this legislature this power is not only without legal force and effect but is clearly not binding as a moral obligation. To contend that an illegal provision of a State constitution imposes a duty or creates a moral obligation is to state a proposition that is manifestly and fundamentally wrong. The United States Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and it is, therefore, no violation of his official oath for any legislator to disregard a State constitutional inhibition that is in direct and irreconcilable conflict with the plain provision of the Federal Constitution. On the contrary, to be governed by a nugatory clause of the State constitution on a purely Federal question—and that is what the nineteenth amendment is—would be dangerously near the violation of the oath to support the Constitution of the United States. Legal opinions and common-sense arguments could be multiplied in support of this position, but these are deemed unnecessary.

In view of the fact that all the members of the senate are either Democrats or Republicans, and that both nominees and platforms of their respective parties, State and National, have unequivocally declared for the ratification of this amendment, and that its final adoption is as certain as the recurrence of the seasons, and that further fact that this senate has heretofore taken a stand in favor of woman suffrage by the enfranchisement, as far as legally possible, of the womanhood of Tennessee, we have not considered it necessary to state the many good reaons that might be urged in favor of the adoption of the amendment.

National woman suffrage by Federal amendment is at hand; it may be delayed but it can not be defeated, and we covet for Tennessee the signal honor of being the thirty-sixth and last State necessary to consummate this great reform.

Fully persuaded of its justice and confident of its passage, we earnestly recommend the adoption of the resolution.

Respectfully submitted.

L. E. GWIN, Chairman.
M. H. COPENHAVER.
JOHN C. HOUK.
J. W. MURRAY.
T. L. COLEMAN.
DOUGLAS WIKLE.
E. N. HASTON.

Mr. Cameron presented the minority report by Messrs. Cameron and Rice, of Stewart, as follows:

To the speaker and members of the senate:

The undersigned members of the committee make to your honorable body the following minority report and recommendations:

That the body refuse to act upon senate joint resolution, we being of opinion that the present legislature has no right nor authority to act thereon at all, and that the same should be deferred to the succeeding legislature.

We, therefore, dissent from the recommendation of the majority and recommend in lieu that no action upon the subject be taken at this special session.

Respectfully submitted.

J. W. RICE.
W. M. CAMERON.

Mr. Cameron made a motion to adopt the minority report.

Mr. Haston made a motion to table the motion to adopt the minority report.

On a call of the roll the result on the motion to table was as follows: Ayes, 23; noes, 10.

Senators voting "aye" were: Messrs. Bradley, Burkhalter, Caldwell, Carter, Coleman, Collins, Copenhaver, Dorris, Fuller, Gwin, Harber, Haston, Hill, Houk, McMahon, Matthews, Monroe, Murray, Patton, Rice of Shelby, Stockard, Wikle, and Mr. Speaker Todd—23.

Senators voting "no" were: Messrs. Cameron, Candler, Clarke, Long, McFarland, Miller, Parks, Rice of Stewart, Summers, and Whitby—10.

Mr. Haston made a motion to adopt the majority report. The motion prevailed.

Resolutions lying over.

Senate joint resolution No. 1, relative to ratifying proposed nineteenth amendment to the United States Constitution. Mr. Haston made a motion to adopt the resolution. Mr. McFarland made the point of order in writing, as follows:

Mr. SPEAKER: I make the point of order that the senate has no right or authority to act upon the proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution, under the constitution of the State of Tennessee, article No. 2, section 32.

McFARLAND.

The speaker's ruling on the above point of order is as follows:

"On the point of order made by the senator from Wilson, the speaker rules that it is not in the province of the speaker to determine or pass upon the authority or power of the senate to act under the constitution to consider this proposed amendment, but that this is a question for the body to determine."

Point of order overruled.

Mr. McFarland appealed from the ruling of the chair.

Mr. Speaker Todd called Mr. Hill to the chair, who put the question to the senate, as follows, Shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained?

Mr. Gwin made the following point of order: That discussion must be confined to the appeal from the ruling of the Chair, and that it was not in order to discuss the constitutionality of the resolution.

The Chair ruled that the point of order was well taken. On the call of the roll the Chair was sustained by the following vote: Ayes, 27; noes, 5.

Senators voting "aye" were: Messrs. Bradley, Burkhalter, Caldwell, Cameron, Carter, Clarke, Coleman, Collins, Copenhaver, Dorris, Fuller, Gwin, Harber, Haston, Hill, Houk, Long, McMahon, Matthews, Miller, Monroe, Murray, Parks, Patton, Rice of Shelby, Stokard, and Wikle—27.

Senators voting "no" were: Messrs. Candler, McFarland, Rice of Stewart, Summers, and Whitby—5.

Mr. Haston renewed his motion on the adoption of the resolution.

The motion prevailed.

On call of the roll, the resolution was adopted by the following vote: Ayes, 25; noes, 4; present, not voting, 2.

Senators voting "aye" were: Messrs. Bradley, Burkhalter, Caldwell, Carter, Coleman, Collins, Copenhaver, Dorris, Fuller, Gwin, Harber, Haston, Hill, Houk, Long, McMahon, Matthews, Monroe, Murray, Patton, Rice of Shelby, Stockard, Whitby, Wikle, and Mr. Speaker Todd—25.

Senators voting "no" were: Messrs. Candler, Parks, Rice of Stewart, and Summers—4.

Senators present and not voting were—Messrs. McFarland and Miller—2.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Explanations.

Mr. SPEAKER: I refuse to vote on the proposed Federal amendment from the fact that I am not inclined to perjure myself by violating what I consider my solemn oath.

(Signed) LON P. MCFARLAND.

Explanation of Dorris follows:

Explanation of Mr. Dorris of his vote on senate joint resolution No. 1 on the ratification of the woman suffrage amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Several months ago when it became apparent that the legislature would be called together in extra session to act upon some vital matters, it also became apparent that the nineteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, giving women the right of suffrage, would be included.

Being in favor of woman suffrage, I set about the task of working out for myself the question as to whether I would be violating my oath to the State if I voted for the amendment at this time. In trying to arrive at a conclusion, I merely worked out the solution in my own mind, basing my opinion on this construction:

"The Constitution of the United States when adopted and ratified by the States was complete within itself, and no other instrument of any kind not adopted by the same power or ratified by the States could in any way modify or control it."

The United States Supreme Court in deciding the recent case of Hawkes v. Smith, among other things, said:

"It is true that the power to legislate in the enactment of the laws of the State is derived from the people of the State. But the power to ratify a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution has its source in the Federal Constitution. The act of ratification by the State derives its authority from the Federal Constitution to which the State and its people have alike assented."

It is held by many that the present legislature could not legally ratify the amendment without violating their oath to the constitution of Tennessee. The constitution of Tennessee, section 32, Article II, specifically states:

"No convention or general assembly of this State shall act upon any amendment of the Constitution of the United States proposed by Congress to the several States unless such convention or general assembly shall have been elected after such amendment is submitted."

When we follow the constitution of Tennessee there is only one construction that can be placed upon this point, and that is that it was clearly in the minds of the framers of the constitution of 1870 that all amendments to the Federal Constitution hereafter submitted should be ratified by the vote of the people, either by election to the general assembly or by a convention which is equivalent to a referendum by the people. This, the Supreme Court of the United States clearly set out in the Hawkes v. Smith decision, could not be done. On this point the court said:

"The constitution of Ohio, in its present form, although making provision for a referendum, vests the legislative power primarily in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives. Article II, section 1, provides:

"'The legislative power of the State shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives, but the people shall reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the Constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided.'

"The argument to support the power of the State to require the approval by the people of the State of the ratification of amendments to the Federal Constitution through the medium of a referendum rests upon the proposition that the Federal Constitution requires ratification by the legislative action of the States through the medium provided at the time of the proposed approval of the amendment. This argument is fallacious in this: Ratification by a State of a constitutional amendment is not an act of legislation within the proper sense of the word. It is but the expression of the assent of the State to a proposed amendment."

Therefore, when section 32, Article II, was written into the constitution of Tennessee, the framers wrote a clause that was null, void, and nonexistent.

And with this view of the question I have been able to reach the conclusion that I would not be violating my oath to the State when I cast my vote to ratify the amendment, and I therefore vote "aye."

FINLEY M. DORRIS.

M. Whittaker, N. E. Whittaker, Whitfield, Wilson, Wolfenberger, and Womack—46.

Explanations.

Messrs. Cassady and Hall offered explanations, which were spread at large upon the journal.

Mr. Walker (Mr. Overton presiding) changed his vote from "no" to "aye," and entered a motion on the journal to reconsider.

Saturday, August 21, 1920—Thirteenth day.

The house met at 10 a. m. Was called to order by Mr. Speaker Walker. The proceedings were opened with prayer by the chaplain, Rev. R. B. Cawthon.

Mr. Riddick moved that the call of the roll be dispensed with. The motion prevailed.

Mr. Montgomery made the point of order that no quorum was present, and demanded roll call.

On a call of the roll the following members were found to be present: Messrs. Anderson, Bell, Bond, Boyer, Brooks, Burns, Canale, Carr, Cassady, Crawford of Bedford, Davis, Dodson, Dowlin, Ellis, Fisher, Fitzhugh, Forsythe, Foster, Frogge, Griffin, Hanover, Harris of Knox, Hickman, Howard, Jeter, Johnson, Kahn, Keaton, Larson, Leath, Light, Longhurst, Luther, Lynn, Martin of Washington, Martin of Hamilton, McCallman, Miller, Montgomery, Morgan, Moose, Odle, Phelan, Phillips of Hawkins, Phillips of Madison, Rector, Riddick, Shoaf, Simpson of Bradley, Simpson of Humphreys, Stovall, Swink, Tarrant, Thronesberry, Travis of Henry, Tucker, Turner, Wade, and Mr. Speaker Walker—59.

Mr. Odle moved that the speaker prepare a list of the absentees and give same to the sergeant at arms, with the request that he go out and arrest any and all absent members and bring them into the house.

Before the motion was put Mr. Speaker Walker announced that under the rules of the house such action on his part was necessary and instructed the sergeant at arms to secure a list of the absent members, and, if possible, bring the members to the house.

On motion of Mr. Riddick, at 10.30 a. m., the house recessed for one hour.

At the expiration of the recess the house was called to order by Mr. Speaker Walker.

Mr. Riddick offered the following written motion:

"Mr. Speaker, I call from the journal the motion to reconsider senate joint resolution No. 1."

Mr. Speaker Walker ruled the motion out of order for the following reasons:

1. Because the roll call shows no quorum present. Section 2 of article 2 of the constitution of the State provides in part: "Not less than two-thirds of all the members to which each house shall be entitled shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a small number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized by law to compel the attendance of absent members."

2. Because the attorney general of the State has held that it was only necessary for a majority of the members present constituting a quorum to ratify the nineteenth amendment. If it requires a quorum to pass on the question of ratification, certain it is that a quorum must be present to reconsider.

3. State of Tennessee. To A. H. Roberts, governor of the State of Tennessee:

Ike B. Stevens, secretary of the State of Tennessee; A. L. Todd, speaker of the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee; Seth Walker, speaker of the House of Representatives of the State of Tennessee; and their counselors, attorneys, solicitors, and agents, and each and every one of them, greetings:

Whereas in a certain suit instituted in part 2 of our court of chancery at Nashville by C. Runcie Clements, Rufus E. Fort, Edward Buford, Dudley Gale, James A. Yowell, A. S. Warrel, and George Washington, complainants, against A. H. Roberts, Ike B. Stevens, A. L. Todd, and Seth Walker, defendants, the complainants having obtained from Hon. F. G. Langford, judge, a fiat for a writ of injunction to issue to enjoin defendants A. H. Roberts, governor of the State of Tennessee; Ike B. Stevens, secretary of state; A. L. Todd, speaker of the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee; Seth Walker, speaker of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, and each of them, from making, signing, or issuing any proclamation, declaration, resolution, or certificate declaring that the State of Tennessee has constitutionally and legally adopted the proposed nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and from taking any official action with reference to the illegal action of the special session of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee purporting to ratify and adopt said nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and the complainants having executed the bond required by the said fiat:

We, therefore, in consideration of the premises aforesaid, do strictly enjoin and command you, the said A. H. Roberts, Ike B. Stevens, A. L. Todd, and Seth Walker, in their official capacities, set forth above, and all and every person before mentioned under the penalty prescribed by law of your and every of your goods, lands, tenements, to be levied to our use that you and every one of you do absolutely desist from doing any of the things above forbidden, restrain and enjoin, until hearing of this cause in our said courts of chancery.

Witness, Joseph R. West, clerk and master of our said court, at office the first Monday in April in the year of our Lord 1920, and in the 144th year of our independence.

(Signed) JOSEPH R. WEST, Clerk and Master.
By C. H. SWAN, Deputy Clerk and Master.

Mr. Riddick appealed from the decision of the Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Odle presiding) stated that the question was whether or not the Chair should be sustained in its ruling.

On a call of the roll, the house refused to sustain the decision of the Chair by the following vote: Ayes, 8; noes, 49; present and not voting, 1.

Representatives voting "aye" were: Messrs. Bond, Boyer, Cassady, Forsythe, Frogge, Martin of Hamilton, Montgomery, and Thronesberry—8.

Representatives voting "no" were: Messrs. Anderson, Bell, Brooks, Burns, Canale, Carr, Crawford of Bedford, Davis, Dodson, Dowlin, Ellis, Fisher, Fitzhugh, Foster, Griffin, Hanover, Harris of Knox, Hickman, Howard, Jeter, Johnson, Kahn, Keaton, Larson, Leath, Light, Longhurst, Luther, Lynn, Martin of Washington, McCallman, Miller, Morgan, Moose, Odle, Phelan, Phillips of Hawkins, Phillips of Madison, Rector, Riddick, Shoaf, Simpson of Bradley, Simpson of Humphreys, Stovall, Swink, Tarrant, Travis of Henry, Tucker, and Wade—49.

The representative present and not voting was Mr. Speaker Walker.

Mr. Riddick offered the following written motion:

"Mr. Speaker, I move you that the house now reconsider its action in concurring in the adoption of senate joint resolution No. 1."

Mr. Walker (Mr. Odle presiding) made the point of order that no quorum was present and demanded a roll call.

The Chair (Mr. Odle presiding) stated that he would first have a roll call on Mr. Riddick's motion and after that was disposed of would order a roll call on the demand of Mr. Walker that a quorum was not present.

Mr. Walker again demanded a roll call on the point of order that no quorum was present.

The Chair (Mr. Odle presiding) stated that there was a motion before the house and that a roll call on Mr. Walker's demand that no quorum was present would be ordered immediately after the motion of Mr. Riddick was disposed of.

Thereupon the motion of Mr. Riddick that the house reconsider its action in concurring in and adopting senate joint resolution No. 1 failed by the following vote: Ayes, 0; noes, 50; present and not voting, 9.

Representatives voting were: Messrs. Anderson, Bell, Brooks, Burns, Canale, Crawford of Bedford, Davis, Dodson, Dowlon, Ellis, Fisher, Fitzhugh, Foster, Griffin, Hanover, Harris of Knox, Hickman, Howard, Jeter, Johnson, Kahn, Keaton, Larson, Leath, Light, Longhurst, Luther, Lynn of Washington, McCallman, Miller, Morgan, Moore, Odle, Pheland, Phillips of Hawkins, Phillips of Madison, Rector, Riddick, Shoaf, Simpson of Bradley, Simpson of Humphrey, Stovall, Swink, Tarrant, Travis of Henry, Tucker, Turner, and Wade—50.

Representatives present and not voting were: Messrs. Bond, Boyer, Cassady, Forsythe, Frogge, Martin of Hamilton, Montgomery, Thronesberry, and Mr. Speaker Walker—9.

Mr. Walker (Mr. Odle presiding) made the point of order that Mr. Odle was only acting as speaker by his request and was therefore enjoined from putting any motion before the House.

Mr. Riddick offered the following written motion:

Mr. Speaker, I move you that the clerk of this house be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit to the senate through the ordinary procedure senate joint resolution No. 1.

On a viva voce vote the Chair (Mr. Odle presiding) declared the motion carried.

On motion of Mr. Riddick the house adjourned until 3 p. m. Monday.

Mr. Speaker, I am directed to return to the senate senate joint resolution No. 1 relative to ratifying the nineteenth Federal amendment.

By the following written motion:

"Mr. Speaker, I move you that the clerk of the house be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit to the senate through the ordinary procedure senate joint resolution No. 1."

EXTENSION OF PROVISIONS OF REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

Mr. OVERMAN. I introduce a joint resolution extending certain provisions contained in the Federal revenue act of 1918, which I ask may be read at length and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 219) extending certain provisions contained in the Federal revenue act of 1918 was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 219) extending certain provisions contained in the Federal revenue act of 1918.

Whereas under the provisions of sections 214 (a) (12) and 234 (a) (14) the Federal revenue act of 1918 afforded relief to taxpayers suffering substantial losses in the value of inventories for the taxable year 1918 due to falling prices in 1919; and under the provisions of section 204 (b) the net losses sustained by taxpayers beginning after October 31, 1918, and ending January 1, 1920, were permitted to be deducted from the taxpayer's net income for the preceding and succeeding taxable years; and

Whereas such relief which Congress intended to give all business concerns and other industries which may sustain losses can not be availed of by such business concerns and industries which will sustain net losses during the current year: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the provisions contained in said sections 214 (a) (12) and 234 (a) (14) be extended for readjustment of inventories and recomputation of taxes for subsequent years; and that section 204 (b) be extended and apply to the net losses sustained by taxpayers during any taxable year subsequent to January 1, 1920.

DON MANUEL ESTRADA CABRERA.

Mr. MOSES. I submit a resolution, with accompanying memorandum, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 395) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the accompanying memorandum, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate resolution 395.

Whereas on the 14th day of April, 1920, in the city of Guatemala, there was drawn and signed in the American Legation and in the presence of the American minister certain articles of capitulation, under the terms of which the constitutional President of the Republic of Guatemala, Don Manuel Estrada Cabrera, in order to avoid bloodshed, agreed to surrender to the revolution then resisting his authority, in consideration of which the leaders of said revolution and the provisional government established by them, of which Don Carlos Herrera was titular president, agreed to lodge Don Manuel Estrada Cabrera in the military academy, giving the most solemn and ample guaranties for his life and property;

Whereas upon the surrender of Don Manuel Estrada Cabrera, pursuant to said articles of capitulation, he was, in violation thereof, forthwith removed to the common jail and there confined in a cell used only for the imprisonment of dangerous criminals, and deprived of all legal rights and privileges, in order that the said leaders of the revolution might sack his residence and despoil him of his property in its entirety; and

Whereas there is reason to believe that the said Manuel Estrada Cabrera continues to be maltreated in every way, in violation of the solemn pledges given under the protection of the American Legation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with public interests, to transmit to the Senate such information as he may possess bearing upon this subject.

Memorandum.

Don Manuel Estrada Cabrera was constitutional President of the Republic of Guatemala from February 9, 1898, to April 14, 1920—22 years—during all of which period his policy of extreme friendliness toward the United States Government and Americans in general was one of its most distinguishing features. In fact, his manifest desire to work with and be guided by the United States and the advantages that he offered to Americans gained for him the hatred of many of the ultraconservative element among his countrymen, as well as the cordial dislike of many other Latin-American nations. Sometimes he was described as a traitor to his race. The proof of all this lies in the fact that the files of the State Department do not disclose a single unsatisfied diplomatic claim against the Government of Guatemala. When the United States declared war against Germany President Estrada Cabrera adopted the same course, declaring that "the attitude of the United States is the attitude of Guatemala," and so entered upon hostilities. He seized all the enormous German holdings in the country, consisting of great coffee and sugar estates, public utilities, etc., and asked the United States for a competent adviser to assist him in managing and disposing of these properties in harmony with the American alien-enemy-property legislation. The Germans, who were in Guatemala in enormous numbers, aided by the reactionary and ultraclerical element, conceived that the time had come to overthrow President Estrada Cabrera, and under the guise of the Unionista Party, which had been formed for the alleged purpose of advocating the union of the five States of Central America, began a violent campaign against him. At this time the President was quite ill of diabetes and was living in the suburbs of Guatemala City at his residence, called La Palma. Aided by the Germans on every hand, these individuals succeeded in forming an important group, who, early in the spring of this year, began open hostilities in the capital. After some bloodshed the President indicated a purpose of retiring, if his enemies would give proper guaranties; whereupon the leaders of the revolutionists, presumably at the suggestion of the American minister, Mr. Benton McMillin, and three representatives of the President met at the American Legation, where articles of capitulation were drawn up and signed, under the terms of which the President was to be allowed to lodge in the military academy, a spacious building, amply protected, and his property was to receive every safeguard and guaranty. When the capitulation actually took place he was escorted to the military academy, but was treated with every discourtesy and humiliation. At the same time the leaders of the revolution stationed troops around his former residence and sacked it of everything they could personally carry off, including the proceeds of the treasury, which had been brought there for safe-keeping, as well as his personal fortune. The total amount carried off by these men is reputed as reaching something like $15,000,000, including jewelry, cash, securities, etc. Within a few days they also proceeded to appropriate his real estate. Within a brief period, and again in violation of the articles of capitulation, the President was dragged from the military academy and taken to the city jail, where he was placed in a cell reserved for desperate criminals. Here he was held incommunicado and without the privilege of consulting his counsel, friends, or family, being served with the coarsest food, and even his false teeth taken away from him.

During all of this time there was a substantial guard of American marines in Guatemala City, at the orders of Minister McMillin, who did absolutely nothing for the protection of the President or to see that the agreement was faithfully carried out.

As the close friend of the United States and the American people, President Estrada Cabrera naturally expected that he would be permitted to leave the country, under the protection of the minister and the marines, and was bitterly disappointed when he found himself regarded with absolute indifference and practically abandoned to his enemies. Nothing has been done to relieve this situation, although the President's children have written to the Department of State and his friends have petitioned the latter to save his life, which is in imminent danger.

The new government is not sustained by the people of Guatemala, and will probably be overthrown some time this winter. It is said that there are 5,000 rifles and a large quantity of ammunition in the hands of the common people, who are liable to break out at any moment, exhibiting the same savagery that they exhibited on the occasion of the overthrow of Estrada Cabrera, when they shot and hacked to pieces with knives not less than 20 persons who had been instrumental in the previous enforcement of the laws and the maintenance of order. The situation needs real action, and the only way, apparently, to inspire the State Department to act is by calling the attention of the public to the true facts.

Already the prestige of the United States in Central America has dropped to zero, as these people are particularly susceptible to the influence of incidents like the present. Seeing the American Government utterly abandon in a crisis the man who has been its principal friend, not only in Central America but in all Latin America, they naturally ask what is the use of having the United States as a friend. The whole case is very deplorable and may be attended, in the future, by many ill results.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice of a motion to amend clause 1 of Rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, which I will ask the Senate to take up on next Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not a report from the committee?

Mr. CURTIS. No; it is a notice of a motion to amend the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not proposed to take it up now?

Mr. CURTIS. No; next Monday.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT ELECT.

Mr. KNOX. I submit the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk. I ask that it may be read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Con. Res. 34), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CENTRAL RAILROAD CO. OF NEW JERSEY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4515) reviving, confirming, and renewing the authority of the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey to construct a bridge across the navigable waters of the Newark Bay, in the State of New Jersey, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF AEROPLANES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate for a second reading the following bill from the table.

The bill (H. R. 14368) to provide revenue, encourage domestic industries, and make provision for the national defense by the elimination, through the assessment of special duties, of unfair foreign competition in the sale of aeroplanes imported into the United States, and for other purposes, was read the second time by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CAPTURED WAR DEVICES AND TROPHIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 643) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the bill and amendments be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate for a second reading the joint resolution reported yesterday from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country was read the second time by its title.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the joint resolution may go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go to the calendar and can be taken up on motion or by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the Senator from North Dakota intends to give notice that he will move to take it up to-morrow?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes. I desire to give notice that to-morrow——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to call the Senator's attention to a fact that I am sure he has overlooked. By order of the Senate, fixed before the recent recess, to-morrow is set aside for eulogies on the late Senator BANKHEAD. So I ask the Senator not to interfere with that arrangement.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I give notice that on the following legislative day I shall either ask unanimous consent or move to take up the joint resolution. I hope that we may be able to dispose of it at that time. It is a very urgent measure.

MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY—FEDERAL LIVE-STOCK COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I move that the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3944, be now taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object to taking the bill up at this time, for I understand the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] desires to submit some remarks upon it. I had hoped that we might take up the calendar, beginning with Order of Business No. 198, but after the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Iowa, I understand the bill on which he intends to speak will be temporarily laid aside to-day for that purpose.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if there is any matter on the calendar that is pressing, of course I do not want to stand in the way of its consideration at all. I am willing to wait until 2 o'clock, when the unfinished business will come up in regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Iowa had better proceed now, if he desires to do so, and we can take up the calendar after he concludes. I think that will be better all around.

Mr. GRONNA. So far as I am personally concerned, I will say to the Senator from Utah that I do not desire to discuss the bill to-day, but the Senator from Iowa does. I shall have no objection to laying the bill aside after the Senator from Iowa shall have concluded, in order to go on with the calendar, and, if possible, to complete it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before that is done I desire to ask a question. Do I understand that it is not now desired to take up the calendar where its consideration was left off?

Mr. SMOOT. Not until the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] shall have concluded his speech on the unfinished business.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the calendar then be taken up?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I have said that if there is any matter on the calendar which any Senator feels is pressing I do not want to insist on proceeding with my remarks until 2 o'clock. I am perfectly willing to wait until the unfinished business comes up regularly, but, supposing there was no other business before the Senate, we have asked that the unfinished business may now be taken up.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, I understand that the calendar will be taken up after the Senator from Iowa shall have concluded his speech?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the understanding.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the genesis of the bill now pending before the Senate is this: The original bill bearing on this question was introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. A little later I introduced a bill on the same subject, going somewhat further than did the bill of the Senator from Wyoming, and providing for a voluntary system of markets. These bills were both before the Agricultural Committees and in connection with them very extended hearings were held. Objections, serious and having weight, were presented, which were duly considered. Out of those hearings came the pending bill, which is properly termed the Gronna bill, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] being the chairman of the committee reporting the bill and participating in its consideration. I shall hereafter refer to the bill as the Gronna bill. The Senator from North Dakota would have discussed the bill this morning except for a temporary indisposition.

The greatest economic problem for the American people to consider is that of agriculture, and especially is this true at the present moment. The farmers are discouraged. There is no growth of rural population. The census returns show that approximately 51 per cent of our people are now living in the cities. The trend is all from the farms to the cities. After the Civil War approximately 75 per cent of our people lived on the farms. Farmer boys find higher wages and shorter hours in the city work, and so the great transition goes on.

Immigration coming to this country finds its centers in the cities, while farmers have difficulty in securing labor.

During the war some 23,000 new millionaires were created. No one has yet heard of a millionaire farmer being created by the war. The contract-plus systems did not apply to the farmers. They worked from early morn until late at night to produce the food essential to winning the war, and the farmers of the Middle West and of all parts of the country, in fact, now find themselves with tremendous crops and poor markets. They are facing a crisis. They can not receive for their products what it cost to produce them. Beef steers are not bringing over 60 per cent of what they brought last year. The price of hogs is the lowest for years, and cattle and hogs are being rushed to market.

In an interview a few days ago in the newspapers, Mr. Alfred Baker, head of the United States Bureau of Markets, appealed to the farmers to stem the tide of rushing cattle to the markets.

On November 19 there were close to 68,000 cattle in the stockyards at the opening, according to newspaper reports—the largest number in two years. Cattle prices broke, and it is reported in the newspapers that stock sold a dollar lower on the 18th than on the previous day's close, and had gone off from $2.50 to $3 per hundred in two weeks. Whether the figures be exact, yet it is certain that the market on cattle and other live stock is demoralized completely.

Around November 19 cattle prices were lower than they had been since 1916. Likewise—and I have heretofore referred to the fact—the farmer can not secure for his oats, his corn, his wheat, anything like what it has actually cost him to produce them.

Whether this is entirely due to economic causes, to disastrous conditions in Europe that prevent the purchase of our food supplies, or whether it is due to speculation in the products of the farmer, nevertheless it is true that the farmer believes something is wrong in general conditions. Whatever legislation can do to assist in stabilizing conditions should be done, for no country can prosper without there being prosperity among the agricultural classes.

The farmer is opening his eyes to the situation; he has come to the conclusion that he has been exploited for many years, and he proposes to organize as capital organizes and as labor organizes, and be in a powerful position to secure a fair deal, which he has not had.

Practically every effort to pound down the cost of living has been directed toward the American producer; but the people in the cities may as well realize that they will be compelled to pay for food products enough to return the farmer fair profit on his investment and fair returns for the labor of himself and his family.

The farmer was urged at the time of the war to grow more wheat. He did so and sold it at the price which the Government had established as the minimum, $2.26 per bushel. This minimum became his maximum, for the Government created a great corporation, which bought the wheat supplies at the minimum. He was urged to raise cattle and hogs to take care not only of our Army but of the starving people of Europe. He was told he would be compensated. A plan was devised by the administration by which 13 bushels of corn were to represent the value of 100 pounds of pork. The farmer went ahead and, after he had placed his 13 bushels of corn in the hog, the Government repudiated the agreement. That sent the price of hogs, a year ago, crashing toward the bottom, and it went from 23½ cents a pound down to 11½ cents. That performance cost the farmers of the country hundreds of millions of dollars.

The farmer has become tired of this kind of thing and is organizing in all of the States of the Union. The remainder of the country can not afford to give legitimate reason for the farmer feeling that he does not receive a square deal. There has been too much belief on the part of city people that the business of the farmer is to provide them something to eat. If he finds that he can not secure enough for his crop to pay for raising it, why should he not, as does the manufacturer in times of surplus, cease to produce so much after he has discovered that he can secure higher prices for what he has if he does not produce such a tremendous surplus? But the farmers of the country do not want to pursue this plan. They want to produce all they can, but they want a square deal on the market place.

The distance from the producer to the consumer is entirely too great, and there are too many associations and individuals seeking toll as the product proceeds to the markets. Prices are not stable enough. The farmer who sends a carload of cattle may find between the time they leave home and the time they reach the stockyards that they have gone off enough to work a substantial injury to him and to discourage him in the future raising of cattle. All of these things tend to lessen the Nation's food supply.

Outside of these considerations is the great fundamental question that the country can not afford to allow a feeling of discontent and unrest to exist among the farmers. In every crisis of our national history it has been the farmer who has stood firm, and he will continue to stand firm. The disorganizer and the bolshevik find little ground among the farmers in which to plant their seed. It is important to the welfare and stability of the country that such a class of citizens are not led to feel that there is any agricultural oppression; that the selfishness of the urban population will cause them to attempt to use the instrumentalities of Government to their advantage and against the great rural population.

It certainly would be stupid to close our eyes to the situation and to refuse to face these problems and be willing to accord as far as law can a square deal to the producers of the country.

The purpose of the bill proposed by the committee to regulate the packing industry is along this line. The stock producers of this country and the farmers owning small numbers of cattle and hogs and sheep have been robbed, to put it mildly, of millions of dollars in the last 30 years by the combinations, pools, monopolies, control of buying, apportionment of territory, of selling, and other practices of the great packing monopoly. While this bill is intended primarily to help the producers in stabilizing markets and in creating a body before whom they can bring their complaints for quick redress, it will likewise benefit the consumers of the country in preventing some of the practices that have made it possible for the products to go down in price without any resulting benefit to the consumer.

The packers have acquired such a monopoly in certain of the food products of the American people that their business is charged with a public use and the consequent right of regulation on the part of the Government. What greater question could there be relating to public safety or public life or public health than that of preventing the food supply of the Nation from being controlled by a monopoly?

Five concerns now own or control 574 various corporations in this country and abroad. They manufacture or deal in hundreds of commodities.

The attempt to control unrelated businesses is an interesting chapter of their development, as is their endeavor to control substitutes for the food which is handled by meat packers. For instance, cattle yield oleomargarine; oleomargarine competes with butter. Therefore they go into the butter business to control the competing commodity, the principle being to control the commodities that compete with those handled in the packing business.

Secondly, where an article is bought in great quantities like bumping posts to be used in their stockyards, or railroad hardware, they go into that business, not merely to supply themselves but to supply the trade. In that way they become competitors of the concerns which before that time provided them with supplies. These things have developed an enormous business.

The peddler-car routes—now about 1,300—have been an assisting factor. The peddler car has become a traveling wholesale grocery. So that we find them now in the canning business, breakfast food, dried fruits, cottonseed oil, butter, oleomargarine, cheese, eggs, poultry, and many other lines.

Their method of trust monopoly is to bring together competing industries.

The Sherman law, the Clayton law, the Federal Trade Commission law have directed their attention to monopolies in the same lines of industry.

The bill is, of course, based upon the power to regulate commerce. Objection will, of course, be raised that the general plan is not a regulation of commerce and that it is unconstitutional. I shall speak of that later in a discussion of the law. There is little wonder that the average layman is confused when he sees other Governments, such as Canada, regulating this question, and observes that whenever the attempt is made to do anything of this kind in this country so many constitutional objections can be raised to prevent the people from being protected from those who prey upon them.

No one claims perfection for this bill. Some of its provisions may need changing. It is the result of many hearings and is proposed by the committee with the full realization of the difficulties of a bill fully meeting conditions. It does need some amendments which I shall discuss later.

These amendments—that the lawyers, at least, of the committee have agreed to and the chairman—I will suggest as I proceed.

Two propositions especially present themselves in this matter:

First. That the industry is substantially monopolized by the five great Chicago packers, acting in combination.

Second. That they have extended their activities into unrelated lines of business, particularly in the handling of commodities competing with meat, to an extent and with a rapidity that constitutes a menace to the food supply of the United States. That if unchecked these five great concerns will in a few years have a complete monopoly of the food supplies of the United States.

The Federal Trade Commission on July 3, 1918, in its letter submitting its report on the meat-packing industry to the President, and in the accompanying summary of the report, stated its principal findings in these words:

LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT.

SIR: On February 7, 1917, you directed the Federal Trade Commission to "investigate and report facts relating to the production, ownership, manufacture, storage, and distribution of foodstuffs and the products or by-products arising from or in connection with their preparation and manufacture; to ascertain the facts bearing on alleged violations of the antitrust acts, and particularly upon the question whether there are manipulations, controls, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, or restraints of trade out of harmony with the law or the public interest," to the end that "proper remedies, legislative or administrative, may be applied."

* * * * * * *

Answering directly your question as to whether or not there exist "monopolies, controls, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, or restraints of trade out of harmony with the law and the public interest," we have found conclusive evidence that warrants an unqualified affirmative. (Part I, p. 23.)

* * * * * * *

It appears that five great packing concerns of the country—Swift, Armour, Morris, Cudahy, and Wilson—have attained such a dominant position that they control at will the market in which they buy their supplies, the market in which they sell their products, and hold the fortunes of their competitors in their hands.

Not only is the business of gathering, preparing, and selling meat products in their control, but an almost countless number of by-product industries are similarly dominated; and not content with reaching out for mastery as to commodities which substitute for meat and its by-products they have invaded allied industries and even unrelated ones.

The combination has not stopped at the most minute integration, but has gone on into a stage of conglomeration, so that unrelated heterogeneous enterprises are brought under control.

As we have followed these five great corporations through their amazing and devious ramifications—followed them through important branches of industry, of commerce, and of finance—we have been able to trace back to its source the great power which has made possible their growth. We have found that it is not so much the means of production and preparation, nor the sheer momentum of great wealth, but the advantage which is obtained through a monopolistic control of the market places and means of transportation and distribution.

If these five great concerns owned no packing plants and killed no cattle and still retained control of the instruments of transportation, of marketing, and of storage, their position would not be less strong than it is.

The producer of live stock is at the mercy of these five companies because they control the market and the marketing facilities and, to some extent, the rolling stock which transports the product to the market.

The competitors of these five concerns are at their mercy because of the control of the market places, storage facilities, and the refrigerator cars for distribution.

The consumer of meat products is at the mercy of these five because both producer and competitor are helpless to bring relief. (Part I, p. 24.)

The report of the Federal Trade Commission—in six volumes—is the most complete investigation of the packers that has ever been made. The findings of the Federal Trade Commission show that there are five great meat-packing corporations in the country, which individually and collectively control the meat-packing industry of the country. There are some independents, and they are permitted to live at the sufferance of the large packers.

I shall refer to some of the ideas about the commission in this Chamber a few moments later.

These packers have it in their power to fix the price at which they will buy and the price at which they will sell. The volumes of evidence taken by the commission and taken by the Committee on Agriculture leave no doubt of the proposition that there is a great combination operating smoothly and effectively. It is the growth of many years of working together in the building up of a packing industry. The different instrumentalities by which this has been accomplished need not be discussed. If it is a fact, then there is need for regulation. If it is not a fact, then there is no need of this legislation. For many years there have been the different pools bringing the packers close together and finally merging them in the National Packing Co. The Government has been attempting in the past to check the formation of these pools, and one by one they have been abandoned, simply to have a new one conceived and brought forth.

If it be a fact that these packers can control the supply of animals brought to the slaughtering places, then it is apparent that they control the market for the producer, and that in that market place there is no competitive buying. If one fact, above all others, stands out in this investigation it is that the producer is absolutely at the mercy of the packers for his market, and that market is not a competitive market. He is compelled to sell in stockyards controlled by the packers; to commission men who fear their power and are influenced, justly or unjustly, by them. They have purchased in these markets 75 to 80 per cent of the stock received, and in periods of fluctuations all receipts are bought on an established percentage. These established percentages in the various markets could not be a mere coincidence.

What I have to say is based on the hearings before our committee and also on the report of the Federal Trade Commission. If the report of the Federal Trade Commission is unworthy of belief, as has been charged on this floor, then what I have to say falls to the ground.

Of course, the report was immediately assailed from every quarter of the Nation, including the floor of the Senate. The intercorporate relations of the packers are such, reaching to banks, railroads, newspapers, and other lines of activity, that it requires but a moment to set their affairs in action, supplemented by one of the greatest lobbies in Washington that has ever appeared with reference to legislation, ably assisted by the chief arm of the lobby, the Institute of American Meat Packers, an association apparently organized for the purpose of influencing legislation.

All the old devices that were used in fighting the Borland resolution in the House and in fighting the meat-inspection act were at once brought into use in order to discredit the report of the Federal Trade Commission. Resolutions were introduced in the Senate to investigate the Federal Trade Commission as a socialistic body—a resolution which, by the way, passed nearly a year ago, as I remember it, and under which a subcommittee was appointed. This has been barren of any results. Its purpose, of course, was to discredit the Federal Trade Commission. Why does the inquiry not proceed? It is probable that it never will proceed.

Witnesses have been sent to hearings before the Senate committee and their expenses paid by the packers—a great many of them. Apparent protest from farmers has been worked up by some of the propaganda.

Cattlemen were told by some banks they would have to pay up if legislation similar to this was passed by Congress. In this way they stirred up some of the cattlemen against the legislation. They had their emissaries through the country claiming the situation as to the reduction of prices was due to the agitation over these bills. Men did that in my own State and did it in other States of the Union.

Behind the cattle loan associations there is generally money of the packer. It is apparent from the testimony of witnesses before the committee that some of the banks and cattle loan associations frightened the stockmen into opposing legislation by telling them they would have to pay their notes; that this agitation was bad for the country—all a part of the same general system and propaganda to frighten the American producer as to any legislation, and to some extent it has been successful, and just this morning I am in receipt of a telegram from my State, as other Senators are receiving them from their States, saying that this is no time for agitation; that it all hurts the producer. These telegrams come from those who are in close connection with the packers, and the packer influence will be found in practically every case. When prices were good, and we started on the investigation, we were told that it was no time to do it, because agitation would bring down the prices. Now, when the prices of cattle and hogs are as low as they could possibly get no agitation can hurt them, and it is a good time to agitate. It certainly can do no harm.

It was charged in pamphlets issued by the packers that the Federal Trade Commission had suppressed evidence; that they had not brought in all of the letters taken; and when the representatives of the packers before the Agriculture Committee were questioned as to this the discovery was made that there were about 18 letters, seeming to be of substantial importance, that were not developed by the commission.

The Federal Trade Commission, and especially Mr. Colver, have been assailed in that part of the press controlled or influenced by the packers and their satellites in the same manner that all men are assailed who try to do any real service for the public at large.

Mr. Colver can well afford to take the abuse and criticism that has been heaped upon him; likewise the other members of the commission. They have performed a difficult task—a thankless task. Some day their work will be appreciated. Some day those who now lack vision to see what the ultimate result of monopoly, greed, and avarice will be in this country will wish that they had paid some attention to the recommendations and the work of this commission. The easy road for the commission would have been to make a superficial investigation, not drawing upon their heads the wrath of the great special interests of the country, but, having been directed by the President to make the investigation, they proceeded to do it without fear and without favor. And while there may be mistakes, as there naturally would be in a work of such magnitude, the record of the commission will stand as a monument of faithful service to the people of this country. No abuse can tear it down. It will be read and studied in the days and years to come by the people upon the farms, as well as by the consumers; by all classes which have been the victims of the high-handed, monopolistic robbery of this great combination. I present and place in the RECORD a summary of the commission's findings:

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS.

Five corporations—Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co. (Inc.), and the Cudahy Packing Co.—hereafter referred to as the Big Five or the packers, together with their subsidiaries and affiliated companies, not only have a monopolistic control over the American meat industry, but have secured control, similar in purpose if not yet in extent, over the principal substitutes for meat, such as eggs, cheese, and vegetable-oil products, and are rapidly extending their power to cover fish and nearly every kind of foodstuff.

In addition to these immense properties in the United States, the Armour, Swift, Morris, and Wilson interests, either separately or jointly, own or control more than half of the export-meat production of the Argentine, Brazil, and Uruguay, and have large investments in other surplus meat-producing countries, including Australia. Under present shipping conditions the big American packers control more than half of the meat upon which the Allies are dependent.

The monopolistic position of the Big Five is based not only upon the large proportion of the meat business which they handle, ranging from 61 to 86 per cent in the principal lines, but primarily upon their ownership, separately or jointly, of stockyards, car lines, cold-storage plants, branch houses, and the other essential facilities for the distribution of perishable foods.

The control of these five great corporations, furthermore, rests in the hands of a small group of individuals, namely, J. Ogden Armour, the Swift brothers, the Morris brothers, Thomas E. Wilson (acting under the veto of a small group of bankers), and the Cudahys. (Part I, p. 31.)

* * * * * * *

The menace of this concentrated control of the Nation's food is increased by the fact that these five corporations and their five hundred and odd subsidiary, controlled, and affiliated companies are bound together by joint ownership, agreements, understandings, communities of interest, and family relationships.

The combination among the Big Five is not a casual agreement brought about by indirect and obscure methods, but a definite and positive conspiracy for the purpose of regulating purchases of live stock and controlling the price of meat, the terms of the conspiracy being found in certain documents which are in our possession.

There are undoubtedly rivalries in certain lines among the five corporations. Their agreements do not cover every phase of their manifold activities, nor is each of the five corporations a party to all agreements and understandings which exist. Each of the companies is free to secure advantages and profits for itself so long as it does not disturb the basic compact. Elaborate steps have been taken to disguise their real relations by maintaining a show of intense competition at the most conspicuous points of contact.

The Armour, Swift, Morris, and Wilson interests have entered into a combination with certain foreign corporations by which export shipments of beef, mutton, and other meats from the principal South American meat-producing countries are apportioned among the several companies on the basis of agreed percentages. In conjunction with this conspiracy, meetings are held for the purpose of securing the maintenance of the agreement and making such readjustments as from time to time may be desirable. The agreements restrict South American shipments to European countries and to the United States. (Part I, p. 32.)

* * * * * * *

The power of the Big Five in the United States has been and is being unfairly and illegally used to—

Manipulate live-stock markets;
Restrict interstate and international supplies of foods;
Control the prices of dressed meats and other foods;
Defraud both the producers of food and consumers;
Crush effective competition;
Secure special privileges from railroads, stockyard companies, and municipalities; and Profiteer.

The packers' profits in 1917 were more than four times as great as in the average year before the European war, although their sales in dollars and cents at even the inflated prices of last year had barely doubled. In the war years, 1915–16–17, four of the five packers made net profits of $178,000,000. (Part I, pp. 32, 33.)

I think this later figure is denied in part by Mr. Weld.

Here is a finding by a great commission created by the Congress that the Big Five Packers have manipulated live-stock markets; restricted interstate and international supplies of food; controlled the prices of dressed meats and other foods; defrauded the producers and consumers; crushed effective competition; secured special privileges from railroads, stockyard companies, and municipalities. And yet in the face of such an indictment of one of the great boards of the Government in response to a request for investigation by the President of the United States, Congress was expected to sit idly by and do nothing.

This charge of the commission, Mr. President, is a startling charge. It challenges the attention of the country. It challenged the attention of some Members of Congress and they proceeded, in view of these findings, to try and devise some plan to remedy them and prevent such practices in the future. Their task was not easy. Accused of being agitators, destroyers of property, creators of soviet government, and desiring to see their names in the papers.

It may be a subject of derision and joking by some Members of this body. It may be that people can sit back in smug complacency, and at luncheons and banquets and on golf links denounce the Federal Trade Commission, and laugh at the charges they have made, but it will be well for men to awaken to the fact that throughout the country, with the exception of the places where packer influences can reach, men and women have been calmly considering this report of the Federal Trade Commission. Men and women of the country believe in the Federal Trade Commission, and these men and women expect some action to be taken. It is not a joke with them.

They are not ready to believe, while not feeling harshly, that the packing combination is absolutely without guile. They hear the slogan "Let business alone," and to a great extent they believe in it. No one wants to injure honest business; no one wants to disturb the packers in carrying on honest business. But the people are not content to let alone a business that is building up a monopoly in food products, and they do not propose to be stifled by any slogan such as "Let business alone." Let business be "on the square" and it will be let alone.

Of course, such remarks from me would perhaps not be considered unusual, as I may be regarded as somewhat radical, although I try not to be. But when I produce a few words from the great conservative leader of the Senate to substantiate what I have said, my words may not appear quite so radical. The same fight was going on in 1906 in an attempt to secure a meat-inspection law. The same tactics were being employed, the same charges being made. Finally the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], one of the greatest Senators, of course, who ever sat in this body, uttered language which, when I read it, I could hardly believe was uttered by him. In a speech on this floor with reference to that he said, on June 20, 1906:

I believe that the American people are an honest people and that the mass of the American business men are honest men, and that is the reason why I feel as strongly as I do about this group of packers in Chicago, who discredit us all and injure our good name everywhere.

And then a little further on in the same speech:

What has been the history of that group of men who run those packing establishments? It has been a history of utter defiance of law and of public opinion. It is only the other day that they were convicted of violating the Elkins law in connection with the Burlington & Quincy road. They barely escaped another charged under the immunity decision. It is less than a year since Sulzberger—if that is the name—was fined $25,000 for a violation of the law. They have been going on for years in that way, with a coarse defiance of public opinion and of the law.

Further on in the same speech:

Mr. President, I have no sympathy whatever with the socialistic movements that are going on to take possession of all sorts of business and all so-called "public utilities," whether municipal, State, or National. I believe the movement, if successful, means the destruction of the Government, which we reverence and love and which it has taken us a hundred years to build up.

But I say, Mr. President, and I say it in all seriousness, that those packers in Chicago and those owners of the Standard Oil have done more to advance socialism and anarchism and unrest and agitation than all the socialistic agitators who stand to-day between the oceans.

That sounds almost like a Progressive speech. It is stronger language than even some Progressives would be willing to use.

So this same plan of operation has been going on through all these years.

MONOPOLISTIC POSITION IN THE MEAT INDUSTRY.

The primary need and justification of legislation to supervise and regulate the meat-packing industry as proposed in this bill is the fact, as before stated, that the business of slaughtering live stock and distributing meat at wholesale in the United States is effectively controlled by the five principal packers—Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co. (Inc.), and the Cudahy Packing Co.—who combined have a substantial and growing monopoly in the business; that such monopoly prevents or hinders the free flow of commerce between the States, and that it is to the public interest that such obstacles to commerce be removed.

No amount of explaining by high-priced accountants; no amount of deception as to meager profits on the overturn; no legerdemain of bookkeeping can disprove the fact that is established by the report of the Federal Trade Commission, by the actual relative buying in the market places, and by the evidence in the hearings that these five packers have a practical monopoly of the meat slaughter and distribution in the United States.

There is no intention on the part of anyone to injure these packing companies. No one wants to do that. They have performed and do perform an absolutely necessary service to the public. There is need for large organizations to do this work, but can it not be carried out without combinations, monopolies, and restraints of trade among the organizations engaged in that service? The board provided under this bill would not be for the purpose of injuring the packers, but simply for the purpose of seeing that not only the packers but the producers and the consumers have a square deal in the American market places. There should be no monopolistic advantage to these few packers over the smaller companies who do local service in slaughtering and distributing the products near home.

In order to arouse opposition to any legislation the various propaganda institutions of the packers tried to create the impression that all bills introduced are intended to destroy them or to disrupt their service. It is not so. The same argument was used as to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The same argument was used as to meat inspection of the packers. It is always used by public utility institutions where they desire to prevent any regulatory legislation.

The object of this measure is to insure by Federal publicity, supervision, and regulation that these great institutions which they confessedly in the past say often violated the laws may be compelled to deal fairly and honestly with the producing public as well as with the consuming public; that they operate with a due regard for the law and the public interest; and that other companies may have a fair chance to live and develop without the fear of this great monopoly or without being subservient to its favor.

I do not propose to enter into a long analysis of the evidence supporting the conclusions of the Federal Trade Commission. There are six volumes, and after reading these six volumes if the reader is not satisfied he can follow through six more volumes of the hearings before the Senate committee and a large number of volumes of the House Agriculture Committee. I do want to follow, however, a few of the significant things as to the monopoly as to stockyards control, refrigerator cars, and methods by which the combination works.

First in importance are the statistics of the proportion which these five companies (or companies controlled by them or by the individual members of the Swift, Armour, Morris, Wilson, and Cudahy families) have in the total stockyards business of the country and in the total slaughtering business of the country, in the number of refrigerator cars that transport the meat, and in the total number of branch houses and car routes by which the interstate distribution of meats is principally carried out.

These statistics were furnished to the Federal Trade Commission by the various companies in these businesses on schedules the correctness of which had to be certified under penalty for false statement. The canvass of companies engaged in interstate commerce in these lines of business was thorough and substantially all were covered, so that there is no doubt or denial of the base on which the proportions of the five packers are computed. Furthermore, the companies classified as subsidiary to or affiliated with the five parent companies were so classified on the basis of schedules of stockholdings similarly certified.

A summary of the statistics given by the commission as respects the control of the meat industry and of facilities therein may well be introduced here. It is from Part I, pages 260–261, omitting for the present the parts of the table not relating to meat:

STOCKYARDS.

As to the monopolistic features of stockyards control by the five packers, the report of the commission says:

In a summary of the control of stockyards, or live-stock marketing facilities, by the big packers the principal points to be noted are:

1. Although there are 50 stockyards in the United States at which live stock are bought and sold, more than 69 per cent of the animals pass through 12 of the 50 yards, and the 4 largest yards alone receive more than 52 per cent of the cattle, 43 per cent of the hogs, and 51 per cent of the sheep.

2. The five big packers either jointly or separately have an interest in 28 of the 50 market yards; they control the majority of voting stock in 22 of these yards and are jointly interested in 15 of them. More than 84 per cent of the animals pass through the yards in which they have an interest. (Part III, p. 11.)

* * * * * * *

8. Although an increase in the number of stockyards markets and meat-packing centers may be regarded as desirable the big packers use their power to prevent the development of such additional market and slaughtering centers. (Part III, p. 12.)

* * * * * * *

The markets which dominate all others and which largely determine the price of cattle, hogs, and sheep for the entire country are Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis, and Omaha. Of these, Chicago and Kansas City are the most important. Usually no price is quoted at any of the smaller markets until telegraphic communication has been had with Chicago or Kansas City. These two markets are the big packing centers of the United States, and the prices established there are largely followed by the other markets. (Part III, p. 15.)

STOCKYARDS MONOPOLIES.

Stockyards companies generally own or control all the available land within the yards. At most of the important yards the land surrounding them is owned by so-called land development companies which are controlled by the principal stockholders of the yards companies. This control over available land gives the principal owners of stockyards companies a practical monopoly of many of the important businesses conducted at the yards and an influence over several other yards businesses.

Packing-house sites: Some stockyards grew up around packing houses which were already established. But a large number of packing houses are located on land bought, leased, or rented from the stockyards companies. New packing companies as a rule can secure desirable packing sites only from the stockyards companies or from the land-development companies. The owners of stockyards companies are, therefore, in a position to determine what packing companies, and how many plants, shall be established at the yards.

Rendering plants: Stockyards companies have the power to determine who shall be permitted to buy dead animals at the yards. This monopoly power exercised by the yards has generally resulted in the establishment of only one dead animal rendering plant at each important yard and the making of very large profits on the part of the dead animal rendering companies.

Sites for stockyards banks and cattle loan companies: In order to be readily accessible to business, stockyards banks and cattle loan companies must be located in or very near the stockyards. Generally they can get such locations only by buying, leasing, or renting from the stockyards companies or the land-development companies. In one instance a yards bank leases from the yards companies under a contract which prohibits the yards companies from leasing, renting, or selling to a second stockyards bank or cattle loan company. So the stockyards bank and the cattle loan company which are able to get locations at yards have advantages.

Commission men's office space: The commission men and traders at the stockyards must have offices in or near the yards. They can get such accommodations only by renting or leasing from the yards companies. For the purpose of maintaining such office space each large yard has an exchange building, or series of buildings, offices in which are leased to the commission men. (Part III, pp. 20–21.)

* * * * * * *

RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF BIG PACKER YARDS.

Though the Big Five have a majority interest in only 44 per cent in number of the 50 stockyards where live stock are bought and sold and have a minority interest in an additional 12 per cent of them—which gives them an interest in 56 per cent of the marketing yards—more than 84 per cent of all the animals which are marketed at stockyards in the United States pass through the yards in which these packers are interested. They have the controlling interest in the marketing yards through which 56.8 per cent of the animals pass and have a minority interest in other yards through which an additional 27.7 per cent of the animals pass.

The live-stock receipts of the stockyards markets in which the Big Five are interested as compared with the receipts of the total number of stockyards are given in the following table:

Receipts of live stock at the 22 yards in which the Big Five have a controlling interest and at the 6 yards in which they have less than a controlling interest, as compared with the receipts at the total 50 stockyards markets in the United States.

In the commission's report, Part III, opposite page 27, is a map showing the location of the 50 stockyards markets and of the interstate slaughtering plants of the United States. The relative importance of the various yards and packing companies is indicated in mathematical proportion by the size of the symbols except that for legibility a minimum size symbol was adopted which somewhat exaggerates the relative importance of the smaller independents. I will not ask to encumber the RECORD by inserting this map, but I hope Senators will look it over. It shows a large control of the stockyards of the country and is found in Part III, opposite page 27 of the report.

The exact proportion of voting stock owned by each of the five packing interests in the stockyards market companies is shown by the following table from the commission's report, Part III, pages 24 and 25:

Big packers' interests in stockyards which conduct live-stock markets.

The packer holdings appearing in this table include voting stock owned by the big packer families as well as the stock owned by the packing companies. Except in the case of the Kansas City Stock Yards Co., the table does not include a considerable amount of stock held by trusted employees, which stock, so far as ascertained, is not held either for the packer families or for the packer companies.]

[1] The commission has definitely located Armour & Co.'s interests in the bearer warrants of the Chicago Stock Yards Co. as 19.4 per cent.
[2] Armour-Flippen interests.
[3] 96 per cent owned by the St. Louis National Stock Yards Co.
[4] Including the Allerton interests.
[5] Morrises secured more than 50 per cent of the stock (see p. 49). In 1917, so far as the commission was able to ascertain, the Morrises owned 42.6 per cent of the stocks and trusted employees 3.2 per cent.
[6] Including voting trust.
[7] 64.7 per cent in 1917, including proxies.
[8] 56.4 per cent, including proxies.

The control of the stockyards is thus fairly apparent. This is one of the causes producing much unrest and dissatisfaction among those who are compelled to ship to the stockyards. They are great market centers; are in their very nature public utilities and give an unfair advantage to the packers; and it must be apparent to anyone that there is an element of gross unfairness in permitting those to whom the producers are compelled to sell to control the market places where they must sell.

In some of the numerous pamphlets issued by the American Institute of Meat Packers, in showing how these bills will ruin the meat-packing business, they concede that stockyards are in the nature of a public utility.

Our contention is that the control has grown to such monopolistic proportions that the whole meat-packing business as carried on by this combination and monopoly can not be considered an absolutely private business, but partakes of the nature of a public necessity and is subject to control by the public.

The commission says in its summary, Part I, page 40:

* * * * * * *

The big packers' control at these markets is much greater than these statistics indicate. In the first place they are the largest and in some cases practically the only buyers at these various markets and as such hold a whip hand over the commission men, who act as the intermediaries in the sale of live stock.

The packers' power is increased by the fact that they control all the facilities through which live stock is sold to themselves. Control of stockyards comprehends control of live-stock exchange buildings where commission men have their offices; control of assignment of pens to commission firms; control of banks and cattle loan companies; control of terminal and switching facilities; control of yardage services and charges; control of weighing facilities; control of the disposition of dead animals and other profitable yard monopolies; and in most cases control of all packing-house and other business sites. Packer-owned stockyards give these interests access to records containing confidential shipping information, which is used to the disadvantage of shippers who have attempted to forward their live stock to a second market.

It further says, in Part III, pages 51 and 52:

Yards services: The big packers' assertion that they offer superior facilities and services at the stockyards controlled by them is not sustained by evidence. The yard facilities of their stockyards have generally been expanded since acquisition by them, but the expansion in facilities have been in most cases only to the extent absolutely necessary to take care of the increased live-stock receipts; in other cases the expansion of facilities has been totally inadequate. There has been much dissatisfaction and criticism on the part of live-stock commission men and shippers as to the poor facilities and services which are given at the stockyards controlled by the big packers.

At virtually all the large stockyards there is complaint on the part of the live-stock producers and commission men that the stockyards companies do not employ a sufficient number of employees to unload and handle the animals through the yards. At some of the yards, as at Omaha, a part of this work has to be done at the expense of the commission firms. The stockyards company receives its regular yardage charges for the work, even though the services are not performed by it. Also, at the large yards there is a wide complaint on the part of both producers and commission men that the stockyards do not have adequate weighing facilities to take care of the heavy business. As a result the producers suffer losses because of the long wait of the animals before they can be weighed up to the buyers.

A complaint which is found at practically all stockyards is that the yards are not kept clean. No doubt this condition in the past two years has been partly due to the general shortage of labor. But the complaint runs back for several years at Denver, Omaha, St. Louis, and Chicago. Another complaint at some of the packer-controlled yards is that there are not a sufficient number of pens to take care of the incoming animals.

These statements on yards services are supported by quotation of reports of a committee of the Omaha Live Stock Exchange, showing complaint of conditions at the Omaha yards and failure of the management to correct them, and by letters from the Swift files regarding conditions at the Denver and St. Paul yards. (Part III, pp. 52–57.)

Bad conditions in the yards services result from lack of competition and are an unnecessary burden on the farmers and stockmen whose animals are marketed through the yards. Complaint is justified especially since yardage charges and feed charges appear unreasonably high. (Part III, pp. 58–61.)

Another effect of stockyards monopoly is the accompanying monopoly of the dead-animal rendering business, and illustrates also the profit in by-products. This is a small business, but highly profitable, and in most yards is owned by one or more of the five packing interests. The commission's report says (Part III, pp. 61–62):

These rendering companies are usually owned by the big packing corporations or individual members of packer families and their more important employees. Thus the Union Rendering Co., of St. Paul, is owned by Swift & Co. The St. Joseph Rendering Co. is not incorporated, but is operated as a division of the St. Joseph Stockyards Co., which is controlled by Swift. At the other large packing centers—Sioux City, Omaha, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Chicago—members of the packer families and their employees hold all or nearly all the stock.

These companies are:

At Chicago: The Globe Rendering Co., capital stock $2,000,000, owned as follows: Morris interests, $1,157,700; Swifts, $255,300; Arthur Meeker, vice president of Armour & Co., $200,000; Wilson, $50,000; and most of the balance held by those affiliated with or employed by the big packers.

At Kansas City: The Standard Rendering Co., capital stock $1,000,000, owned as follows: Morris interests, $606,300; Wilson, $175,000; Swifts, $75,000; Arthur Meeker, vice president of Armour & Co., $50,000; Cudahys, $50,000; and the balance ($43,700) held by those affiliated with these packers.

At Omaha: The Union Rendering & Refining Co., capital stock $100,000, owned as follows: Swifts, $34,000; Morris, $20,000; Armours, $8,000; Cudahys, $15,000; and most of the balance ($23,000) held by employees of these packers.

At East St. Louis: The East St. Louis Rendering Co., capital stock $240,000, owned as follows: Morris interests, $179,500; Swifts, $60,000; and the balance ($500) held by five qualifying directors of the company.

At Sioux City: The Iowa Rendering Co., capital stock $25,000, owned as follows: Swifts, $6,200; Armour interests, $6,200; Cudahys, $5,900; and the balance held by those affiliated with these interests.

The various practices that are injuring the stockmen and farmers shipping to these yards are many.

The yard monopolies at the stockyards are: Control over the dead-animal rendering business, power over the yards' banking business, power over packing-house sites and appurtenances thereto, and power over facilities used by the live-stock commission men and traders. These powers are derived from their control over the stockyard companies.

The complaint of the live-stock men that they do not receive a fair price for the animals that arrive dead or die in the yards is justified by the evidence of the profits of the rendering companies. Among the facts given by the commission are two letters concerning the East St. Louis Rendering Co., in which Morris and Swift are interested but not Armour. These letters show that Armour & Co., not owning stock in the rendering company, arranged to tank its own dead hogs rather than accept the rendering company's price of 1¼ cents per pound when they were worth 4½ to 5 cents per pound. Swift & Co.'s manager also was considering tanking that company's own dead instead of asking the rendering company to raise its price to a fair level, because if the price were raised to Swift & Co. it would have to be raised to the farmers. (Part III, pp. 66–67.)

DEAD HOGS.

DEAR SIR: On April 11, 1912, after some discussion (which was instituted by Mr. Collett, then vice president of the stockyards), you instructed us to let the stockyards company have, for the rendering company, all of our dead hogs which die in our holding pens and those that arrive dead in Sioux City shipments.

The rendering company are allowing us 1¼ cents per pound for the dead, and we figure, on the present grease market, they are worth 4½ to 5 cents per pound.

For one year we had 243 dead, weighing 50,300 pounds. On this volume and with the present high prices for grease, they are making $1,500 per year on these hogs.

We question if it would be advisable to ask the yards company for more money, as if it were granted to us they would also have to raise the allowing price on the dead to country shippers, but we wanted to put this matter up to and get your opinion as to whether or not it would now be satisfactory for us to tank our own dead.

Will you kindly advise?

Yours, respectfully,

DEAD HOGS.

DEAR SIR: Answering your letter of May 15.

This is to advise Armour & Co., starting to-day, are tanking their own hogs which die in the pens or which arrive dead in direct shipments.

Understand Armour & Co. requested the stockyards company to give them more money for the dead hogs and the yards company advised they were unable to do so, and, accordingly, Armour & Co. started to-day to tank their dead hogs.

Yours, respectfully,

SWIFT & Co.,

The report quotes, as illustrative, the contract which all live-stock commission men at the St. Paul yards must sign before they are permitted to do business there. This agreement, among other things, enforces the rendering monopoly, in the following clauses (Part III, p. 69):

It is further agreed that all animals that may arrive dead or that may die in the stockyards of said first party and consigned to or in charge of said second party shall be sold and disposed of as directed by the said first party, as to manner, price, and purchaser.

While it is impossible for the five large packing interests to monopolize the business of loaning money on live stock, their control of the stockyards gives an advantage to the banks and cattle loan companies with which they are connected. On this, the commission says (Part III, pp. 69–71):

Stockyards banks and cattle loan companies: The business of loaning money on cattle is one of the activities of every stockyards market. At these market centers millions of dollars are loaned to producers and feeders of cattle, the cattle being assigned as security for such loans. Loans are usually made through the stockyards banks and cattle loan companies for periods of six months and the interest rate varies from 6 to 8 per cent.

Almost all the banks and cattle loan companies in or beside the stockyards controlled by the big packers are owned and operated by them, and inasmuch as they control stockyards handling over 75 per cent of the cattle bought and sold at all the stockyards they consequently are in an advantageous position with respect to handling live-stock credit.

With the exception of Kansas City the only banks, and in most cases the only cattle loan companies, operating in the big packer stockyards are those owned and controlled by the same packer or packers who control the yards. For instance, at St. Paul, Fort Worth, and Denver, where the yards are jointly owned by Swift and Armour, the banks and cattle loan companies are jointly controlled by these same interests. At St. Joseph and Sioux City Swift controls the yards and likewise controls the only banks and cattle loan companies in these yards. At East St. Louis the Morris interests control both the yards and the banking and cattle loan facilities. (Part III, pp. 69–70.)

* * * * * * * *

The big packers' power over these banking facilities through control of the stockyards is illustrated at the St. Louis National Stock Yards. These yards are controlled by the Morris interests and the only bank permitted within the yards is the National Stock Yards National Bank, which is likewise controlled by the Morrises. This bank advertises as "the largest bank in Illinois outside of Chicago." Its deposits on March 4, 1918, were over $18,000,000 and its loans and those of the National Cattle Loan Co. affiliated with it were over $17,000,000. The volume of the banking business is made secure through a lease dated April 1, 1914, between the stockyards and the bank. This lease expiring May 1, 1928, stipulates that it is upon the express condition that during the term of the lease or any extension thereof "the lessor will not lease any of its property at the National Stock Yards, or any interest therein, to any person, firm, or corporation doing a banking business or allow such business to be conducted therein by any person, firm, or corporation other than the lessee, its successors, or assigns."

Consequently when the Drovers National Bank was recently organized at East St. Louis to compete with the Morris bank it could not secure a location within the stockyards. It was compelled to locate at a point one-half mile from the Exchange Building. Practically all of the business of the new bank is with commission men and other stockyards patrons whose offices are in the Exchange Building. (Part III, pp. 70–71.)

A fundamental advantage arising to the large packing interests from their control of the stockyards, is the fact that this places in their hands the ownership of the more convenient packing-house sites as a weapon against competitors who desire to establish plants. The report says (Part III, p. 73):

Packing house sites and appurtenances thereto: In addition to owning or controlling most of the important stockyards in the country, the big packers, through their land-development companies, also own or control practically all the land which is suitable for packing-house sites near those yards. The independent packer who desires to locate a packing plant at one of these big packer stockyards can not get a suitable site for his plant unless the big packer consents to lease or sell land to him. The big packer stockyards, as a matter of fact, with few notable exceptions, have neither leased nor sold to the independents who desired packing-house sites for businesses of any considerable extent.

The big packers' monopoly of desirable packing-house sites at the principal stockyards and their refusal to sell has forced the independents who desired to locate at those markets to build their plants outside of the stockyards—in some cases 2 and 3 miles away. It is found that the independents who thus locate their plants are given little consideration from the stockyards companies in the way of spur tracks, driveways to get the live stock from the yards to their plants, and other yard conveniences which are afforded by the yards companies to the plants of the big packers. Principally because of these facts, most of the larger independent packing plants are located in rural districts or at smaller markets where the big packers have little or no control over the stockyards and packing-house sites.

At Chicago there are several more or less independent packers, such as the John Agar Co. Jacob Dold & Co. has a packing plant at Wichita which was established before the Cudahy Packing Co. gained control of the Wichita Union Stock Yards Co. At Sioux City the Midland Packing Co. is now building a large plant. (How the site for the Midland Co. was secured from the Sioux City Stock Yards Co. will be shown later. See pp. 77–79.) Practically all the other large independent packing plants are located at the smaller markets or in the country: Jacob Dold & Co., at Buffalo; Cincinnati Abattoir Co., Cincinnati; John Morrell & Co., Ottumwa, Iowa; George A. Hormel & Co., Austin, Minn.; Kingan & Co., Indianapolis; Hammond-Standish & Co., Detroit; Parker-Webb & Co., Detroit; Jacob F. Decker & Sons, Mason City, Iowa; Rath Packing Co., Waterloo, Iowa; Cleveland Provision Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Ogden Packing & Provision Co., Salt Lake City, Utah; Frye & Co., Seattle, Wash.; Carstens Packing Co., Tacoma, Wash.; and Hauser Packing Co., Los Angeles, Calif. (Part III, p. 73.)

That this is true, particularly for cattle slaughter, as to the principal stockyards controlled by the five packers, is shown by the following compilation derived from a table on page 122 of Part I of the report and from the table of their ownership in stockyards already quoted. This shows clearly that in most cases the independents have little or no foothold in these great live-stock market centers where the five packers control the yards.

The matter of the control of packing-house sites is so important that the following statement giving instances where it was used, or attempted to be used, to the disadvantage of independents in Sioux City, Fort Worth, St. Paul, and New York City are quoted from the commission's report (Part III, pp. 74–80):

At Sioux City, where Swift & Co. control the stockyards, Armour & Co. and the Cudahy Packing Co. own desirable packing-house sites on which are located their plants. In 1917 two independent interstate packing companies, the R. Hurni Packing Co. and Statter & Co., also owned small packing-house sites on which were located plants. The stockyards company leased sites to two very small local slaughterers, who killed only a few animals each week.

The Sioux City Stock Yards Co. furnished to both Armour & Co. and the Cudahy Packing Co., without cost to them, lanes or chutes for driving their stock directly from the stockyards pens to their plants and spur railroad tracks so they could load their dressed meats directly from their plants to the cars. At the same time the stockyards company refused to furnish either Hurni, Statter, or the local slaughterers lanes or chutes for driving their animals from the stockyards pens to their plants, and refused to permit Hurni to construct at his own expense a spur track to his plant, and also refused to sell Statter additional land necessary for the enlargement of his plant.

In regard to the desired land or chute for his animals Statter said to a representative of the commission:

"For a number of years I have been compelled to drive my cattle and hogs through the main street of this district against all the traffic. We need a runway along the river bank. This could be built easily with no disadvantage to anyone. Smith Bros. and Sacks [the local slaughterers] could use the chute. From time to time I tried to get a driveway, but Mr. Eaton [president of the stockyards company] always refused. Why aren't we small packers entitled to some consideration? We are in the stockyards competing daily. It isn't so much a matter of the amount of stuff we buy as it is that we are in the game making a competing market. We help make this competitive market, but the small packer has to fight for his life."

R. Hurni & Co. had been operating at the Sioux City yards for many years and was located on a site adjoining the yards. Hurni, because of his proximity to the stockyards pens, did not desire a lane or chute, but asked only permission to cut a gate in the yards fence through which to drive the animals directly to his plant, but the stockyards company refused permission to allow the gate to be cut, so Hurni was compelled to send stock around through the main street referred to by Statter. On this subject Hurni's attorney testified before the commission as follows:

"Q. Was it possible, or would it have been possible, to have permitted Hurni to have had those hogs driven from the hog house (in the stockyards) to his plant without going into the street?—A. Personally, I never had the matter of getting hogs into his plant from the stockyards up with the officers; but I did have the matter of getting cattle into his plant from the stockyards up, and tried to get them to make provision for a gate. One of the stockyards alleys runs immediately back of the Hurni plant and he wanted to get a gate from that alley into his plant, so that the stock would not have to be taken through Chambers Street, but they refused to do that.

"Q. The yards in which the cattle are fed for sale surround the Hurni plant on three sides, do they not?—A. That is true; yes, sir.

"Q. And a gate into the Hurni plant would have been an easy matter to have placed on any one of the three sides?—A. Well, any one of two sides.

"Q. That would have been a matter of a few dollars putting a gate in there?—A. Just a very slight expense; yes, sir.

"Q. For how long a period of time did Mr. Hurni endeavor to secure the privilege of having that gate put in?—A. I don't know that personally. He made an effort to get it 10 years ago, and he never got it.

"Q. Has the Cudahy plant one?—A. It has.

"Q. Has the Armour plant one?—A. It has."

Hurni was never able to induce the terminal railways company, which is controlled by the stockyards company, to permit the construction of a spur track over to his plant, so he would not have to haul his finished products from the plant through the streets to load them on the cars. This haul made an extra cost of $30 a car, in addition to unduly exposing his products to the weather. Hurni appeared several times before the city council with a petition asking for a franchise to construct the track, and each time officials of the stockyards company appeared before the council in opposition and succeeded in preventing the issuing of the franchise.

Hurni's attorney testified before the commission in regard to this matter, as follows:

"Q. Did Hurni make any effort at any time to secure the privilege of a spur track from his plant to the terminal railroad?—A. He had tried from time to time during the last 10 years to get a spur track in order to serve his plant.

"Q. What is the distance from his plant to the terminal railroad?—A. About three blocks on Chambers Street.

"Q. And how did he get his product to the terminal railroad in the absence of a spur track?—A. He had to haul it with wagons to a car that was switched in on Prospect Street.

"Q. And what was the expense per wagon load of that, do you know?—A. I could not tell you that, Mr. Henry.

"Q. You don't remember or recall what Mr. Hurni claimed it to be?—A. I don't remember except in a general way that he considered it a matter of very essential importance that he have a spur track, and said he could not meet competition and could not handle the meat advantageously by having to haul it the distance he had to haul it from his packing plant to the car, which made additional handling and additional expense.

"Q. And in warm weather that was quite a serious——A. (interrupting). It was a serious disadvantage; yes, sir.

"Q. Who had the granting of the spur track?—A. The Sioux City Terminal Co.

"Q. And the Sioux City Terminal Co. was controlled by whom?—A. By the stockyards company.

"Q. And who controlled the stockyards company at that time? Do you know?—A. Well, during the time I speak of it was controlled by the Armours and Cudahys and——

"Q. (interrupting). And Swift?—A. And Swift."

On June 16, 1917, partly because of the failure of his health, Hurni sold his packing plant to the Sioux City Stock Yards Co., which is controlled by Swift & Co. The yards company leased the Hurni packing plant to Swift & Co., and within less than a week the gate leading to the plant for which Hurni had pleaded was cut, and within less than a month the stockyards company secured from the city council a franchise to build the spur track to it. The following letter of July 13, 1917, from F. L. Eaton, president of the Sioux City Stock Yards Co., to L. F. Swift, explains the action of the city council in this matter:

OFFICE OF PRESIDENT,
Sioux City, Iowa, July 13, 1917.

Mr. L. F. SWIFT,
Union Stock Yards, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Regarding the tracks at the Hurni packing house, we asked the council to pass an ordinance giving us the right for that track and also give us the necessary rights of way for the total track changes which we anticipate. We had a meeting with the council and discussed the matter, and they seemed ready to grant everything we wanted and just as we asked, except the track to the packing house. The mayor had opposed granting the track to Hurni, and feels that to grant it to us now would make him liable to censure; therefore he asks us to change the location of the track north of the packing house and swing it 14 feet west of the proposed line, which carries it into the stockyards property and off the street for about 400 feet. It makes a slight reverse curve and is not as good for us as to run it straight down the side of the street. One member of the council, who was rather disposed to side with the mayor, said he would like to know the feeling of the live stock exchange, so at the meeting yesterday the matter was laid over until to-morrow (Saturday) when it will be taken up again, and in the meantime I have a resolution from the live stock exchange and a petition signed by about 90 men doing business at the yards asking the council to grant this right of way just as we asked for. We can get the right of way as the mayor outlines without any question, and may have to take that, although we will try to get exactly what we want as long as there seems the possibility of doing so.

I wired you yesterday, asking you to hold up the crossing, because if we have to take the mayor's line it will require a slightly different angle on the crossing, but we should know to-morrow what we will require. (The omitted part of this letter refers to the prospective location of a hay barn by the stockyards company.) * * *

Yours, truly,

———— ————, President.

To a representative of the commission an official of the stockyards company explained its objection to the building of the spur track for Hurni by claiming that the volume of R. Hurni & Co.'s business would not justify the investment by the railway company; but that as Swift & Co. promised to increase the business threefold, the spur was constructed for the latter company. No enlargements of the old Hurni plant have been made as yet.

In the early part of 1917, H. Statter, the slaughterer mentioned above, because of his local influence, succeeded in forcing the Sioux City Stock Yards Co. to sell him additional land to permit him to grow. There was introduced in the Iowa Legislature the "Thompson bill," which provided that the Iowa Railroad Commission be given power to regulate stockyards charges within the State. Statter was influential in support of the bill. The Sioux City Stock Yards Co. promised to sell him land for expansion of his plant and he withdrew his support of the Thompson bill, which then died in the committee. The following letter of April 18, 1917, from F. L. Eaton to L. F. Swift states the case clearly:

THE SIOUX CITY STOCK YARDS CO.,
Sioux City, Iowa, April 18, 1917.

Mr. L. F. SWIFT,
Union Stock Yards, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of April 13, regarding proposition of Mr. Statter, Mr. Statter has several times intimated that any proposition he made to me would not be acted upon favorably, and that he could do better by going straight to the Chicago people, and I, therefore, asked him to put his proposition in writing, and I would submit it just as he proposed it; and, in fact, I dictated my letter of April 7 to you in Mr. Statter's presence, and have refrained from saying anything further on the subject until after receiving your letter of the 13th. This much in explanation of the way in which the proposition was submitted.

When the Thompson bill was before the legislature, Mr. Statter was its most ardent supporter, and his attorney, Mr. Salinger, had more influence than any other person from Sioux City. It looked very doubtful as to our ability to kill this bill because the sentiment had been worked up among the commission men that Statter and Hurni were not being allowed to grow, and that same argument was used in Des Moines. We were able to curtail the activities of the Hurni people, but in the case of Statter we found it necessary to make the plain statement in Des Moines before the committee that if Mr. Statter needed more ground to grow upon we would be glad to let him have it, because we wanted more business, and finally, with that assurance upon our part, Statter and his attorney, Salinger, withdrew their support of the bill, and it died in committee.

I am therefore anxious that Mr. Statter shall have an opportunity to secure such ground as he may need to enlarge his packing business, but, of course, I have been careful to say to him that we would have to be assured that he was so organized that he could conduct a business that would warrant the use of the amount of ground which he might desire. I have seen Mr. Salinger to-day, and prefer to talk with him, as he is rather more reasonable in his views than Mr. Statter, but Mr. Salinger says that, while he is preparing to reorganize Mr. Statter's company and can sell a lot more stock, it will be impossible to do that without assurances that they could have the ground needed. I suggested to him that, while the stockyards company were unwilling to give an option of three years, they might possibly be willing to give an option for a shorter time, within which time Mr. Statter could make his reorganization, and I suggested six months. Mr. Salinger thought that would be short as times were now, but that possibly they might get through in one year.

I do not see how we would have any use for this ground within a year, nor can I see how it could be put to any better advantage, so far as the stockyards business is concerned, than to have a larger packing house built upon it, and I further believe it would be a good policy for the stockyards company at this time to show to the live-stock people and to the townspeople an inclination to encourage Statter to increase his plant.

Mr. Salinger asked that we submit some proposition to him as to what we would be willing to do, and I suggest for your consideration something like the following:

Agreed to sell Mr. Statter the land north of him for $1,250 and to sell him the land west of him that he desires, provided he shows us that he will have capital enough to carry on his business; that he will erect within a certain definite time a packing plant on the ground now owned by him or the ground agreed to be sold to him, which shall have a capacity of not less than 100 cattle and 500 hogs daily, purchasing his stock at the stockyards or paying yardage on all bought outside except such hogs as he uses in his serum plant, and which he is not permitted to buy at the stockyards; that we hold the ground subject to his purchase for one year; that at any time within the year, at his request, we will agree with him as to a price, or failing to agree, will accept a price fixed by three real estate men, each party selecting one and the two selecting a third.

I fully agree with you that the preferred stock of this company is nothing that the stockyards company should take, and I told him when his proposition was submitted that I did not believe it would be considered; but I also intimated that if we sold him the property we would not demand the entire purchase price in cash, but would carry a part of it for a short time as a lien upon the property.

Under the conditions that are now existing here, I believe it would be well for us to make some such sort of a proposition as I have outlined, and would be glad to have you advise me what kind of a proposition would meet with your approval. If we can agree with him upon some sort of a proposition soon, it would be a good move for us to make,

Yours, truly,

F. L. EATON,
President and General Manager.

As a result of securing this packing-house site Statter in March, 1918, reorganized the Statter & Co. into the Midland Packing Co., with an authorized capital stock of $1,000,000 common and $2,500,000 preferred. Fred C. Sawyer, manager of pork-packing department of Swift & Co., resigned his position with Swift & Co. and became president of the Midland Packing Co., and on January 29, 1919, held more than 20 per cent of the issued voting stock of the company. The other large holders of the voting stock are: H. Statter and his attorney, B. I. Salinger; C. H. Burlingame; John L. Weldon; and D. H. Brennan. The Midland Packing Co. is constructing a large modern packing plant.

Eaton stated in the letter quoted above:

"I fully agree with you that preferred stock of this company is nothing that the Stock Yards Co. should take, and I told him when his proposition was submitted that I did not believe it would be considered."

At Fort Worth, where Armour and Swift control the Fort Worth stockyards and the surrounding land, they have not only repeatedly refused to permit independent packers to establish packing plants there, but also declined to allow either Morris or Sulzberger to build plants at those yards. The citizens of Fort Worth and vicinity have several times asked Armour and Swift to allow other packers to come to Fort Worth, but Armour and Swift have on each occasion declined to do so on the ground that there were not sufficient hogs at the market to support another packing plant. They could not make the same claim in reference to cattle, because such a large percentage of the receipts have to be shipped to other centers to be slaughtered.

At St. Paul, after Swift & Co. and Armour & Co. had received bonuses to locate plants at the yards, a smaller packing concern, J. T. McMillan & Co., was invited to locate there also, but no bonus was offered, and the conditions proposed were such that the move would have been unprofitable for the independent and would have forced it into an agreement for apportioning the purchases of hogs, as, according to a representative of the independent plant, Swift & Co. demanded that they agree to buy not over a certain stipulated proportion of the hogs offered each day, that being the agreement between Swift & Co. and Armour & Co. The small packer did not accept the proposition.

At Wichita, Kans., the Jacob Dold Packing Co., which works in an agreement for purchasing hogs with the Cudahy Packing Co., has a site adjacent to the stockyards which was acquired before Cudahy came to Wichita, but Cudahy controls all the other sites there. An informant stated to an agent of the commission as follows:

"There is not any possibility for any competitive packing company to get in and acquire ground suitable for a plant or to get a runway for cattle in a convenient location in the vicinity of the stockyards without obtaining the consent of the Cudahy Packing Co., or Mr. Cudahy."

At Oklahoma City, Morris and Wilson control all available packing-house sites in and near the stockyards. No other packer could establish a plant there without their permission.

The letter following by Paul D. Cravath, counsel for Sulzerger & Sons Co., to Henry Veeder, shows the measures taken by a big packer to get control of the most available packing-house site remaining in New York:

(Confidential.)

CRAVATH, HENDERSON & DEGERSDORFF, 52 WILLIAM STREET,
New York, May 26, 1911.

DEAR VEEDER: The Sulzbergers have just been in to see me about several matters preparatory to my departure for Europe. They mentioned, among other things, a piece of property fronting on East River and extending from Forty-sixth to Forty-seventh Streets, which is behind the property on First Avenue which the S. & S. Co. owns. The river-front property in question has been occupied by Kane & Wright, dealers in manure, whose lease expires in 1913. The Goelet estate, which owns the property, is now seeking a new lessee. The property can be leased for about $15,000 a year plus taxes, and could be sublet to the manure concern for a fraction of that amount. The Sulzbergers have reason to fear that this property may be leased as the site of a new packing plant. Indeed, they have reason for suspecting that the Josephs are considering a venture in that direction, apparently realizing that their tenure of office with the Butchers Co., New York Butchers Dressed Beef Co., may not last indefinitely. Mr. Sulzberger thinks it would be wise to lease this property and get it out of the market, as it is the most available, indeed they think the only very available, site for a packing plant in the packing-house district. They do not feel like undertaking the burden alone, as they have no possible use for the property.

Max Sulzberger when he goes to Chicago will talk to Mr. Swift about the advisability of arranging a lease of this property in the interest of all concerned.

I am writing you simply to give you the situation and to give you my impression that it is probably worth while to lease the property.

Very sincerely, yours,

PAUL D. CRAVATH.

HENRY VEEDER, Esq.,
125 Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

1 P.

The property in question, on expiration of the lease in 1913, was leased for 10 years by the Goelet estates in part to F. F. and W. A. Kane, and in part to the Turtle Bay Investors Co., which company on April 14, 1910, was merged with Sulzberger & Sons Co., now Wilson & Co. (Inc.).

Thus, with the control of the packing-house sites the big packers enjoy an economic advantage over the small independents, and upon occasion these advantages are employed to the detriment of the development of competition and even to the point of forestalling development by taking over a packing-house site for which they acknowledge they have no use.

The control of stockyards is so important to the five packers that they watch carefully the development of independent competing yards, and in some instances have taken steps to eliminate them. Observe in the following letter by the Swift manager at Fort Worth the attitude toward the Hodge yards (owned by the "Katy" Railroad and competing with the Fort Worth yards, which Armour and Swift control) and toward "these little outside markets and stockyards." One of the yards whose competition the Swift manager complains of is Oklahoma City, which is controlled by Morris and Wilson.

SWIFT & CO., STOCKYARDS STATION,
Fort Worth, Tex., April 30, 1912.

Mr. L. F. SWIFT,
Swift & Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Referring to report on Hodge yards of April 29.

* * * * * * *

It seems to be quite the scheme to bill stuff for Oklahoma City or Kansas City and scoot it around through these yards. For instance, I referred to 16 cars billed for Oklahoma City yesterday from south Texas, directly in our territory; and here are Morris and S. & S. both buying cattle here on this market and still working to get these cattle from our territory for Oklahoma City market, sending them within a mile and a half of our yards.

We have got to keep our eye peeled on these little outside markets and stockyards or we will get hurt with them in time. I referred you to a new stockyard being built on the Rock Island Railroad the other day. It is claimed in every way possible that the Rock Island has nothing to do with it; that a man named Zimmerman is building for dipping vat. We remember all the claims that were made when the Katy yards at Hodge were built—probably not just of this description, but of a similar nature—and now we see the result. They run thousands of cars through there that we could do business on here on this market if they were out of the road. I suggested to you the other day that perhaps it was an opportune time to take a step to get them out of the road. We are naturally located for practically all the live stock of the Southwest. If we could concentrate it here and did not have so many of these little side issues, Oklahoma City and other little yards, it would make a wonderful market, one, I believe, that would dumfound you, yourself.

Yours, truly, J. B. GOOGINS.
[Swift's Fort Worth manager.]

In chapter 6 of Part II of its report on private car lines, the commission explained fully how Armour and Swift brought pressure to bear on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co. to force that company to close the Hodge stockyards referred to in the above letter. These packers wanted the Hodge yards closed because they were competing with the Fort Worth stockyards; they succeeded in getting them closed and thus eliminated the competition.

Other examples of watchfulness of one another and of independents are seen in the following from Part III of the commission's report (pp. 83–84):

The following letters indicate that Armour and Swift were ready to take an interest in the El Paso yards as soon as it was apparent that those yards would interfere with the Fort Worth Stockyards:

MARCH 11, 1915.

Mr. ARTHUR MEEKER, Packing House.

Referring to the attached: In and of itself I see no particular value in our having any interest in El Paso. From an earning standpoint, I think there is not much value there, and if at some future time the situation becomes harmful to any of our interests we can better take the matter up then, in the light of circumstances existing at that time, than to decide upon any policy at the moment.

R. J. DUNHAM.

MARCH 16, 1915.

Mr. L. F. SWIFT, Union Stockyards.

DEAR MR. SWIFT: With reference to the inclosed, how do you feel about our going to El Paso?

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) ARTHUR MEEKER.

CHICAGO, March 16, 1915.

Mr. ARTHUR MEEKER,
Armour & Co., Union Stockyards, Chicago.

DEAR MR. MEEKER: Answering your note of even date, and returning attached correspondence, I feel a good deal as Mr. Durham does.

Don't think the El Paso connection is important for the Fort Worth Stockyards, but if it proves to be important at some future time, think we can take action then just as well as we could now.

In other words, think it better to wait a while and see what develops than it is to agree to any plan of action now.

Yours, very truly,

LOUIS F. SWIFT.

After getting control of the Crescent City Stockyards Co., at New Orleans, the Morrises then acquired the other competing stockyards at that city, as is shown by the following letter:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 21, 1917.

Mr. G. C. SHEPARD,
The Cudahy Packing Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: We are mailing you to-day's Times-Picayune, on page 7 of which you will note that Morris & Co. have also purchased the Union Stockyards; this is in addition to the Crescent City Stockyards, of which the articles in the papers covered. This gives Morris & Co. all of the stockyards facilities in the city.

The Crescent City Stockyards were at the old Crescent City plant, just across the parish line; the Union Stockyards were a new enterprise that was recently permitted by the city at or near the butchers' abattoir, which is within the city limits. This eliminates any possible competition in the stockyards matter, as Morris seems to have taken them all in.

Yours, truly,

THE CUDAHY PACKING CO. OF LOUISIANA (LTD.),
W. H. ARNOLD.

Some of the ways in which control of the stockyards aids in the monopolization of the meat industry have already been cited. Some of the ways in which it may also be used to affect the daily prices of cattle, sheep, and hogs on the market appear in the following from Part III of the report (pp. 86–89):

The power of stockyards companies over the market paraphernalia can be used in many ways to affect the prices of the live stock which pass through them. The control of the Big Five over the principal stockyards, where live-stock prices for the whole country are made, gives them, as the principal buyers, power to affect the prices they pay for the animals. They may do this through the use of the yards monopolies or the yards facilities and services or by using the confidential shipping and marketing information. Numerous instances were found where they have used to their advantage the power over the market which the stockyards ownership and control places in their hands. (Part III, p. 86.)

Such practices are manifestly unfair.

The switching and yarding facilities can be used effectively in determining the daily net prices the big packers pay for the animals they buy. By delaying the switching and unloading of live stock the packers may make a late or an early market or they may cause shippers to lose heavily on shrinkage of the animals. Delays in switching and unloading are the cause of numerous complaints at the large stockyards. There are frequent cases where live stock are turned over to the yards' terminal railroad by the originating line at 8 o'clock in the morning and not unloaded at the yards until noon or 1 o'clock. In such cases the animals can not be placed in the pens and offered for sale the same day. The feed charges are high and the live stock becomes stale and commonly bring lower prices than if sold the day of arrival.

Delays in loading the animals bought by independent packers and order buyers and the switching of the loaded cars to the connecting lines cause frequent complaint at some of the big packer-controlled yards. The independent packers at St. Louis have stated that the big packers' cars are invariably loaded and shipped out ahead of theirs.

Probably the most frequent complaint common to all packer markets is that the yards neither provide sufficient scales nor handle the weighing of live stock with such facility as to prevent long, unnecessary delays in weighing live stock after it has been sold. The shrinkage or loss of weight caused by such delays represents a loss to shippers and a corresponding gain to buyer, who is generally the big packer. (Part III, p. 87.)

The exchange buildings in which the commission men and live-stock traders have their offices are owned by the yards companies. Where the packers control the yards they have the power to refuse to rent space to commission firms and traders who have incurred their displeasure. (Part III, p. 88.)

* * * * * * *

The big packers at their yards may refuse to assign pens to certain commission or trading firms or they may take away the pens which have already been assigned. The following letter illustrates this power:

JULY 10, 1912.

Mr. LOUIS F. SWIFT,
Fourth Floor:

In regard to the M. & K. matter:

I think that Aikin has sold out to his brother, but we have an agreement that if M. & K. (Missouri & Kansas Calf Co.) sell out to any relatives or any friends they can not have the pens that they have been using in the past, so that we still have them blocked. Their business has been killed, and we are looking up the question of the St. Louis end of it; also Fort Worth.

E. L. WARD,
Office Manager of Swift & Co.

The Missouri & Kansas Calf Co., of Kansas City, to which this letter refers had incurred the displeasure of the big packers at Kansas City. It should be noted that Ward states in this letter: "We are looking up the question of the St. Louis end of it; also Fort Worth." Morris controls the yards at St. Louis, Armour and Swift at Fort Worth. (Part III, p. 88.)

The control of the stockyards also gives the big packers a great deal of market information which is not made available to anyone else. The stockyards companies must necessarily possess complete information pertaining to all shipments of live stock in and out of the yards. They also record and compile records showing all purchases made in the market. It is well understood that the stockyards records which show shipments made from the yards to other packing centers or to other markets are private and confidential records and are not available to the public. But the packers in possession of the stockyards have access to this confidential shipping information which has been used for the purpose of "wiring on" and other market manipulations.

At Kansas City, as was set out on page 46 of Part II of this report, the five big packers jointly employ agents to gather market information. The work of one of these joint agents is to secure from the stockyards company's records early each morning a list of the shipments which were made from the yards the day before to other markets. Prior to the acquisition of the Kansas City stockyards by Morris (1912) the agent, jointly employed by the packers, who secured this confidential information from the records of the stockyards paid the night clerk of the yards company $10 each month for the privilege of having access to the records. Since the acquisition of the yards by Morris it has not been necessary for the packers' agent to compensate any of the employees of the yards company for the privilege of examining its confidential records, though the work is still performed by a joint agent. (Part III, p. 89.)

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator if he intends to consider the suit to dissolve this monopoly and the decree entered therein, and what effect that will have?

Mr. KENYON. I was going to speak of that later. There is a consent decree that covers some of the very things covered by this bill. It covers some of the unrelated business and provides that they shall not engage in this unrelated business, but I think the decree has not been finally worked out. There is a controversy as to the stockyards.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not ask the Senator to answer now if he is going to discuss it later on.

Mr. KENYON. I am going to speak of that later. The Senator has probably observed from the papers, which are the source of my knowledge, how far the proceedings have gone, and that there seems to be some trouble about the matter; but in any event, speaking of the decree, if the decree is right, that these things shall not take place, that unrelated business shall not take place, the packers in the statement of their counsel said that the decree goes beyond the law, and that they are submitting to things that could not be done under the law. If that is true, the bill brings the law up to the decree. We ought not to have government by injunction or government in the courts. If there is a necessity for the thing, it should be done by law. I am not quarreling particularly with the decree, but I have not felt that the decree would do very much good, though I hope it may.

The various matters set forth in these extracts show a control of these stockyards at the great market places, and place the seller at a tremendous disadvantage. At the time of the hearings before the Senate committee, there were instances of gross abuse in carrying on the stockyards; instances of shippers robbed of thousands of dollars by wrongful accounting, which should be made uniform, and can be under this commission; excessive charges for hay and other products necessary in the stockyards, and a general situation that reflected little credit upon the owners of the stockyards.

Stockyards should be a part of the general railroad equipment, and under the Interstate Commerce Commission. Until they are so placed, then they should be under the commission provided for by this bill. That there is a universal demand for a change in the system of stockyards is shown by the fact that the packers, in the consent decree in the case brought by the Attorney General and now pending, consent to the giving up of the stockyards. They are to be commended for their action in that regard.

I desire to insert some further figures relating to the amount of slaughter and the percentages thereof, showing the amount of the slaughter that is carried on by the Big Five packers.

MONOPOLIZATION OF SLAUGHTERING.

That the five principal packers practically monopolize "interstate slaughter" (i. e., the slaughter of live stock in the "federally inspected" establishments of companies that are engaged in interstate commerce in meats) there can be no doubt.

The figures of total slaughter by companies thus engaged in interstate commerce are authentic and unquestioned, as are the figures of the proportion of this total which is slaughtered by the five large packers. The figures of total live stock slaughtered by 525 "wholesale local slaughterers" (i. e., slaughterers engaged in the wholesaling of meats but not in interstate commerce, and whose establishments are not subject to Federal inspection) are the result of a careful schedule canvass by the commission of a mailing list of some 1,300 concerns, and "are believed to represent a high proportion of all wholesale local slaughterers." (Part I, p. 106.)

On the other hand, the figures of total slaughter of live stock in the entire country, including that slaughtered by retail butchers and on the farm, are estimates only.

These estimated totals, based on calculations by the Department of Agriculture, have been relied on by the five large packers in their public statements and testimony that they slaughter "not to exceed one-third of the total meat production of the United States." The estimated totals for several years were too high, at least for cattle and calves, hence the slaughter by the five packers appeared to form a lower proportion of the total than was actually the case. The Department of Agriculture has recently revised downward the total estimates on cattle and calves, with the effect of increasing the proportion slaughtered by the five.

Whatever the correct figure is for the proportion of the total kill in the country slaughtered by the five large packers, it is misleading to take into account the slaughter by retail butchers and on the farm, and interstate slaughter must be the best test of the degree of effective monopolization. On this the report says (Part I, p. 33):

> The big packers, in presenting their case to the public, have given great emphasis to certain figures purporting to prove that the Big Five handle "not to exceed one-third of the total meat production of the United States." This result can be obtained only by juggling figures; for example, by omitting from the Big Five's total the animals slaughtered by their affiliated companies. Their statement is further deceptive, because under "total meat production of the United States" are included all the animals killed on the farm for home consumption. On this theory monopoly could not be considered to exist in the meat industry, even if every pound of meat consumed in towns and cities were handled by a single company, so long as farmers continued to kill their own hogs and cows.

Of course, if in getting at the question of monopolistic control we must take into account every hog or beef slaughtered on any farm in the United States for home consumption, then it would be impossible to ever get the figures from which a deduction could be made, and conclusions are drawn in this argument at all times from the slaughter of animals entering into interstate commerce. It is a matter of dispute as to the proportion controlled by the packers of all cattle and hogs slaughtered in the whole country, including those outside of commerce. But it is not a matter of much dispute as to those controlled by the Big Five entering into commerce.

The facts of proportion of control by the five principal packers are thus stated by the commission in the summary (Part I, p. 33):

> The most satisfactory single index of the proportion of the meat industry controlled by the Big Five is the fact that they kill, in round figures, 70 per cent of the live stock slaughtered by all packers and butchers engaged in interstate commerce. In 1916 the Big Five's percentage of the interstate slaughter, including subsidiary and affiliated companies, was as follows:
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Cattle | 82.2 |
> | Calves | 76.6 |
> | Hogs | 61.2 |
> | Sheep and lambs | 86.4 |
> Illustrative of how completely effective competition has been eliminated from the meat industry is the fact that there is only one independent packer—Kingan & Co.—who slaughters as much as 1 per cent of the interstate total of cattle, and only nine independents who slaughter as much as 1 per cent of the interstate total of hogs.

The supporting statistics in detail are given in the following table (Part I, p. 106):

Interstate slaughterers—Big Five proportion of number of head slaughtered, by kinds, 1916, calendar year.

	Cattle.		Calves.		Sheep.		Swine.
	Head.	Per cent.	Head.	Per cent.	Head.	Per cent.	Head.	Per cent.

Armour interests	1,748,909	22.0	446,393	20.7	2,756,522	22.7	7,775,342	18.5
Morris interests	1,148,562	14.5	194,320	9.0	1,107,405	9.1	2,754,915	6.5

Cudahy Packing Co.	620,392	7.8	103,732	4.8	1,231,202	10.1	2,238,176	5.3
All other	1,412,466	17.8	505,608	23.4	1,653,389	13.6	16,320,133	38.8
Total, interstate slaughterers	7,947,798	100.0	2,160,550	100.0	12,172,263	100.0	42,057,402	100.0

It is significant that the five packers slaughter a much higher proportion of cattle and sheep than of hogs. This is explained by the commission on pages 107–108 of Part I, in part as follows:

> The 61.2 per cent of interstate slaughter of hogs as contrasted with over 80 per cent for cattle and sheep represents a difference in the degree of monopolization which the large packers have been able to effect. The explanation of this lies in the nature of the products.
> One underlying explanatory fact is that the by-products of hogs form a much smaller proportion of the live weight of the animal than do the by-products of cattle. The advantage of the big packer in large capital to utilize by-products most efficiently, therefore, has less scope in hog slaughter than in cattle slaughter. The records of the packers show that in beef cattle, in round figures, only 55 per cent of the live weight paid for is dressed carcass, while about 20 per cent is by-products or material for by-products, and 25 per cent is not recovered, being shrinkage representing moisture, etc.; in hogs, on the other hand, the dressed carcass (or cuts of meats) is shown to be 75 per cent of the live weight, the by-products only about 10 per cent, and the loss in shrinkage 15 per cent. Thus the independent's relative disadvantage in handling by-products applies to a smaller percentage of his output in the case of hogs than in the case of cattle.
> Still more important in explaining the turning of independents to hog slaughter is the fact that beef, veal, and mutton are sold almost entirely in a fresh state, and if transported to any distance must be chilled or frozen. The five principal packers, through the operation of their private car lines, have such an advantage in handling these classes of meats that the number of independent packers who do any considerable interstate or export business in beef, veal, and mutton is limited. Nearly all the independent interstate slaughterers confine their interstate trade largely to cured hog products, etc., which do not require refrigeration; and in fresh meats do principally a local business.
> If one adds together the cattle, calves, and sheep slaughtered by the independents, he will find that these three kinds of animals account for only 18 per cent of their kill, leaving hogs slaughtered as 82 per cent of their business. With the Big Five, on the other hand, cattle, calves, and sheep constitute 42 per cent of their kill, and hogs 58 per cent.

Adding cattle, calves, sheep, and swine together the proportion of interstate slaughter by the five large packers is 69.1 per cent. This is on the basis of head slaughtered—a calf or a lamb counting as much as a steer.

It is more accurate to put it on the basis of live weight, since the different kinds of animals vary so greatly in weight. Not all of the companies were able to report the live weight. The five large packers, however, reported the live weight of from 92 to 98 per cent of the number of head they slaughtered, and independents reported the live weight of from 59 to 78 per cent of their kill. From these figures the average live weight of each kind of animals was ascertained. Estimating the weight of the remaining head slaughtered as averaging the same as those for which live weight was reported, the commission found that the animals slaughtered by the five packers comprised 73 per cent of the estimated live weight of all animals slaughtered by interstate slaughterers.

This is set out as follows (Part I, pp. 109–110):

Interstate slaughterers—Big Five proportion of estimated live weight of all animals slaughtered, by kinds, 1916, calendar year.

	Big Five.
	Total number slaughtered.	Estimated average live weight, pounds.	Estimated total live weight.
			Pounds.	Per cent.
Cattle	6,535,332	1,003.56	6,558,597,782	82.4
Calves	1,654,942	181.33	300,090,633	79.4
Sheep and lambs	10,518,874	79.17	832,779,255	86.6
Total cattle, calves, sheep, and lambs			7,691,467,670	82.7
Swine	25,737,269	215.20	5,538,660,289	63.3
Total			13,230,127,959	73.3

	All other.
	Total number slaughtered.	Estimated average live weight, pounds.	Estimated total live weight.
			Pounds.	Per cent.
Cattle	1,412,466	994.24	1,404,330,196	17.6
Calves	505,608	154.24	77,984,978	20.6
Sheep and lambs	1,653,389	77.94	128,865,139	13.4
Total cattle, calves, sheep, and lambs			1,611,180,313	17.3
Swine	16,320,133	196.40	3,205,274,121	36.7
Total			4,816,454,434	26.7

While the commission regards this 73 per cent of interstate slaughter as the best index of the real monopoly power of the five packers, it also sets out the facts as to their proportion of the kill when the business of wholesale local slaughterers is included. The table showing this is here given (Part I, p. 113):

	Big Five.		All other interstate and wholesale local.[1]		Total slaughter.[1]
	Head.	Per cent.	Head.	Per cent.	Head.	Per cent.
Cattle	6,535,332	74.5	2,241,526	25.5	8,773,858	100.0
Calves	1,654,942	62.5	993,096	37.5	2,648,038	100.0
Sheep	10,518,874	78.5	2,888,650	21.5	13,407,524	100.0
Swine	25,737,269	56.9	19,524,568	43.1	45,261,837	100.0

[1] No doubt including some retail butchering. Excluding bulk of retail butchering and all slaughter on farms.

Reducing these figures of number of head to estimated live weight, the commission finds that the five packers, on a live-weight basis, have 67.8 per cent of the total interstate and wholesale local slaughter (Part I, p. 115). In this connection the report says:

The proportion of control of interstate slaughter shown is more significant, especially as to cattle and sheep, than any proportion based upon the combined totals just given for interstate and for wholesale local slaughter. The concerns engaged in slaughtering for the wholesale trade but not sending their products across State lines are very numerous and their aggregate kill is considerable. They effect little mitigation, however, in monopolistic conditions as to price control in the meat industry of the country as a whole; certainly what effect they have is by no means in proportion to the number of animals they slaughter.

The ability of the large packers to undersell the small slaughterer locally is a potent weapon, even if unused, to keep him from undertaking any aggressive campaign to increase his business. The branch houses and "peddler car" routes of the Chicago packers cover the country with such a network that the local slaughterer realizes that he can not maintain himself against their distributing system if he should attract their unfavorable attention by aggressively trying to increase his volume of business. The local packer, though able to compete in the local market, fears to exert his full powers. His strong tendency is to come in "under the umbrella" of big-packer prices and to content himself with a modest share of the near-by business. Evidence on this point and on competitive conditions generally as they affect the smaller slaughterers is given in other parts of the report. (Part I, p. 114.)

The commission's reasons for not regarding the proportion of total slaughter significant are developed in Part I, pages 116–119, and also in a statement submitted by Commissioner Murdock in the hearings before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the Sims bill (H. R. 13324, 65th Cong., 3d sess., pt. 5, pp. 2308–2310).

Mr. Weld, representing Swift & Co., contends, on the other hand, that the large packers are in competition with every pound of meat slaughtered by butchers and on the farm. Mr. Weld's testimony on this before the Senate Committee on Agriculture is here quoted from the hearings on the Kendrick bill (S. 5305, pt. 2, pp. 1319–1320 and 1342–1345).

Mr. WELD. Of course, 81 per cent of the receipts at the principal markets would not represent the proportion that they would have of the total kill or of the total number animals of the country——

Mr. HENEY. No.

Mr. WELD. Because, as I was going to point out later, every animal killed on a farm really comes in competition with the packers and affects the price we can get for beef in New York City.

Mr. HENEY. I will concede that, but it is not much of a concession, because it is so indirect and so distant that the effect of it, as you will have to admit yourself, is trivial.

Mr. WELD. Indirect; I will admit that.

Mr. HENEY. And trifling, because all the effect it has, I think you will admit as an economist, is this, that only to the extent that that isolated district where that slaughter is going on, or that district—I will not say isolated—only to the extent that that district might call upon the central market for its supply, if it did not get it locally, to that extent only is it in competition, and then only indirectly.

Mr. WELD. That is not entirely true, Mr. Heney.

Mr. HENEY What is your theory on that?

Senator MOSES. Has he answered your hypothetical question, Mr. Heney.

Mr. WELD. No; I have not answered that.

Mr. HENEY. No; before we get too far away, suppose you answer that.

* * * * * * *

Mr. WELD. The second point is that even if the five large packers worked together they would not control over 40 per cent of the total amount of live stock produced in the country. That matter we discussed somewhat this morning, the fact that even farm kill comes at least indirectly in competition of the big packers. The Federal Trade Commission says that in round numbers the five large packers together account for about 70 per cent of the slaughter in inspected houses, but in addition to the inspected houses there are a great many small packers which are not inspected at all, and in addition to that, the country butchers and the small-farm kill. So that Swift & Co. feels justified in saying that the five large packers together account for less than 40 per cent of the total kill of the country.

* * * * * * *

Mr. WELD. The point I am making is that the five large packers together slaughter a much smaller percentage of the total kill of the country than is generally thought.

Senator NORRIS. You claim that they slaughter much less than the Federal Trade Commission stated?

Mr. WELD. The Federal Trade Commission limits them to inspected houses. I do not deny the accuracy of their figures.

Senator NORRIS. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. WELD. No; I do not deny that at all.

Senator NORRIS. You do not deny but what they are correct?

Mr. WELD. No, sir.

Senator NORRIS. And it shows on its face what they base it on.

Mr. WELD. Yes, sir.

Senator NORRIS. Whether that is good for anything is another question, but at least we must give the Federal Trade Commission credit for being square on that deal.

Mr. WELD. Yes; except that they criticize us for basing it on the total slaughter of the country.

Senator NORRIS. There is a chance for argument?

Mr. WELD. Absolutely.

Senator NORRIS. And you can base it on anything you want to, but whether it is worth anything will depend on what the man thinks who passes on it.

Mr. WELD. Yes. I point out that even the farm kill comes in competition with the kill of the large packers.

Mr. Weld further testified on this point in the hearings last spring before the House Committee on Agriculture on meat-packer legislation (pp. 2026–2029):

Mr. WELD. Mr. Anderson referred to the statement that we have been making that we handled less than 45 per cent—we thought it was 45 per cent—of the beef production of the country. He gave that as one illustration of the misinformation that we have been giving out. In the first place, what we have been saying right along in our advertising is that we handle less than 40 per cent of the total meat production of the country. When we have referred to Swift & Co. we have said about 12 per cent of the entire production of the country, and almost always have coupled that with the statement that about 22 per cent of the "output of inspected houses." I am not trying to get away from the fact that the five large packers together handle some 71 or 72 per cent of the total meat output of inspected houses, which is the only figure that the Federal Trade Commission gives, but emphasizing the fact that it is only about 40 per cent of the total meat production of the country, because we believe that that is a very significant fact. The point is that we come in competition not only with the comparatively few interstate houses, but with practically every local packer, every retail butcher who does any killing of his own, and we even come in competition with the farmer who kills his own stuff on the farm.

We are selling stuff in practically every railroad town in the country, and we are competing with the local butcher's killed meat in almost every town in the country—that is, where that stuff is killed at all and where it would be killed if we did not go in there and sell, or if we charged too high a price. Even the farmer who kills his own stuff has the privilege of either selling his live animals and buying our meat at the local butcher shops or killing his own meat and selling it. We come in direct competition in that way with the farmers' own butchering. We also come in competition with them indirectly in that way as a potential supply that might be sent to the market and might be used to supply the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Washington, D. C.

As to the accuracy of that statement that we have been making less than 40 per cent of the total meat supply of the country, I am not sure but what Mr. Anderson has got something on us in that respect, so far as the accuracy of the statement is concerned—that is, on 40 per cent, rather than 45 that Mr. Anderson spoke of—because we find in this bulletin just put out by the United States Department of Agriculture it gives the total meat production of the United States for 1919 as 19,445,000,000 pounds; that the five large packers handle 7,798,100,000 pounds, which equals about 40.1 per cent of the total meat production of the United States. So that it looks as though we might have to revise our figures to be absolutely accurate, and where we have said "under 40 per cent" that would no longer hold. I think we should probably change that statement to "under 45 per cent of the total production of the country." I think we would be perfectly justified in saying "about 40 per cent," because according to these last figures for 1919, it is 40.1 per cent that the five large packers may be handling, and the five large packers in competition with each other.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is that 19,000,000,000 pounds inclusive of lard?

Mr. WELD. Yes, sir; and the figures for the packers include lard.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does it include exports?

Mr. WELD. It includes the total output of the packers.

I will tell you it does not include such as the Western Meat Co., in which Mr. L. F. Swift personally has a heavy interest. There is another question—the Federal Trade Commission does include those other concerns in which members of the Swift family have personal interests; and possibly we should include that, and that probably would add 2 per cent or 3 per cent to the total. I think the Federal Trade Commission's figures of 70 or 71 per cent of the total meat production of the country does include those other concerns. We have always thought of it as just Swift & Co. when we have said 12 or 15 per cent of the total meat production of the country, and have not included those others. Do you think we ought to include those others in our advertisements?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it is up to me to pass on that.

Mr. WELD. I would really like to have your opinion; sincerely, I would like to have it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is it material whether you do that or not if all the figures are given so that the public may know just what they indicate and what they include?

Mr. WELD. There might be some misunderstanding when you say "the five large packers" as to what that includes. Of course, if we change this figure now to say "less than 45 per cent of the total meat production," we will be perfectly safe anyway, because even if you include these few corporations that Mr. L. F. Swift has personal interest in, that is not part of Swift & Co., and not operated by Swift & Co., it would still fall within that 45 per cent.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not in that feature that I think it is misleading. I think you mislead the public in using the figure "total production." That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. CHAPLIN. Still, it is a fact that we compete with all that meat that is killed. That is a fact; there is no opinion there.

Mr. WELD. We certainly do.

Mr. CHAPLIN. We sell our meat in practically all the railroad towns of the United States.

* * * * * * *

Mr. ANDERSON. I would not like to think the consumers of this country were obliged to rely upon that competition.

Mr. CHAPLIN. It is the competition we meet.

Mr. WELD. It is very real competition every day in the year; we are up against it every minute. We know what it is to be up against that.

Mr. CHAPLIN. The local butcher who kills meat locally does not buy from us and that increases our stock which we have to sell some place else. It creates thereby an excess supply on the market which we have to sell at reduced prices. The competition is very direct and actual; it is not a matter of opinion at all.

Mr. WELD. At the same time, we are not trying to cover up the matter of the proportion of the inspected houses, either of the five packers or of Swift & Co. alone. Of course, that is all that the Federal Trade Commission gives out. That, in itself, is unfairness on the part of the Federal Trade Commission; it does not recognize that we come in competition with this other vast amount of meat producers in figuring its percentage—this Western Meat Co. that Mr. Swift has an interest in, and Swift & Co., and there are one or two other companies.

Mr. ANDERSON. It comes in competition with meat producers in Russia or elsewhere?

Mr. YOUNG. Swift & Co. are not in competition with other institutions in which L. F. Swift has an interest?

Mr. WELD. There is competition and rivalry in the selling of products; they are selling in the same markets and the same retail stores.

Mr. YOUNG. That would be a little unusual, a fellow competing with himself.

Mr. WELD. That is practically what we are doing—it is what we are doing.

Mr. YOUNG. Suppose at Fort Worth, Tex., Swift & Co. own the packing house and that the other packing house there was owned by the Western Meat Co. Suppose the latter had a packing house there in which Mr. L. F. Swift was very largely interested. You would not call that very much competition?

Mr. WELD. There probably would not be so much competition in that, but there would not be a situation like that in San Francisco, where Swift & Co. has a branch house, and there is the Western Meat Co., and both have salesmen selling to the same stores and each is trying to get as large sales as he can. Of course, the Western Meat Co. has its own brands, ham, bacon, etc., and it is advertising those and pushing those as much as possible.

Mr. CHAPLIN. Mr. Anderson, we do come in competition with foreign meats, particularly pork, and that affects the price of pork in this country.

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, yes; to some extent.

Mr. CHAPLIN. It is a factor, just as the price of wheat abroad affects the price of wheat in this country.

Mr. WELD. And there is pretty definite competition from the Argentine beef in this country.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, the existence of meat anywhere or of any article of food anywhere, I suppose, represents a competition with meat that is anywhere else.

Mr. CHAPLIN. If it comes to the same market.

Mr. ANDERSON. This stuff eaten out on the farm never comes to the market at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN. The farmer eats it and he does not buy in the store; consequently we sell the store less.

Mr. WELD. He eats his own meat instead of buying meat from the local store within a few miles of him.

Mr. ANDERSON. So does the Fiji Islander.

Mr. CHAPLIN. That is not a fair comparison at all. We see the effect of the farm kill at a certain time of the year, about November, when our business runs down and is not the same volume, and when the warm weather comes along our business runs up again. That is how it affects us; the competition is actual and real.

Mr. BORDERS. Mr. Weld, may I ask you a question?

Mr. WELD. Certainly.

Mr. BORDERS. Is it not a fact that the packers have been able to eliminate some of the competition of locally slaughtered cattle by virtue of the ability of the packers to buy cattle and sell the meat therefrom back to the ranchman at a saving to the ranchman?

Mr. WELD. I think that some ranchmen have testified that instead of killing their own cattle to supply their own help on the ranch that they have marketed their stuff in the form of live animals and brought back meat, and found it was more economical to do so. I do not believe that is the usual practice; I think that is probably the exception.

Mr. ANDERSON. Just one question: This 40 per cent figure you give us is all meat?

Mr. WELD. All meat; yes, sir. Now, for beef alone, it is 54.1 per cent; of calves, 30.6 per cent; for sheep, 60.6 per cent; and for hogs, only 30.7 per cent.

Mr. ANDERSON. That sounds very reasonable.

Mr. WELD. That makes an average on the basis of weight for total meat production of 40.1 for the five packers; and I would like to insert these figures in the record, which, as I say, are based on the bulletin recently issued by the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, entitled "U. S. Meat Production, Consumption, Exports, Imports, etc., calendar years 1914 and 1919."

(The statement referred to by Mr. Weld is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

Total meat production in United States of America compared with production, five large packers, for 1919.

	Pounds.
Total production, per bulletin Bureau of Animal Industry just issued	19,445,299,000
Production five large packers:
Cattle, 7,387,000 head	3,656,565,000
Calves, 2,764,000 head	259,816,000
Sheep, 9,978,000 head	379,816,000
Hogs, 21,755,000 head	3,502,555,000
Total	7,798,100,000
Percentage, five packers, 40.1.

To revert to Mr. Weld's previous statement before the Senate committee, Mr. Heney questioned him with reference to the probable proportion of the beef business controlled by the five packers in cities of over 25,000 population—hearings on S. 5305, Part II, page 1346:

Mr. HENEY. One other point I would like to have your views on. What percentage of the cattle that are used in cities of 25,000 and over do you claim the five big packers handle?

Mr. WELD. I do not know; but it would vary greatly in different cities, of course.

Mr. HENEY. Would it not be very much over 40 per cent? I am taking the aggregate of them.

Mr. WELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENEY. Would it not be over 60 per cent?

Mr. WELD. Probably.

Mr. HENEY. You might come pretty well up to the 71 per cent that the Federal Trade Commission is talking about?

Mr. WELD. Possibly, in some cities.

Mr. HENEY. I am taking the aggregate of all cities of 25,000 and over.

Mr. WELD. I am not sure of that.

Mr. HENEY. It would be pretty well up——

Mr. WELD. It would be pretty well up; yes.

Mr. HENEY. Toward 71 per cent. That is all.

Hence, it is quite apparent from the evidence of Mr. Weld that, while it is claimed by him that the five great packers control a little over 40 per cent of the total slaughter of the country, they do control something up to 71 per cent of the trade in cities of over 25,000 population. They do not deny controlling practically 71 per cent in interstate trade. Controlling a little over 40 per cent of the entire slaughter and 71 per cent of the interstate trade, or interstate slaughter—that is, the slaughter by slaughter houses engaged in interstate commerce—they certainly are in a position to monopolize the business. The great power given them by virtue of this large control would be sufficient to add even greater sources of power to that already acquired. The conceded amount of control of the proportion of the live-stock product would be sufficient to charge them with a public use for the benefit of the entire people and argues strongly in favor of some Government regulation to prevent abuse of such great power.

I have placed in the record the statement by Mr. Weld, which I think in fairness should be there, contesting the claims of the large percentage of live stock controlled by the packers, but even from his evidence, where he takes into account the animals on the farms, it is apparent that the five great packers control, according to him, a little over 40 per cent of the total slaughter of the country. The Federal Trade Commission's findings hold that they control around 63 per cent. Under Mr. Weld's figures they control up to 71 per cent of the trade in cities of over 25,000 population.

EXTENT OF FOREIGN SLAUGHTERING BUSINESS.

Under this head I am not speaking about meats or packing-house products exported from this country by the five packers, but am speaking of the business of packing plants owned by the Swift, Armour, Morris, and Wilson interests in South America,

Australia, and other countries, from which meats, hides, and other products are shipped to Europe or are imported into the United States. Chapter IV of Part I of the commission's report covers this subject. I shall give only the facts supporting the statement in the commission's letter of submittal, that—

The Armour, Swift, Morris, and Wilson interests, either separately or jointly, own or control more than half of the export-meat production of the Argentine, Brazil, and Uruguay, and have large investments in other surplus meat-producing countries, including Australia. (Part I, p. 31.)

That the four American packers from 1914 to 1917 controlled from 57 to 65 per cent of the beef exports from Argentina and Uruguay is shown by the following table (Chapter IV, Part I, p. 174):

Summarized for the eight years from 1910–1917, the figures show that these four American companies increased from around 40 per cent of the exports to around 60 per cent (Part I, p. 176):

[2] The total for 1911, as given in the Review of the River Plate, is 3,825,285. However, the sum of the items, as given therein is only 3,775,285. This latter number has been used as the total, since it is impracticable to locate the error.

In Brazil the packing industry is recent, the export trade having started only in 1915 with 8,000 tons shipped, which had increased to about 66,500 tons by 1917, mostly exported by one Brazilian company. The United States packers, Wilson, Armour, and Swift, have been building plants and by 1917 were ready to enter the export trade. While the report gives no combined statistics for exports from Argentina, Uruguay, and Brazil, an examination of the figures indicates that without allowing for any exports by United States companies from Brazil, their exports from Argentine and Uruguay are over half the exports from all three countries.

In Australia the estimated cost of a slaughtering plant and a refrigerating plant built by Swift in 1914, or about that time, was £700,000 to £750,000 (Part I, p. 187). Armour & Co., of Australia, with offices located at Christ Church, New Zealand, was not reported as having any packing plant, but as buying meat, and in particular buying a large part of the output of some of the Australian packing companies. Morris interests are reported to have bought land near Swift's plant. (Part I, pp. 187–189.) These facts are mostly derived from the report of the Royal Commission on the Meat Export Trade of Australia, April, 1915.

REFRIGERATOR CARS.

The bill does not cover the question as to refrigerator cars. It was thought that that was a question to be dealt with by the railroad bill, and we believe the provisions of the railroad bill do cover it. These cars, however, have entered so largely into the creation of the combination and monopoly that some discussion of them is in point.

Beef cars or brine-tank refrigerator cars are the type specially adapted to the transportation of beef carcasses and other fresh meats, if they are to be carried any distance. Of this type of cars the five large packers have an almost complete monopoly. Their proportion of all cars of this type in the country—as of December 31, 1917—was 91.6 per cent. Their proportion of cars of this type owned by packing companies was 93.1 per cent. These figures are the result of a complete schedule canvass. The statistics are given in the Commission's Private Car Line Report, pages 82–84:

It is apparent that the equipment owned by the independent packing companies is small as compared with that of the Big Five Packers. The Big Five and their affiliated companies owned 20,190 cars in 1917; the independent packing companies owned 2,065 cars. Table 6 carries the comparison further:

TABLE 6.—Comparison of cars owned by Big Five Packers and the independent packing companies, Dec. 31, 1917.

Kind of car.	Big Five.		Independent packing companies.		Total.
	Number.	Per cent.	Number.	Per cent.
Beef cars	15,454	93.1	1,146	6.9	16,600
Other refrigerator cars	1,600	67.0	789	33.0	2,389

Tank cars	1,049	90.2	114	9.8	1,163
Miscellaneous equipment	117	88.0	16	12.0	133
Total	20,190	90.7	2,065	9.3	22,255

The Big Five packers and their affiliated companies own over 90 per cent of all the cars owned by the packing interests of the country, more than 93 per cent of the beef cars, and 100 per cent of the stock cars owned by such interests.

An adequate supply of refrigerator cars is necessary for an interstate packing business. It is especially necessary that transportation facilities be adequate in the packing industry, because the storing facilities of most plants are very limited. The refrigerator rooms in a packing plant are for the purpose of cooling the meat after it is slaughtered and are not intended for storage purposes. They are expensive to operate and are never made larger than the needs of the business require. The fresh meat must therefore be continually shipped out or the plant must cease operation when the cooling rooms become filled.

It is necessary to consider all the refrigerator-car equipment of the country in forming a conclusion as to the possibility of the successful operation of a packing plant without the ownership of refrigerator cars. Tables 7 and 8 show the number and percentage of beef and other refrigerator cars owned by the Big Five packers, independent packing companies, and railroads, December 31, 1917.

Total	100.0	100.0	100.0

These tables show clearly the extent of control by the Big Five packers of the beef cars of the country. Of the total of 16,875 such cars the Big Five packers own 15,454, or 91.6 per cent. The independent packing companies own 1,146 beef cars, and other private car companies own but 275. The railroads own none. The packer who desires to ship fresh meats must own his cars, since he can not secure any beef cars from the railroads and has limited opportunity to lease any from private car companies. This fact was testified to by F. H. Frederick, of the Swift Refrigerator Transportation Co., before the Interstate Commerce Commission hearing in Chicago February, 1918, when he said that a man could not engage in the packing business unless he could raise enough capital not only to start a packing plant but to provide his transportation facilities as well.

When Mr. Frederick testified that it was necessary for a packer to own his cars, he was referring, presumably, to all refrigerator cars. It is apparent from Tables 7 and 8, however, that the independent packers have more opportunity to secure ordinary refrigerator cars than beef cars. The railroad interests own 86,410 refrigerator cars and the independent private car companies own 6,003. Virtually all the refrigerator cars owned by the private car companies are leased to railroads and industries other than the packing industry. The packers who do not own their refrigerator cars depend for the most part on the railroads to supply them.

There are certain disadvantages and inconveniences attendant on the use of railroad refrigerators which must be met by the small packer who depends upon this class of equipment. The supply is not always adequate, for although the railroads own a large number of refrigerators they are for the most part for use in the fruit and vegetable traffic, and consequently in certain seasons there is a deficiency in the supply available for the packing business. The railroad car also is often in poor condition. It is used for handling all kinds of perishable freight, some of which, such as vegetables with a pungent odor, render the car unfit for a shipment of meat until it is thoroughly cleaned, which is expensive to the shipper (see p. 48). Railroad cars are often used for ordinary heavy freight, which sometimes damages the insulation or ice bunkers. When the cars are in such condition, the proper temperature can not be maintained and the product often suffers damage in transit.

Packers sometimes use the ordinary refrigerator cars of the railroads for the shipment of fresh meats. Fairly satisfactory results are obtained in cool weather. It is expensive to the shipper, however, for he must equip the car with rails, at a cost of $10 to $25 per car, and hooks costing about $15 per car. Since he can not arrange for the return of the car to his own plant, the expense of the rails is a loss. He can arrange for the return of the hooks, but they are often lost in transit. The packer who owns his car does not have like difficulty, for the hooks are supposed to be left in the car and returned with it to the packer's plant. Lost hooks are a considerable item of expense even to those who own their cars, but the loss is relatively greater to those who do not own equipment. A further advantage to the owner of cars over the user of railroad-owned equipment is in the privilege of routing his car as he pleases. If a shipper is furnished a car by a carrier, he gives the long haul to the railroad furnishing the car. This is frequently annoying and inconvenient, especially in times of car shortage and congestion of traffic.

The advantage to a packer who owns a sufficient supply of cars to take care of his business is most marked in times of car shortage and other transportation difficulties. The Big Five packers are in an especially advantageous position at such times, for they secure the greatest possible service out of their equipment through their extensive force of experts whose business it is to see that the cars move.

The smaller packers owning cars have a great deal of trouble in such times. None of them have enough cars to warrant the maintenance of a car-service force comparable to that of the Big Five, and their cars move very slowly or are often entirely diverted from their own traffic. Those owning no cars find it extremely difficult to secure any from the railroads. During the winter of 1917–18 some plants were shut down entirely because no cars were available to carry the products. Of course, the Big Five packers are not free from these troubles, but their better facilities place them in a comparatively secure position, so that in general their business continues uninterruptedly during times of transportation troubles, whereas the small packer suffers severe losses from a lack of equipment.

The advantages that accrue to the five large packers from their ownership of cars are accentuated by the greater dispatch with which their cars are handled by the railroads. The statistics on this point are based on complete schedule information. They are found on pages 91–95 of the private car line report:

That the Big Five packers receive expedited service from the railroads in the operation of their equipment will be shown in this chapter. Their cars make more miles per day than the cars of any other packing companies or private car companies. They therefore make larger earnings and give better service to their owners than the cars of other companies. The figures of loaded and empty mileage will show that the Big Five packers' cars are almost invariably returned empty to the owners immediately after completing a trip. It will be remembered (see Part I, chap. 3) that the cars of other companies are often reloaded by the carriers and diverted to other traffic, at times even in an opposite direction from home. The statistics on the rates of mileage paid by railroads for the use of private equipment show that the Big Five packers have been getting on the average a higher rate per mile than the independent packers.

For present purposes the operating results of refrigerator cars and stock cars only will be considered. These two kinds of cars comprise approximately 95 per cent of all packer equipment. The operating results of the packers' stock cars and refrigerator cars are compared with similar statistics of operation of the cars of other companies.

OPERATION OF REFRIGERATOR CARS.

As most of the packers' cars are refrigerators, which are used for the handling of dressed beef, packing-house, dairy, and poultry products, the operation of these cars will first be considered. They not only make more miles per day in normal times than the cars of other companies, but they maintain their high rate of movement in times of transportation troubles, such as were experienced in 1917, while other companies' cars at such times move much more slowly than usual. Tables 13 and 14 show the number of cars owned and operated by the Big Five packers in the years 1914 and 1917, the total car-miles, the average number of days each car was in actual service, and the average miles per car per day.

Stability of movement is here the noticeable feature. The 18,052 cars operated in 1914 made an average of 80.3 miles per car per day, while the 16,599 cars in 1917 averaged 80.8 miles. As will be seen later by comparison, 80 miles per day throughout the year represents a very good movement for refrigerator cars even in normal times, yet this rate was maintained by the packers during 1917, a period when a very large volume of freight tonnage was handled under trying circumstances. Terminals were congested and the unloading of cars was therefore delayed. Embargoes and constantly changing priority orders, a shortage of steel, coal, and other materials, and severe storms and cold weather added to the railroads' difficulties in handling the business offered to them. In the face of all these difficulties the big packers' cars were operated in the usual efficient manner.

The average miles per day for the cars operated by the big packers themselves during 1917 ranged from 76.9 miles for the Swift Refrigerator Transportation Co. to 104.3 miles for the Cudahy Packing Co. The very high rate for the Cudahy cars is in part due to the fact that this company considers that its cars are in actual service only 292 days a year, while the other large companies, with the exception of Wilson & Co. (Inc.), consider that their cars operate 309 to 340 days per year. As a matter of fact, Armour & Co., Morris & Co., and T. M. Sinclair & Co. (Ltd.) reported to the commission that their cars were in operation 365 days a year. Such a record would be impossible even if the equipment were new. The cars are necessarily in the repair shops a part of the time and it is thought that the estimate of 340 days of service during the year is very liberal. It is impossible to secure accurate figures on the number of days per year a car is in service, for few of the companies keep a record of the number of days each car is in the shops for repairs.

The cars of the small packing companies affiliated with the big packers make less mileage than those of the parent companies. The Union Meat Co., of North Portland, Oreg., shows only 5.1 miles per day for its cars. These cars are used in a very short local run. The cars of the Pittsburgh Provision & Packing Co. make 19.8 miles per day; Libby, McNeill & Libby, 30.1 miles; and T. M. Sinclair & Co. (Ltd.), 52.4 miles.

[5] Owned 109 cars, 44 of which were operated separately and no operating statistics have been furnished.

The cars of these companies move much more slowly than the cars of the large packers. The cars owned by the Big Five make approximately 80 miles per day; the independent packing companies' cars made 72.1 miles per day in 1914 and but 54.5 miles in 1917. This difference is accounted for in part by the fact that the packers' cars have on the average a longer run than the cars of the small companies. The movements of the Big Five packers' cars are also traced by traffic experts. It can not be concluded, however, that these are the only reasons for the better showing. It may be seen by reference to the foregoing tables that 1,801 of the 1,891 cars operated by the independent packing companies in 1917 were cars of comparatively large companies which ship their products considerable distances and employ competent men to trace them. Even the cars of these companies do not make as good a showing as the cars of the Big Five packers. The better operating results of the latter's cars is probably in part due to their cooperation with and influence upon the railroads in the handling of their equipment.

The effect of blockades of traffic in the year 1917 is clearly shown in the tables on operation of the independent packing companies' cars, which averaged 72.1 miles per day in 1914 and only 54.5 miles in 1917. As previously stated, the packers' cars maintained an average of a little more than 80 miles per day in both of those years. This showing gains emphasis from the fact that a large part of the packers' shipments are in trunk-line territory in which the congestion of traffic was the greatest in the year 1917. Independent packing companies operating in the same territory suffered considerably from delays in their shipments. Cudahy Bros., of Milwaukee, and the Independent Packing Co., of Chicago, are examples. The cars of the former company made 72.1 miles per day in 1914 and but 52.6 miles in 1917; the latter company's cars showed an average of 100.1 miles in 1914 and only 69.3 miles in 1917. Kingan & Co. (Ltd.), operating some 547 cars in 1917, was able to maintain an average of only 51.9 miles per car per day, as compared to 68 miles per day in 1914. The 213 cars operated by the Jacob Dold Packing Co. made 67.3 miles per day in 1914 and their 257 cars made but 42.2 miles in 1917 in spite of the addition of 50 new cars, which should ordinarily show a greater movement than the old. Other instances need not be cited. The poorer showing of the independent packing companies for the year 1917 is evident.

The argument may be advanced that the packers' efficiency of organization was responsible for the good showing in the operation of their cars in 1917 in spite of the transportation difficulties of that year. The argument has some weight and will not be denied. It is also undoubtedly true, however, that the packers had the cooperation of the traffic managers of the railroads to secure for them the best possible service at that time.

INFLUENCE OF PACKERS ON RAILROADS.

A significant effect of the monopoly of these five packers upon the railroads may be mentioned here, though it results from the volume of their business, their "traffic club," rather than their control of refrigerator cars. On this subject the Private Car Line Report says (p. 107):

Cases involving the influence of the Big Five packers on the railroads have already been briefly cited in this report. The influence results from the operation of their cars and the heavy volume of freight tonnage under their control. The packers' traffic has served as a bait to entice competing carriers to grant them special concessions. In indictments now pending it is alleged that false claims for damage to goods in transit have recently been presented by one of the Big Five packers to the carriers. Some of these claims have been paid in whole or in part by the railroads. Mixing rules operate to the packers' advantage. Large allowances are paid to some of the larger packers by the carriers for the performance of a part of the transportation service, such as the loading and unloading of live stock. Expedited service is given to the packers' cars. These are a few of the methods employed. Other cases of various kinds will be explained which involve influence of the Big Five packers on the railroads and employees to secure for themselves and their affiliated companies rules and regulations especially advantageous to their interests.

The report cites two recent cases of indictments for rebating, one against the Cudahy Packing Co., since concluded by plea of guilty on a number of counts and the payment of a fine (United States v. the Cudahy Packing Co. et al., D. C. No. 5901 in United States District Attorney's office at Chicago, Sept. 1, 1919), the other against Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Jersey City Stockyards Co., and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., which is still pending. The report gives a number of letters and documents bearing on Jersey City Stockyards case. This is a case where the indictment charges that the railroad company, which owns the stockyards at Jersey City, leased it to Armour & Co. and Swift & Co. at half what Morris & Co. offered to pay, in return for which Armour & Co. and Swift & Co. agreed to route their traffic over the Pennsylvania. Among the documents are these (pp. 177–179):

On February 4, 1913, the memorandum that was to be used as a basis for formal contract between the parties was prepared. Copies of this memorandum were sent to the interested parties and approved by Arthur Meeker and G. B. Robbins, of Armour & Co., and O. L. Sheppard, general superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING WHICH WILL BE USED AS A BASIS FOR A FORMAL CONTRACT TO BE PREPARED BY THE LEGAL DEPARTMENT.

In view of the fact of Armour & Co. not spending the money on the Jersey City stockyard property as originally outlined, it is their intention to purchase the Halstead property, located at the corner of Seventeenth and Cole Streets; and they wish to be relieved of the former understanding as to expenditure on the Jersey City property, in lieu of which they agree:

First, that all live stock controlled or shipped by them used in this packing establishment will be shipped over the Pennsylvania system to Jersey City and slaughtered at that point.

Second, that any and all other traffic shipped in or out of the Halstead property, which is to be operated by Armour & Co., will be routed and forwarded via the Pennsylvania system, except where it is impracticable to do so.

It is understood that the operation of this contract will be of the same duration as the contract between the Jersey City Stockyards Co. and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

Mr. GEORGE D. DIXON,

Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR MR. DIXON: I received the inclosed from Swift & Co.; have had a couple of meetings with them since, and Mr. Robbins has also seen them.

They say frankly that the present arrangement gives them splendid railway service, and they do not see how they can improve their position any financially by becoming interested in the Jersey City Stockyards, from which I infer that they have recently made some very favorable arrangements with the Lehigh Valley; just the nature of it I do not know. We offered them a 30 per cent interest in the yards, which is practically what we would have had had they accepted it; and that seemed to be satisfactory to them.

I regret the loss of their business for the railroad and for the Stockyards Co., but I do not see how we could have done anything more than we did do in the matter.

Yours, very truly,

ARTHUR MEEKER.

Mr. GEORGE D. DIXON,
Vice President Pennsylvania Railroad Co.,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR MR. DIXON: I am in receipt of yours of July 8 and will endeavor to get some more data on the subject mentioned. Many thanks for writing me so promptly.

You will be glad to know that after protracted negotiations we have gotten Swift & Co. interested in the Jersey City yards, and within a week are going to ship the cattle that they kill in their plant, First Avenue and Forty-fourth Street—about 400 per week—over the Pennsylvania to the Jersey City yards, as well as all their small stock—that is, sheep and lambs and calves—which will run close to 10,000 head a week at the present time, but will average about 7,000 to 8,000 for the year.

There is no possibility of getting their United Dressed Beef Co. cattle, as they have some kind of a deal with the Lehigh, particulars of which I could not get at, which is more favorable than anything we could offer them.

We have made this arrangement at considerable sacrifice to ourselves, in order to bring more freight to your road.

Yours, very truly,

ARTHUR MEEKER.

The closing of the Hodge yards near Fort Worth, Tex., owned by the "Katy" Railroad, was secured by Armour & Co. and Swift & Co., according to the commission report. The private car line report quotes a number of very frank letters showing how the "traffic club" was used by Swift's transportation manager, A. R. Fay, to persuade the Katy to close these yards, whose competition was hurting the Fort Worth yards in which Armour and Swift are interested. Some of the letters are here given (pp. 188, 189):

CHICAGO, December 27, 1916.

Messrs. LOUIS F. SWIFT, EDW. F. SWIFT.

GENTLEMEN: Mr. J. L. Harris, general live-stock agent of the Alton Railroad, reports that in conversation with Vice President Haile of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad in St. Louis last Wednesday, the 20th, Mr. Haile was asking him to try to secure the Fort Worth packing-house business for the M. K. & T. and Alton route, and Harris told Haile that it was no use in trying to get the packers' business at Fort Worth as long as the M. K. & T. maintained a stockyard at the very gates of Fort Worth yards. Then there resulted a discussion of the matter, Harris says, and Haile finally told him if the packers still wanted the Hodge yards that he would bring it about so that they could have them, either by purchase or rental. He asked Harris to find out if the Fort Worth interest still wanted these yards.

I spoke to Mr. Dunham over the phone about it, and he said he would like to look the matter up and suggested that I send word back to Mr. Haile that we would look the subject up and would take it up with him later.

This is for your information.

DEAR SIR: It looks as though we might prevail upon the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad to close the Hodge yards if your traffic department and ours will unite in pressure on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas. I believe this will be more desirable than for the Fort Worth stockyards to buy or lease them. Do you agree?

JUNE 20, 1917.

Mr. LOUIS F. SWIFT:

Mr. Harris reports this morning that at an interview with Vice President Haile, and Vice President Webb, both of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, that Mr. Webb, the operating vice president, was given [giving] instructions to abandon and demolish the Hodge stockyards at once.

This will do away with the competition we have had at the gate of the Fort Worth yards for all these years.

In consideration of this, Armour and ourselves have agreed to give the Missouri, Kansas & Texas our shipments on the fast train from the Fort Worth plant, Tuesdays and Thursdays of each week, as long as the rate and service via the Missouri, Kansas & Texas are equal to that of the other lines.

I feel quite sure you will be pleased to know that this competition is going to be discontinued.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Messrs. Dunham, Donovan, and Googins.

A. R. FAY.

Members of the Swift family are the principal stockholders of the Mechanical Manufacturing Co., which manufactures the Ellis bumping posts for railroads. The Swift transportation manager who succeeded in closing the Hodge yards also succeeded in selling bumping posts to the railroads. This subject is covered in the Private Car Lines Report (pp. 191–193):

Ellis bumping post: The packers' influence on the carriers is also used as a means of pushing the sale of some of the products of their affiliated companies. An example is found in the Ellis bumping post, a product of the Mechanical Manufacturing Co., which is controlled by the Swift interests. The sale of this product for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1918, was $249,715.60. Correspondence found in the files of Swift & Co. indicates that the packing company uses its traffic influence to induce the carriers to buy this post. The following letters, passing between officials of Swift & Co., show the disposition to push the sale of the Ellis post through enlisting the aid of A. R. Fay, transportation manager of Swift & Co., who has charge of routing its traffic:

APRIL 14, 1915.

Mr. GEO. L. CHATFIELD:

I noticed all along the Michigan Central Road that they are using some kind of a steel bumper. Would like to know if they have discontinued using the Ellis entirely and using only the steel and if there is not some way we can get them to buy the Ellis?

Mr. N. B. HIGBIE, Fourth Floor, Office.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your note of April 14, and referring to conversation with you regarding bumping posts on the Michigan Central Railroad, wish to advise that I have been checking up this matter and have not been able to get as much information as I would like, but it is evident from what I have that they have been buying a number of Gibraltar, Hercules, and Buda bumping posts. Also understand they are fitted up at their Jackson shops for making repairs for our bumping posts, some of which have been in service a number of years. Have not been able to learn that they have made any complete posts. I am also advised by one of their representatives that they have not bought any new posts for a long time, but he thought they would need some within a few months. I am taking this matter up with Mr. A. R. Fay.

As to the bumping posts on the Illinois Central—their business runs about even, and I have been assured by their purchasing agent that we are getting all of their business and have not been buying any other posts.

Yours, respectfully,

GEO. L. CHATFIELD.

BRANCH HOUSES AND CAR ROUTES.

With an interest in stockyards handling 84 per cent of the animals that are received in stockyards, with 70 per cent of the interstate slaughter, with over 90 per cent of the beef refrigerator cars, the five packers besides have a high percentage of all branch houses and car routes used in the distribution of meats and packing-house products.

The situation is thus described by the commission in the summary (Part I, pp. 41–42):

Branch houses and car routes: The packers' distribution of their products is effected through a system of branch houses located in the large towns and cities, and a system of refrigerator "peddler car" routes which reach the smaller communities. Swift & Co. reach a larger number of cities and towns by peddler car than all other packers, while Armour & Co. have developed a system of delivering from their branch houses by trucks, reaching by this means over 20,000 towns, and making their total number of towns greater than Swift & Co. (p. 41).

* * * * * * *

This system of wholesale distribution through branch houses and peddler cars is the bulwark of monopoly. There is virtually no limit to the possible expansion of their wholesale merchandising short of the complete monopolization of the primary distribution of the Nation's food.

With the development of their branch-house and car-route systems it is unnecessary for the packers to go through the slow process of building up manufacturing plants. Their initial move is to contract for the output of factories. After the manufacturers have been under exclusive contract for a few years they become virtually "tied" to the packers, and unable to break away and develop new outlets for production (p. 42).

The facts are given in Part I, Part III, and Part IV of the commission's report, and so far as I am aware the record does not show that they are denied. The statistical statement on the number of branch houses (89 per cent) and car routes (90 per cent) is from Part I (pp. 142–146):

EXTENSIVE CONTROL OF BRANCH HOUSES AND "PEDDLER CAR" ROUTES.

Quite as important as the control of refrigerator beef cars is the very extensive branch-house system of the five big packers. This system of branch houses affords them a very large market in which to dispose of their commodities. Not only are large numbers of these branch houses maintained, but the commodities handled by them are various and they are adapted to the rapid development of trade in any new line of foods that the packers elect to take up.

The branch houses, which are located in the cities and large towns, are supplemented by a wide-reaching "peddler car" service, which consists of refrigerator cars loaded with meats and provisions and operating over what are known as car routes. These peddler cars are in effect miniature branch houses on wheels, reaching thousands of small communities where trade is not sufficient to justify the investment in a branch house. The cars operate over established routes, usually starting at a packing plant, though sometimes at a branch house. A development of the car-route idea has been made by Armour & Co. in the establishment of an autotruck distribution service, which loads at the branch houses and reaches a wide radius of surrounding towns.

Number of branch houses and car routes.—The number of branch houses owned by the Big Five and by all other interstate slaughterers is shown in the following table. Swift leads with 367, Armour has 363, and the total for the Big Five is 1,120, or 89 per cent, against only 139, or 11 per cent, for the independents. The advantages of the Big Five in marketing by car routes are about the same, for they operate nearly 1,300 car routes, while independents operate only 141. The table also shows these car routes and the thousands of towns that the Fig Five cover by this means. The figures of Big Five car routes include only the parent companies and their acknowledged subsidiaries, and do not include car routes that may be operated by their affiliated interests.

* * * * * * *

[1] Revision of table on p. 42 of Summary of Report, which included foreign branches and car routes. Number of branch houses is for close of year, 1916, or nearest corresponding fiscal year. The number of car routes is for June, 1918.

[2] Total includes many duplications because frequently the car-route lists show the same town covered by more than one company.

[3] Operated by 7 of the larger independent packers, the only ones known to operate car routes.

[4] Excludes 12 foreign branch houses, 3 o. which belong to Big Five and 9 belong to all other interstate slaughterers.

[5] Includes 20,836 towns reached by Armour's truck sales. In addition Armour reaches 165 Canadian towns by trucks, making the total of his truck towns 21,001 and the total o. truck and car route towns 24,681.

The States of Kansas, Missouri, Kentucky, and Iowa are those in which the Big Five have the largest numbers of towns covered by car routes. The region in which their car routes are most extensive is in the live-stock producing and feeding region in the prairie States from Oklahoma northward; in the nine States of this region their routes (including duplications where two or more of the Big Five cover the same town) reach over 16,000 towns. Nearly 9,000 additional towns are thus reached in seven States next eastward—Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Arkansas.

Of the 20,836 towns reached by Armour's autotruck system about one-fourth are in the South Central States and one-fifth in the North Central States. In New York State there are over 1,000 Armour truck towns; so also in Pennsylvania and in West Virginia. In Texas there are nearly 1,600.

While the Big Five car-route system thus covers strategically an important small-town territory, their branch houses proper are still more adequate to reach the cities and large towns, especially in the East, where the urban population is greatest. Forty-five per cent of the Big Five branch houses are in the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, and the New England States. In general, Big Five branch houses are less numerous in the territory where their car routes are most so. (Part I, pp. 143, 144.)

* * * * * * *

The nearly 6,000,000,000 pounds of commodities sold by the branch houses and the peddler cars of four of the five big packers would probably be well over six and one-half billions if Morris's tonnage were added. This means that in 1916 the Big Five handled in these two channels of their domestic trade something like 65 pounds per capita for the entire population of continental United States. Swift & Co.'s share was about 25 pounds per capita, Armour & Co.'s 21, Morris & Co.'s 7, that of Wilson & Co. (Inc.) and of Cudahy Packing Co. each about 6.

On the basis of 41,752,530 as the estimated population in towns of 8,000 and over in 1916 the Big Five tonnage would amount to about 156 pounds per capita of population living in towns of the size indicated. (Part I, pp. 145–146.)

The five packers' proportion of sales of fresh meats (94 per cent) and cured meats (86 per cent)sold in branch houses of interstate slaughterers, is thus shown (Part I, pp. 146–147):

Big Five proportion of total branch house sales of fresh and cured meats: The proportion of sales of fresh meat through branch houses by Big Five and by all other interstate slaughterers to the total branch-house sales has a significance somewhat different from the proportion either of the number of animals slaughtered or of the live weight. This latter proportion, running from 13 to 37 per cent for the independents, does not furnish the degree of competition for the Big Five that might be expected from this percentage of slaughter if each independent secured interstate trade and entered markets in number proportionate to the size of his business.

Much of the trade of the "all other interstate" slaughterers is not interstate, but local in character. This is particularly true in case of fresh meat. Relatively little of the independent's product is sold fresh in markets beyond the vicinity of his packing plant. Fresh meat requires either immediate disposal in the locality of its production or refrigerating equipment with highly specialized transportation facilities and sales organization, such as the branch house. Disposition of fresh products through wholesalers or commission men seems less satisfactory. While the independent interstate slaughterers in 1916 had a kill of cattle, calves, and sheep, from which most of the fresh meat is derived, representing 17.3 per cent of the total estimated live weight of these animals, they sold through branch houses for the fiscal year most nearly corresponding to 1916 only 5.1 per cent of the total fresh meat sold through branch houses by interstate slaughterers. This is shown by the table below, which also gives a comparison of this character with respect to cured meats

[1] The figures for Swift & Co. are for fiscal year closing Sept. 30, 1916; for Armour & Co., Morris & Co., and Cudahy Packing Co. for fiscal year ending Oct. 31, 1916; for Wilson & Co. (Inc.), for fiscal year ending Dec. 31, 1916.

Cured meat may be held for considerable periods of time, safely transported long distances, without highly specialized equipment, and sold through agencies less highly organized or closely supervised than branch houses. Thus the independents, trusting mainly to sales of cured hog products, and in most cases not attempting to operate branch houses, have a much smaller percentage of cured meat sales through branch houses than their slaughter of animals would indicate. It is seen from the above table that this percentage in cured meat sales through branch houses is only 13.5 per cent, as against a slaughter percentage of live weight of all meat animals of 26.7 per cent (see Table 3, p. 110), and of swine, from which most of the cured meat is derived, of 36.7 per cent. Their percentage of branch house sales in fresh meat is relatively small, because they lack the indispensable means for its wide disposal, and in cured meat somewhat larger, but still relatively small.

The small percentage of branch house sales of meat (fresh and cured) by independents, 7.2 per cent, is, therefore, as contrasted with their percentage of all animal slaughter based on estimated live weight, 26.7, a more accurate measure of their weakness under competition from the big packer who, selling in hundreds of markets, is in a position to wage war on any independent in his particular territory. (Part I, p. 147.)

I have covered the essential matters pertinent to a discussion of the monopolization of the meat trade. I reserve the discussion of the monopoly being created in unrelated businesses to a later period of these remarks.

Would it be possible for anyone to suggest anything further essential to a control of the meat industry than the things I have pointed out under the domination of these packers? Possibly one would suggest the question of credit. With their interest in many banks, scattered throughout the country; with their great assets, they are at a tremendous advantage in the securing of credit. I insert here a list of banks and trust companies in which they are interested.

This legislation is based upon the combination and monopolistic position of the great packers. This monopoly is dependent entirely upon the combination. It is not contended that any one of the Big Five have enough control to become a monopoly.

The commission replied to the President's letter that "We have found conclusive evidence that warrants an unqualified affirmative," and that affirmative was to the question "Whether there are manipulations, contracts, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, or restraints of trade out of harmony with the law or the public interest."

And to sustain this legislation it is not necessary to produce evidence sufficient to convict the packers in a criminal case, nor to be sufficent for a case in equity. It is to determine whether the evidence is sufficient to warrant legislation in the interest of the public.

The President asked, not only as to the law, but whether there was an interference with the public interest. Public interest certainly is involved in the control of the food products of a nation, and in having the channel of trade in commerce unrestricted and unimpeded by monopolistic greed and avarice.

The evidence taken by the Federal Trade Commission and by the committees of Congress show that there is a combination of these packers, and that it is out of harmony with the Sherman Act.

The Attorney General before the committee practically stated that he was of that opinion.

The packers admitted it when they agreed to the consent decree on February 27, 1920. Does anyone imagine they would agree to this decree if they had not been and were not at the time engaged in an unlawful combination?

Of course, the evidence of combination is so extensive that it is impossible, and I have not attempted to review it in detail. What I have quoted so far is largely from Part I of the report.

Part II of the commission's report is directed almost entirely to the evidence of combination among the packers. It probably would be well to have a brief résumé of some of the principal points of evidence in the RECORD.

From 1885 down to the present time this combination has gone on in various forms and under various guises, but nevertheless it has been a combination that the Government has tried at times to dissolve and at other times to suppress. From 1885 it existed through the Veeder pools up to 1902. Later it existed through the National Packing Co. period, where the principal owners of the five great packing companies sat around the table of the board of directors of the National Packing Co. and went through the farce of carrying on a company in competition with other companies controlled by them. That company was dissolved after the criminal prosecution in 1912. That has been followed by the present live-stock pool, which pool is sufficiently shown in this evidence and is proof of combination. It is likewise shown in the understanding creeping out throughout the evidence as to distribution of meats. And, lastly, the international meat pool. On these subjects I present a portion of Part II, pages 11 to 13, Federal Trade Commission report, dealing with the Veeder pool, the National Packing Co., and the present combination:

INTRODUCTION.

This part of the report records the evidence of two generations of combined effort on the part of the American meat packers, particularly the Armour, Swift, and Morris families, to control an ever-increasing part of the food of the American people. These combined efforts extend in an almost unbroken series over a period of more than 30 years, beginning with the agreements and combinations formed by Philip D. Armour, Gustavus F. Swift, and Nelson Morris about 1885 and ending with the present agreements, pools, controls, and multiple communities of interest of their descendants, J. Ogden Armour, the Swift brothers, and the Morris brothers, in combination with various other individuals and corporations.

It may appear needless to go into the past history of these relationships, the principal actors in which are long since dead; but it is necessary to an understanding of the present-day activities of the packers that the actions and motives of their predecessors should be reviewed. The operations and motives of these early days when the monopoly was being formed are no longer in dispute; they have been acknowledged under oath by representatives of the packers, one of whom is still employed as joint agent of the present combination. Thus, for example, Henry Veeder in 1912 made a detailed statement regarding the various pools of which he had been secretary during the nineties. These admitted agreements of the past are a key to the evidence of the agreements and combinations of the present time.

The history of combinations among the American packers shows that there have been three well-defined stages of development, and that one stage has so readily passed into another that there has been practically no time since 1885 when the packers were not combined in some way.

First period, 1885–1902—The dressed-meat pools: There were two of these, which, being given the names of the offices from which they were conducted, may be called the "Allerton pool" and the "Veeder pool." The Veeder pool was abandoned under public pressure less than a month before the Government brought suit and enjoined these practices.

Second period: The merger period, which began with the attempted consolidation into a single corporation of all the principal packers and, on failure of this plan, took form in the National Packing Co., a less pretentious, but efficient combination. The National Packing Co. was liquidated in 1912, a civil suit following the failure of a criminal trial being imminent.

Third period: The present combination, characterized by the operation of the live-stock pool which was formed some years before the liquidation of the National Packing Co., and by the operation of the international meat pool. Under this period are discussed also other agreements and understandings by the big packers.

The divers devices by which the combination has sought control have been repeatedly challenged, with the result that the members of the combination, conscious of public watchfulness, have become skilled in concealing combination and at the same time in giving emphasis to all actions which keep before the public the appearance of competition.

Detection of the combination through analysis of the evidence has been made more difficult because in the harmonious relations maintained by the Big Five as a whole, rivalries among them for the protection of established place in the industry at times simulate the forms of competition. But this rivalry within the combination never becomes competition in truth, for it is never permitted to defeat the common aims and interests of the group. Consequently during the 33 years of the combination's history it has grown greatly, not only in size but in the proportion of the meat and food industry which it controls.

During the early period the packers were in constant conflict, and were able to restrain their competitive activities only by the establishment of a highly artificial system of regulation with weekly meetings, statistical bureaus, and fines and bonuses. During the merger period the National Packing Co. constituted an effective medium for the control of the packers' joint business, but being obviously contrary to the public interest and in conflict with the law, it had to be used with circumspection. Now, with the competitive instinct dulled by years of artificial suppression, it is possible for the packers, bound together by a web of joint interests, to rely on a system of control which is well-nigh automatic in its operations and is devoid of the elaborate machinery of secret meetings, private codes, and punitive checks, which were necessary during the earlier years. The present combination is by no means a mere "gentleman's agreement," for the understandings are definite and precise, and it is far superior in its operations to the clumsy "pools" of the nineties.

On the specific subject of the present combination the commission states its conclusions in these words (Part II, pp. 26–27):

The evidence of the present-day existence of a meat combination among the five big packers is voluminous and detailed. It consists of hundreds of letters and memoranda taken from the files of the packers; the testimony of witnesses at the public hearings of the commission, and the reports of the examination by the commission's agents of former employees of the packers and other persons qualified by business experience or associations to testify regarding various phases of the packers' combinations. This evidence is convincing, consisting as it does largely of documents written by the packers or their agents and including the memoranda made by one of the participants in the combination of the terms and conditions agreed upon at various meetings of the packers.

The principal conclusions to be drawn from this mass of evidence relating to combinations among the packers are:

1. That Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co. (Inc.), and the Cudahy Packing Co. are in an agreement for the division of live-stock purchases throughout the United States according to certain fixed percentages.

That this national live-stock division is reenforced by local agreements among the members of the general combination operating at each of the principal markets, as at Denver, where Armour and Swift divide their live stock "50-50."

That these national and local live-stock purchase agreements constitute a restraint of interstate commerce in live animals and in the sale of meat and other animal products, stifling competition among the five companies, substantially controlling the prices to be paid live-stock producers and the prices to be charged consumers of meat and other animal products, and giving the members of the combination unfair and illegal advantages over actual and potential competitors.

2. That the five companies exchange confidential information which is not made available to their competitors and employ jointly paid agents to secure information which is used to control and manipulate live-stock markets.

3. That the five companies act collusively, through their buyers, in the purchase of live stock, their specific collusive activities embracing:

(a) "Split-shipments" purchases, where by interchange of information the split lots are made to sell at the same price on different markets, regardless of how many packers are involved in making the purchase.

(b) "Part purchases," where two or more packers join in purchasing the live stock of one shipper or producer, each taking a part of a shipment at the same price.

(c) "Wiring on," where a shipper who forwards his live stock from one market to another for the purpose of securing a better price is punished regardless of which packer he sells to in the second market.

(d) "Making" the daily market, where a common live-stock buying policy for all the big packers at the principal markets substantially control the basic prices to be paid throughout the United States. "Late buying," where all the buyers of the big packers stay out of the market for one or more hours after the opening for the purpose of depressing prices, is one of the means of making the market.

4. That Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., and Wilson & Co. (Inc.), through their subsidiary and controlled companies in South America, combined with certain other companies to restrict and control shipments of beef and other meats from South America to the United States and other countries.

5. That the five companies—Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co. (Inc.), and the Cudahy Packing Co.—act collusively in the sale of fresh meat, their specific collusive activities embracing:

(a) Exchange of information regarding "margins" realized in the sale of meat:

(b) Inspection of one another's stocks of fresh meats; and

(c) Joint action in underselling independent competitors by a system of rotation, each of the members of the combination in turn assuming the burden of cutting prices to the competitor's customers.

6. That there is a joint contribution to funds expended under their secret control to influence public opinion and governmental action, and thus to maintain the power of their combination. (The evidence bearing on this point is reserved for discussion in a later part of this report.)

7. That the agreements, understandings, and pools hereinbefore recited are reenforced by the community of interest among the five companies above named through joint ownership, either corporate or individual, of various enterprises. Two or more of the five interests thus have joint ownership or representation in 108 concerns, as far as ascertained to July, 1918. (For discussion of joint interests of Big Five, see diagram in Summary and Part I.)

The combination has had a rather unsavory history. In 1890 a committee of the Senate, headed by Senator Vest, after two years of investigation, reported unanimously that there was convincing proof of collusion in—

(a) Fixing of beef prices.

(b) Division of territory.

(c) Diversion of certain public contracts.

(d) Compulsion of retailers to buy their beef from the great packers. (See report of Select Committee on Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, 51st Cong., 1st sess., S. Rept. No. 829, p. 446.)

This covered the period called the Allerton pool.

The Veeder pools, from 1885 to 1902, have been spoken of heretofore. These constituted a combination in the distribution of meat by the same five packing concerns. These facts were testified to by Henry Veeder in the criminal trial of the packers in 1912. The facts clearly showed that prior to the year 1902 there was an illegal combination, with penalties and weekly settlements.

The commission claims that after 1902 it was only a change in methods. An attempt was made in 1902 and 1903 for a big merger. An injunction had been granted in 1902 and 1903 enjoining the packers from combination in restraint of trade. The merger was then planned to consolidate the five companies and also several independent companies that the Swift, Armour, and Morris interests purchased at the time. On the failure of the bankers to provide the proposed loan of sixty million to finance the proposed merger it fell through.

Swift, Armour, and Morris interests, however, turned in the stock of the independent companies they had acquired to form the National Packing Co., which operated from 1903 to 1912 as a sixth large packing company, owned by three of the five. On threat of civil suit following the acquittal of the packers in 1912, the National Packing Co. was liquidated, and its properties were divided among Swift, Armour, and Morris.

The live-stock pool had evidently existed during the life of the National Packing Co. It was in operation in 1917, according to the commission, at the time it made its investigation, and undoubtedly it is operating this very moment. The record of each week of its operations during the year 1916 is printed in an exhibit of Part II of the commission's report. And the commission seem to have secured records of its operations for the calendar years of 1913 to 1917, inclusive.

The pooling device is explained in general terms in the summary of Part I, pages 49 to 51, as follows:

Under the Veeder pools control of the meat trade was effected by agreements regulating the shipments of dressed meats into the various competitive districts, with a system of fines for overshipments and bonuses for undershipments. This scheme was so thoroughly exposed during the proceedings which led to the injunction of 1903 that it was abandoned. * * * A much simpler and equally effective plan was evolved in the form of a live-stock pool, providing substantially for the division of purchases of the cattle, sheep, and hogs sent to market according to certain fixed percentages, which could be agreed upon for long periods and needed to be changed only when conditions were greatly altered, as, for example, when one of the big packers purchased an independent plant.

This division of live-stock purchases is not only an automatic regulator of the relative volume of business of each of the Big Five, but also secures substantial uniformity of prices paid for live stock, and, consequently, of the prices at which dressed meats are sold. In brief, the prearranged division of live-stock purchases forms the essential basis of a system by which the big packers are relieved of all fear of each other's competition, and, acting together, are able to determine not only what the live-stock producers shall receive for their cattle and hogs, but what the consumer shall pay for his meat.

In order that the working of this system shall be clearly understood, it is well to start with the simplest situation—that of a stockyard in which only two of the big packers are represented and where the division is commonly "fifty-fifty." In such a market the independent packers, local butchers, and speculators will purchase not to exceed 5 per cent of the live stock, far too few to influence the market strongly, much less fix the price. The other 95 per cent of the live stock, it is agreed, is to be divided evenly between the two big packers. This is the situation at Fort Worth and Denver.

Even if there should be no further collusion or communication between the two big packers, it must be obvious that there will be no truly competitive purchases. Each buyer may come into the market with a different idea of what the different grades of cattle are worth, but only a few sales will be made before each will know what the other is offering, and they will come to a common price. In a freely competitive market the common price would tend to reflect the true market value, because the low bidder would be required to meet this price or be left without a supply to keep his packing house running. But in a market where there is an agreed division the natural law of the market is turned topsy-turvy, and the common price inevitably becomes that offered by the low bidder. Thus, even without any collusion beyond the agreement to divide purchases, the market price which the producer receives for his live stock is bound in the long run to be the lowest price which will keep the producers raising cattle, hogs, and sheep and sending them to the stockyard.

But the Big Five are not content to trust simply the inevitable tendencies of such a market. They must be sure of their control from the minute the market opens until it closes. Their buyers are all instructed in advance from Chicago just what they must buy on the basis of the estimated receipts; the buyers for the big packers are held back until one, two, or even three hours after the market opens, and then all go out into the yards together. By telephone and telegraph the buyers keep in constant touch with Chicago throughout the day, so that if the receipts run heavier or lighter than had been estimated, or if any other contingency arises, proper adjustments can be made, which will be in line with other markets and with the activities of other packers.

Throughout the entire market day each big packer knows exactly what the others are doing in all the markets, and at the end of the day, the end of the week, the end of the month, and the end of the year the purchases of all are checked up, so that if any of the five has bought more or less than his share, or has bought "out of line," the others may administer the proper measure of correction. If, for example, a packer buys less than his share over any considerable period, he is liable to have his percentage reduced, while if, on the other hand, any packer tries to "hog the market," he is liable to have the others retaliate by "putting the market up to him."

* * * * * * *

The agreement among the Big Five for the division of live-stock purchases provides not only for the division at each market on which two or more of the Big Five are represented but also for the division of all the live stock which they purchase for the country as a whole. Thus, so far as the big packers are concerned, each knows in advance that his packing house is assured of relatively the same volume of business as the others and that he will be able to buy his live stock at the lowest price that will keep the producers in the business and induce them to ship their animals to market.

FLUCTUATING FLOW OF ANIMALS TO MARKET.

Now, please observe the situation: Here are five packing companies, several of them with subsidiary companies. They have plants in many packing centers. In some of these centers two of the five have plants, in some three of the five have plants, in some four of them, and in one all five have plants. To these packing plants come daily large numbers of cattle and other live stock. Let me take the cattle alone for simplicity: Some days many cattle come to these various markets; some days few. Sometimes there is a glut at one market and a scarcity at others. There are a series of changing, variable currents, the flow of none of which can be accurately predicted, and the daily and weekly flow to all the markets taken together is also variable. That is the situation as to the supply of stock.

CENTRALIZED BUYING SYSTEMS.

What is the situation as to these five packing organizations that buy over 90 per cent of the cattle that come to these large markets? Each of the five has a centralized buying system, which is thus described by the commission (Part II, pp. 42–44):

Centralized buying system: Buying policies and instructions originate in Chicago. Although the Cudahy Packing Co. has no slaughtering plant at Chicago and buys practically no cattle there, nevertheless that company like the others issues its buying instructions from there. Each big packer employs a "head buyer" for each of the different kinds of animals purchased—cattle, hogs, sheep, and calves. These head buyers for Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Morris & Co., and Wilson & Co. (Inc.), maintain their general buying offices in or adjoining the Live Stock Exchange Building at Chicago. After early morning conferences with the different executive officials of their respective companies the head buyers issue instructions and throughout the day direct the buying of live stock at Chicago and every other market in the country where these packers make purchases, except the Pacific coast.

The head buyers throughout the day keep closely in touch with certain head officials in their companies in order to be informed as to what changes in the buying program may be made from hour to hour and also to report conditions on the various markets. These head buyers at Chicago also keep in constant touch with their assistants on the Chicago market and their local head buyers at all the other markets in which they operate.

An elaborate system of private telegraph wires—with several thousand messages sent and received each day—enables the Chicago packers to maintain close contact with market activities at other centers. This private-wire service, supplemented by a larger use of the telephone and of yard messengers at all markets, facilitates complete centralized control.

* * * * * * *

Many cattle and hog buyers of the big packers were examined regarding the buying methods of their companies. All said that they were compelled to make their purchases in line with instructions from Chicago. Each said that these instructions usually prescribed the number of animals to be purchased each day.

Several said that they were compelled to make their purchases not necessarily in accord with the needs of their local plants, but under Chicago instructions. Buying instructions must be obeyed, all agreed. The head buyers at Chicago admitted this. James Brown, head cattle buyer for Armour & Co., was asked by a commission examiner as to how far his cattle buyers on other markets might be permitted to use their own judgment in the matter of purchasing more cattle than instructed by him to buy, providing these buyers saw an opportunity to make additional profitable purchases. To this question Brown made this reply: "We do not pay these buyers to think, we pay them to obey instructions."

Although the centralized buying system of the Big Five covers thus minutely and rigidly all the details of the buying on all the markets, it should be understood that the determination of the general buying policy for each of the packers is so simple that it can be communicated by a word or a sign. All that the general head buyers of the Armour, Swift, Morris, Wilson, or Cudahy companies need to be told to control their policies for the day is one or two words—"Steady," meaning buy at the prices paid for the different grades of live stock on the previous day; "Ten lower" or "Ten higher," meaning buy 10 cents per hundredweight below or above the previous day's quotations. On the basis of such general directions all the minutia of the buying at each of the markets is worked out by the head buyer.

* * * * * * *

But even with his central buying policy thus simply determined the task of the head buyer is extremely complex. He must take into account the different kinds and grades of live stock required on that day by each of the packing plants, must change his plans quickly to offset the uncontrollable actions of small packers, order buyers, and speculators, and must above all so manage his buying as not to put the prices on any of the markets "out of line." It is these detailed problems which demand constant intercommunication between the Chicago office and the buyers at the different markets and require the sending of thousands of telegrams each day during the few hours in which the markets are open.

At the different markets there is a similar centralization so far as the large packers are concerned. The offices of the head buyers of such of the big packers as are represented at each of the principal markets are in the same building and ordinarily adjoining.

* * * * * * *

There exists, therefore, for each of the big packers a centralized buying system so simply contrived and organized that it controls the smallest details of live-stock purchases at each of the markets and can be set in motion and directed by a single word.

This constitutes a situation in which a control of the buying policies of all of the large packers may be effectuated, and only a few men in each company need know that there is an agreement or understanding.

I have not tried to cover all this evidence of combination. It is too vast and would encumber the RECORD beyond any reason, but I am inserting extracts so that if the Senators desire at any time to read them over they will find a rather complete history.

When you consider only the variable flow of cattle, any control of the situation looks impossible. When you understand these centralized buying systems of each of the five packers, control looks entirely feasible. It is not only feasible, it is actually accomplished week after week, year after year. It was being accomplished during the period when the packers were on trial in 1910–1912; it was being accomplished while the House committee was considering the Borland resolution for an investigation, and telegrams were pouring in against it under packer inspiration; it was being accomplished week after week while the Federal Trade Commission made its investigation. I have no doubt it was being accomplished week after week during the time that the old Bureau of Corporations made the Garfield beef investigation of 1904, and I have no doubt it is being accomplished right now as we debate this bill. It has much to do with unrest and dissatisfaction among the farmers and stockmen.

THE PACKERS' "SHARE" OF THE PURCHASES.

What was being accomplished? Why this, that each of these five packers was getting, week after week, almost to a decimal point, his predetermined "share" of this variable, unpredictable total flow of cattle to the principal markets of this country.

You ask for proof of this. It is depicted on the chart, page 50, volume 2, commission report, so that anyone can see, but proof is not necessary, because the representatives of the packers have practically admitted it before committees of this Congress.

I have a chart of that, which I will not take the time to go into, but if Senators will take the chart on page 70 of volume 2 of the commission's report, they will be astounded to find that the percentages are maintained with slight fluctuation entirely through the year, and it is true of every other year, and those are the percentages that were established back in the old Veeder pool, where each packer was to take his proportion of the live stock that came to market.

They do not seriously controvert that proposition. They do not admit the word "predetermined." They say, "It is not predetermined"; they say, "There is no agreement." They say, "It is keen, watchful competition." One of their counsel has likened it to the tremendous conflicting forces of gravity that keep the sun and the planets and the stellar universe unchanged in their eternal places.

I predict that these "shares" fixed by "watchful competition" will cease to be fixed within a few days after the enactment of this bill, and there will begin to show signs of really competitive bidding for the cattle produced by the farmers of our western country. And I venture to say that on the admitted showing of facts, any fair jury would decide that these "shares" would not remain substantially unchanged year in and year out for five, or perhaps for ten or twenty years, without an agreement. With all the masses of letters and documents from the packers' files that support these figures and point clearly to an agreement there is no doubt of it.

It is impossible that this sameness is the result of coincidence. Until the chart can be explained the fact will stand out that it shows more than language can express the absolute combination.

If any Senator will study this chart, can he stand up here and say that these five packers are not in a combination? He may argue that it is a good combination; that it makes for efficiency; that this is a bad bill; that it is unconstitutional; that, while he deplores the situation, there is no way under the Constitution to prevent the robbery of the people; that we have enough law on the subject now. He may say that the Federal Trade Commission is composed of socialists and that the man who secured this information is a socialist; that those who are trying to secure legislation are actuated by political and unpatriotic motives; that it is an outrage to do any disturbing of business; that the slogan should be to let business alone; that it is no time to regulate any kind of business; that sponsors for the bill want to see their names in the papers. He may say all that in rhetorical or loud voice, but he can not truthfully say that the packers are not in a combination.

It must be remembered that the figures of the chart to which I refer are the figures of the packers themselves from their own records. They were found already compiled each week on a separate card, bearing first the absolute number of each kind of animal bought by each packer, the percentage of each packer for the week, the percentage for the year, and the corresponding figure for the preceding year. These cards were initialed by some of the packers. They were the figures used by Swift & Co. in the daily conduct of its business. All the commission has done is to take these figures and transfer them to tabular form for summarization and to chart them on this chart.

THE TATTERED "PER CENT LIVE BUYERS" MEMORANDUM.

Then Senators should follow it and take the first evidence found—and what turns out to be the key to the rest—a tattered memorandum discovered by one of the commission's agents in the desk of Edward P. Swift. The memorandum, which bore signs of frequent consultation, contained only certain percentages, totaling 100, opposite which was scribbled "per cent live buyers." (House hearings, part 32, p. 2373.)

I insert this, as follows:

I will follow that a little further.

The method of operation was shown in a letter, in which was carried these percentages—and will be found on page 66, Part I, of the commission's report—a letter from Mr. Veeder to W. B. Traynor, assistant to Louis F. Swift, referring to these percentages that they had for legislative and litigation matters, and those identical percentages are carried into the purchases and to the sales. I insert their letter and also two pages of the House hearings showing that fact (pp. 2360, 2370, 2372).

AUGUST 23, 1916.

Mr. W. B. TRAYNOR,
% Swift and Company, Chicago.

DEAR SIR: You asked me the other day for certain percentages which are generally known as the "usual percentages." On July 30, 1913, L F S, A M, and T E W agreed with C and S & S upon the following percentages to cover general legislative and litigation matters:

S	35751	39723	44689
A	29266	32518	36582
M	14983	16648	18729
C	10	11111
	100000	100000	100000

Of course, C and S were arbitrary. The A, F, and H figures are the so-called old beef figures, which were based upon the volume of beef business in 1902.

Sincerely yours, ——— ———.

[1] It is to be observed that in no year did any company vary from the "Usual percentages" by more than two and eighty-four hundredths of 1 per cent (Swift & Co., 2.841 per cent in 1915).

And so, building up from 1902 and before the old Veeder pool, where they had the absolute percentages of purchases of live stock, carrying that on into the purchases and the sales now, not only in this country but of all of their sales, is evidence that no man, if he is not so prejudiced that he will not so consider it, can take up and come to any other conclusion than that there is this combination in the market place of the man who is compelled to sell his live stock there.

Notice now how these are carried out.

These "usual percentages" are carried into the live-stock purchases—identical with the percentages that were agreed upon July 30, 1913.

This table in the House hearings is compiled from the table on page 57, Part II, commission's investigation. Not only are these usual percentages carried into the purchase of live stock but they are carried into the total sales, domestic and foreign, and side lines. The table in House hearings, part 32, page 2372, shows this. So we have testimony as clear as circumstances can make it, of the adoption of percentages in all matters between these controlling interests; which percentages are carried into purchases and into sales.

Coupled with this and making it even more conclusive is the exhibit on page 2372, part 32, of the same House hearings.

PROFITS.

Profits, of course, are not in themselves evidence of monopoly. Size does not constitute monopoly, but size may be important as showing an instrumentality for monopoly, and monopoly may be brought about more easily by gigantic concerns than by smaller ones; and profits are an important element for consideration.

I insert some statements as to these.

THE PROFITS.

F. Edson White, vice president of Armour & Co., said, in the Iowa Homestead of April 22, 1920 (p. 10):

A complete analysis of margins and profits of the meat packers renders absurd any and all charges as to monopoly or market dominance or price control. Except they result in big profits, then there is no incentive for business men to break laws or violate the ethics of business in building monopolies or other instrumentalities for acquiring control of prices. Meat packers' profits, when reckoned on the business handled and on the money invested and actually employed in the conduct of the business, are the smallest obtaining in any consequential industry.

William B. Colver, of the Federal Trade Commission, in an article in the same magazine (p. 12), said:

The reported profits of the packing companies themselves are very high. And they are profits on constantly reinvested earnings. The claim of small profits per head or per pound or per dollar of sales is of a piece with the "poor mouth" claims of the packers in the Garfield investigation. Yet in the 15 years since then four of the five companies, whose net worth was then $92,000,000, were by 1919 worth $479,000,000 and had meantime added only $89,000,000 of new cash capital, while they had paid $105,000,000 of cash dividends.

It is a fair deduction from the evidence before the commission and in the hearings:

(1) That these five concerns have reached their present enormous size largely by the capitalization of surplus earnings, which, I may say, represent the results of their monopolistic power to widen unjustifiably the margin between the price paid to the producer and the price charged the consumer.

(2) That their profits during the war years 1915–1917 were unduly large, being greater than during the prewar years 1912–1914 by over three times in amount and by about two and one-half times in rate on net worth.

GROWTH FROM UNDUE PROFITS.

On the first of these points the commission says in its findings, Part V, pages 8 to 10:

THE FINANCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE FIVE GREAT PACKERS.

In the financial growth of the five great packers during the past generation and more a fact which stands out with especial prominence is that the several companies have grown primarily out of profits retained in the business which generally have been held in the surplus account until such time as it was thought expedient to capitalize them through stock dividends or their equivalent. Capital stock has not been increased by sale for cash to any such extent as it has been by capitalizing accumulated surplus. The stock of the several companies, except Swift & Co., is closely held by certain family groups, and, with the exception of Wilson & Co. (Inc), no capital stock has ever been issued against "good will."

It is possible to present figures for Armour & Co. and the Cudahy Packing Co. since their original organization in 1868 and 1887, respectively; for Swift & Co. annual earnings are available since 1896, but prior thereto only partial figures since its original incorporation in 1885; for Wilson & Co. (Inc.), figures since the legal incorporation of the company (originally as Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co.) in 1893; for Morris & Co., figures only for the past 10 years, 1909 to 1918, inclusive.

Armour & Co. commenced business as a partnership in 1868 with an investment of $160,000. In the 50 years through 1918 the company reports earnings of $179,270,000, dividends (or drawings) of $29,866,000, the balance (with the exception of income and excess-profits taxes paid the Government in 1917 and 1918) being retained in the business. Beside the original investment of $160,000, the only contributions to the capital of the company on the part of the stockholders have been $10,125,000 allowed for the Kansas City packing plant added to the main company in 1900, and $3,725,000 preferred stock sold for cash in 1918, or a total cash investment not to exceed $14,000,000. On November 2, 1918, the stockholders' equity in the company, as shown by the balance sheet, totaled $173,092,000, of which $103,725,000 was in the form of capital stock and $69,367,000 in the surplus account. Of the total capital stock $20,000,000 was issued by capitalizing the partnership surplus in 1900, $80,000,000 was issued as a stock dividend declared in 1916, and $3,725,000 was issued for cash in 1918. Armour & Co. thus presents one of the most remarkable instances of financial development in American industrial history. About 8 per cent of the present net worth of the company has come from cash or property contributions on the part of the stockholders. (Part V, pp. 8, 9.)

Let me say this is not an objection to or criticism of size as such, nor of reinvestment of earnings as such, which is often desirable. The criticism runs rather to the origin of these unduly large profits which was in combination and monopoly and to their reinvestment over a long period of years in such a way as to strengthen the monopoly from which they spring and to extend the monopolistic encroachment gradually, yet surely, into competing fields of industry. That is the objection. That is the criticism.

WAR AND PREWAR PROFITS.

The commission summarized its detailed discussion of war profits of the five packers as follows (Part V, pp. 10–11).

WAR EARNINGS AND PREWAR EARNINGS OF THE GREAT PACKERS.

The net profits of the five great packers for the years 1912 to 1917, inclusive, have been found, after adjustment, to be as follows:

1912	$18,035,000
1913	18,581,000
1914	22,894,000
1915	37,385,000
1916	59,236,000
1917	95,639,000
Total six years	251,770,000
Net profits in three prewar years—1912, 1913, 1914	59,510,000
Net profits in three war years—1915, 1916, 1917	192,260,000
Increase, war years	132,750,000

Per cent of increase, 223.

Thus the net profit for the three war years was over three times as great as for the three years preceding.

These figures are not as reported by the several companies, but result from certain adjustments by the commission, whereby income and excess profits taxes, sundry surplus items, and certain other unwarranted charges have been eliminated. That a more intensive analysis would reveal the necessity of making further adjustments is more than probable, and these figures are accordingly in the nature of minima. They show, however, the effect of the war on the profits of the great packers, net earnings being at least $132,000,000 more in the three war years than they were in the three prewar years, an excess of 223 per cent. "Net profit" as used above is arrived at after deducting interest paid as an expense. (Part V, p. 10.)

It is also significant that profits have increased very much more rapidly than sales over this period, despite the increased volume of and enhanced price for the latter.

Only a fraction of these great war earnings have been disbursed in the form of dividends, and as a result the financial strength of the companies has enormously increased since 1914. In that year the total net worth (capital stock and surplus) stood on the books at $293,000,000, while at the close of 1917 the aggregate net worth was no less than $418,000,000. Almost the entire increase is accounted for by reinvested earnings. (Part V, p. 11.)

That the figures are not substantially denied as respects Swift & Co. is shown by the fact that Mr. Weld, representing that company, admits that its profits during the war years increased beyond the prewar level by 176 per cent (hearings before Senate Committee on Agriculture on S. 5305, p. 1370), while the commission on the same basis shows the increase as 180 per cent. (Part V, p. 36.)

If investment be defined as net worth (capital stock and surplus), the following percentages have been earned for the five companies combined:

	Per cent.
1912	8.1
1913	7.0
1914	8.3
1915	12.8
1916	18.5
1917	26.5
Average for six years	14.5
Average three prewar years, 1912, 1913, 1914	7.8
Average three war years, 1915, 1916, 1917	19.4

(Part V, p. 10.)

Some examples of profit may be shown. For instance, the Federal Trade Commission claim in their report that the Omaha stockyards made a profit in 1916 on hay of $237,861,08; that is, a net profit. That is one of the small ways in which the stockmen have suffered abuse in the stockyards, being compelled to take the hay and other feed furnished there at prices on which the stockyards have netted on hay from $80 to $90 a ton in many instances.

The Union Rendering & Refining Co., to which the dead hogs go in Omaha, is operated by Swift interests, according to the report of the Federal Trade Commission, who own about one-half the stock, the balance being divided between Armour, Morris, and Cudahy. And the Federal Trade Commission figure their profits on the actual amount of money paid in, in—

	Per cent.
1913	72
1914	39
1915	67

THE ACCOUNTING SYSTEMS ARE UNRELIABLE, HENCE THE PACKERS' STATEMENT REGARDING PROFITS UNRELIABLE.

Unless the denial of agreement, nothing has been so widely denied by the packers as the commission's conclusion that their profits are unduly large and a public evil. Senators who have been impressed by the volume and insistence of the packers' statements will do well before they place themselves on record to study the words of the commission in Part V (pp. 11–13).

And I will insert in the RECORD that portion of the report. It throws some light upon the famous "Swift dollar."

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE ACCOUNTING SYSTEMS OF THE GREAT PACKERS AND THE COSTS AND PROFITS OF MEAT.

In respect to the profits of the five great companies, one outstanding conclusion which the commission has reached is the inaccuracy of costs and profits hitherto recorded and reported by the several companies, due to the failure to follow certain well-recognized and fundamental principles of accounting. It was not found possible at present to ascertain accurately either the total profits of the great companies or the profits per head or per pound for the principal meat products, owing to the deficiencies in the bookkeeping methods hitherto employed. That a part of this uncertainty is due to the inherent nature of the business is doubtless true; that a part is due to a disregard of the recognized requirements of accounting is also true. These two factors have made it difficult for the Government or for the packers themselves to ascertain in a given year, with even reasonable accuracy, cost and earnings for many specific products, or even for the business as a whole.

Total profits have been found to be inaccurate in that the bulk of the inventories are invariably priced on a market basis, when accounting principles require a cost basis; in that the profits of subsidiary companies are not uniformly taken up in the accounts of the controlling company; in that surplus adjustments are often charged directly to the profit and loss account of a given year instead of to surplus account direct; in that depreciation has not been systematically accumulated; in that unjustified "reserves" have been charged against earnings from time to time, particularly during the profitable war years.

Profits on specific meat products or in specific departments (such as the profit per pound of beef) are not accurate in that no sound cost system has been developed for the packing industry, and the present method of transferring products from one processing state to the next, based as it is on market valuations instead of on actual costs, precludes reliance upon such unit or departmental profits.

The inaccuracy of the present methods of figuring unit costs and profits casts doubt on all the public statements and advertisements of the great packers dealing with profits per pound of beef and of meat products generally.

In this connection it may be said that the great packers, in emphasizing through the medium of public advertisements their profits per head or per pound of meat, tend seriously to confuse the real issue of profit taking. That their profits per pound, could they be computed with complete accuracy, would not exceed a very few cents, if averaged over long periods of time, is readily apparent when total earnings and total pounds sold are comparatively studied.

* * * * * * *

In their advertisements the packers make use of the words "cent," "fraction of a cent," "only a few cents," per pound or per dollar of sales, in the knowledge that the public regards a "cent" as a very small element of value. The packers seek to capitalize this habitual attitude of mind on the part of the public and insist that their profits are, accordingly, negligible. This practice obscures the real facts as to profits. As a matter of fact, a profit of a cent per unit, far from being a small profit, may be an exorbitant profit measured in terms of return upon capital invested.

* * * * * * *

In 1918 the total net worth of the great packers (capital stock and surplus combined) was reported as being in the neighborhood of half a billion dollars. A profit of 1 cent per pound on the 10,000,000,000 pounds of live-stock products sold during the year gives an aggregate return of $100,000,000. Even were this doubled, the resulting rate—namely, 2 cents per pound—would still tend to be a "negligible" amount in the public mind. Yet this difference of 1 cent would mean, for the five great companies, $100,000,000 in possible dividends, or about 20 per cent on the capital stock and surplus combined—$500,000,000.

Thus while the packers' profits per pound may appear to the public to be small, they are in reality large, due to the enormous tonnage produced on the basis of a relatively moderate investment.

The same objection can be raised against the packers' practice of advertising as small, and therefore reasonable, their profit per dollar of sales. In 1918, according to their reports to the United States Food Administration, this rate averaged for the five great companies 2.2 cents for each dollar of sales. This is the equivalent of 15 per cent on capital stock and surplus—a high return on investment. If the profit for the year were doubled, the rate per dollar of sales might still appear to the public to be small—4.4 per cent—and might be advertised as such though the rate on investment would be 30 per cent, a manifestly exorbitant return.

A UNIFORM ACCOUNTING SYSTEM FOR THE GREAT PACKERS.

At the instance of the President's meat committee and of the United States Food Administration, the commission made a survey of the possibility of introducing a uniform accounting procedure for the great packers. It was found that in order to ascertain accurate costs and profits, not only on specific products but on the business as a whole, sweeping revisions in the accounting methods now followed by the several companies would have to be adopted.

* * * * * * *

All of these matters are at present in a hopelessly confused condition with respect to the several companies, and the desirability of bringing about a sound cost system, uniformity of accounting methods, and consequently dependable and comparable figures, whether for the public and the Government or for the packers themselves, needs no argument.

Mr. KENYON. Senators will do well to study this statement and the detailed facts and reasons supporting it found in Part V, pages 46 to 82. On those pages of the report is a discussion that I can not take up in detail; but I will say that no one should pin his faith to the "Swift dollar" until he has weighed carefully what the commission shows on those pages.

With reference to what the commission has said regarding the desirability of uniform accounting, I direct the attention of the Senate to section 16 of the bill, which is intended to bring about a clarification of the packing-house accounting and to make it possible for the Government quickly to ascertain at any time the true facts as to costs, prices, and profits.

PROFITS PER HEAD AND PER POUND.

The present state of the accounting systems of the packing companies seem worthy of illustration in order that we may understand clearly how unreliable and misleading they are. This is especially applicable to the inadaptability of their books of account for any purpose of determining profits per pound or per head. The commission says (Part V, p. 71):

As yet nothing has been said concerning the profits per head or per pound on beef to which Armour & Co. and Swift & Co. are continually giving publicity. The bookkeeping system, as such, does not automatically produce any figures showing the profit on beef or pork or lamb, per head or per pound. Such figures, either for the purposes of publicity or for private information, have to be compiled outside the books of account and are in the nature of statistical computations.

Armour & Co. and Swift & Co. have been in the habit for some years past of grouping certain packing-plant departments for the purpose of these statistical surveys into a "beef section," "pork section," "sheep section," etc. The idea lying behind the section grouping is to bring into relation with a given class of animals, such as beef, certain of the profits made on the so-called by-products, so that a computation of profits per head or per pound will include not only the dressed-carcass department results but also the departmental results shown for hides, fats, casings, etc. By referring to Table 15 the departments which Armour & Co. included in the various "sections" can be examined. Not only is there a section grouping for each class of animal but also a so-called "mixed section" as well as the specialty by-products, the former including canned-meat department, sausage department, and so forth; and the latter soap, fertilizer, etc. The caption "mixed" signifies that the departments included therein handle raw material taken from more than one kind of animal. The canned-meat department, for instance, receives cuts and parts from cattle, hogs, and sheep. Any profits made in a "mixed" department obviously can not be added in toto to the profit of a given kind of animal, but must be divided between those classes of animals which have furnished raw material to the department in question. Thus the canned-meat department profit would have to be spread over all three animals.

Like the departments included in the "mixed section," the raw material entering into the departments of the "specialty by-products" is not obtained from one class of animals and the profits or losses of these departments can not accordingly be related to any given class of animals otherwise than on the basis of apportionment.

PROFITS PER HEAD.

Further the commission makes this specific analysis of Swift & Co.'s statement of its profits per head in its 1918 yearbook (Part V, pp. 73–76):

In its 1918 yearbook Swift & Co. reports its profits per head of cattle as follows:

		Average per head.
Paid for live cattle		$92.70
Received for meat	$81.45
Received for by-products	22.06
Total receipts		103.51
Amount remaining for expense and profit		10.81
Expenses:
Freight	2.57
Selling (branch house)	3.70
Killing, dressing, etc	3.52
		9.79
Profit (interest not deducted) (Part V, p. 73.)		1.02

It is figures of this character that make up what the country knows as the "Swift dollar."

In the light of the foregoing analysis, some of the inaccuracies of this statement are immediately apparent. While the amount paid for live cattle is probably correct, the $81.45 "received for meat" can only be a statistical estimate, for so far as the books are concerned beef

"receipts" are reported net after the deduction of freight and branch-house expenses. Swift & Co. has repeatedly informed the commission's examiners that it was impossible to segregate these expenses, yet in this table the company has defied its own dictum and estimated such a segregation, increasing the book figure for beef "receipts" by that amount.

The $22.06 per head "received for by-products" is unreliable. To begin with, no such amount has been "received." Though the profits of the "beef section" and certain "mixed-section" departments are included in this figure, these profits do not represent ultimate "receipts." Vast quantities of by-products thrown off from beef in a given accounting period are not disposed of until succeeding periods, and accordingly the final credit to the original beef can not be shown in the same period, with the result that the final credit to the original beef is largely in the nature of an estimated profit.

The profits of no specialty departments handling beef products are included in this figure, but have been arbitrarily cut off by the company in making the computation, and the same holds true of certain large leather contracts. Obviously, profits per head can not be shown until the results of all such specialty beef products are brought back. The $22.06 per head is accordingly seriously understated.

Furthermore, it is an open question whether branch-house profits have been included with departmental results in those instances when departmental profits have been brought back to beef. So far as the books are concerned, Swift & Co. does not allocate branch-house profits to the departments, but transfers them in total to the company profit and loss account. It may be that a rough allocation of such profits for statistical purposes has been attempted, but if it has not, it is clear that the $22.06 is again understated. The commission can state positively that the company was not in the habit of allocating the branch-house profits on its regular accounting records prior to 1918. Finally, and most important, the accounting methods obtaining in the departments in respect to inventories and transfer prices render the profits of these departments as returned for this computation unreliable.

In respect to the $9.79 said to be the expense average per head, it is known that the averages for branch-house expenses ($3.70) and freight ($2.57) included therein are arbitrary estimates, having no relation to the books of account; and as for the balance ($3.52), said to cover killing and dressing expenses, etc., the legitimacy of this item is challenged by the whole question of the proper basis of distribution of indirect expense to departments (already dwelt upon); as shown by the lack of uniformity between the great packers in treating such expense, the obvious loading of plant expense as against affiliated enterprises, and the loading of the beef department as against other plant departments.

Under these circumstances, the commission is unable to place the slightest dependence upon the final profit per head ($1.02) as thus announced by Swift & Co. (Part V, pp. 74–75.)

Exhibit E, page 101, Part V, is a most interesting exhibit, and should be studied. It shows the need of some system of uniform accounting. It likewise shows the absolute unreliability of the figures used with the public to induce them to the belief that the packers are making very slight profit. I insert portions thereof.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Departmental results, per books, all plants combined.

Mr. KENYON. Whenever anything is said concerning profits the packers direct us to the dressed-beef profits. It is interesting to note some things set forth by Exhibit E as to Swift's hog profits.

Notice that while beef carcasses lost $92,000 and the total beef section made only $2,900,000, the hog section in 1917 made $15,800,000. Has anyone seen advertisements in the public press of Swift & Co.'s profits on hogs? I do not think their hog profits are advertised or enter into the Swift dollar advertisement.

Now, look for a moment at the calf section of Swift & Co. for 1917, as shown by their books, in Exhibit E: Veal carcasses made a loss of $12,000 and veal carcasses frozen a gain of less than $20,000, but veal cuts made a profit of $102,000 and the offal a profit of $46,000. The "selling adjustment"—whatever that is—was $429,000, or around fifty-seven times as much as the profits shown by the books for veal carcasses fresh and frozen.

In the sheep section, likewise, mutton carcasses, fresh and frozen, show a profit of less than $30,000, but pelts show a profit of $114,000 and wool $1,263,000. Sheep casings—the department that handles the casings or intestines of sheep—made a profit of $90,000, just about three times the profit on the carcasses. Does this seem like common sense? It is not common sense or common reason. And the "selling adjustment" in this section shows a loss of $806,000. So with the other departments. Look for a moment at the mixed and specialty departments. While fresh beef carcasses were losing $92,000, fresh veal carcasses losing $12,000, and fresh mutton carcasses making less than $7,000, sausage made $1,650,000. City hides and fats made $108,000. This department buys back from the butchers the calfskins sold to them on the veal carcasses and buys back from the butchers the fats and bones sold to them on the dressed carcasses of the different animals; and on this buying back of the calfskins and the refuse fats and bones of the retail butchers, Swift & Co.'s books showed that it profited $108,000, while on fresh beef, veal, and mutton carcasses it lost nearly $100,000. Is this sensible accounting? Commercial fertilizer, which uses some of the animal refuse as an ingredient, made $196,000, while stock feed, the principal components of which are blood and dried tankage, made $876,000.

How little the public thinks of glue when it thinks of the profits of the packers or reads advertisements of Swift & Co.! Glue is made from the boilings of the bones and certain of the refuse parts from fleshings saved from the hides, and from other parts of the packing processes. In a sense, it is the least of the by-products of the meat business, yet Swift & Co. made on glue in 1917, according to its books, $1,214,000.

While the hog section, unadvertised, made $15,800,000, the lard department made in addition a profit of $2,368,000.

I think a study of Exhibit E will convince any Senator that the commission was right in rejecting the packers' books as a reliable index of their true profits on any particular product, and will also convince him that the advertising of Swift & Co., while apparently limpid and pure, lacks candor.

Let us look at Armour & Co.'s departmental results, according to its books. In the beef section, again, dressed beef lost three and one-half millions of dollars, while the oleo department made over one and one-third millions of dollars and beef curing made a half million and fresh-beef products made $570,000. Down among the sundry specialties we find that beef extract made $230,000. Does it seem reasonable that Armour & Co.'s smoked hog meats lost a million dollars while its sweet pickled hog meats were making one and one-third millions and its dry salt hog meats over $3,000,000?

In the sheep section dressed sheep lost $800,000, while wool and pelts made nearly a million dollars.

Fresh sausage netted Armour in 1917, $1,350,000; dried sausage, $665,000; and canned meats, $1,447,000. The casings of the sheep and hogs netted $488,000. Glue, little thought of, accumulated a profit of $1,450,000, and sandpaper $226,000. Fertilizer made nearly two and three-quarters millions of dollars, and the soda fountain, incidentally, $286,000, and the canned fish and vegetables department one and one-half millions of dollars. And all this while dressed beef was losing $3,516,341.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not understand from what source the Senator is taking his figures.

Mr. KENYON. I am taking them from the Federal Trade Commission's report, Exhibit E.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator another question? Are these findings of the Trade Commission as to their profits and losses disputed by the packers?

Mr. KENYON. Some of them are; some of the figures are disputed very vigorously.

Mr. POMERENE. Is the Senator able to tell us which ones they concede to be correct and which ones they dispute?

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that there are six volumes of this evidence and six more volumes of evidence taken before committees; and it is impossible to give the Senator the information for which he asks; I can not do so.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought perhaps there might be some concise statement which would give us accurately that information.

Mr. KENYON. I think there is very little dispute as to the proportion of the live stock controlled that goes into interstate commerce from inspected plants. There is a dispute as to the entire number of live stock killed in the country.

THE PACKERS IN UNRELATED LINES.

This opens a new field of combination. The model of trusts so far has been combinations in the same line of business. Having completely absorbed that field, they are turning their attention now to unrelated lines of business, most of them connected, however, with the production and marketing of food products. The various lines are set forth in the commission's report and are given very specifically, I assume, in order to show just what is being done in the way of securing control of commodities which compete with the meat packers' products. I do not set these out as tending to show absolutely independent commodities in every instance. There are set forth the different kinds of concentrated sirups—for instance, pineapple, raspberry, and so forth—which might be included under one subject. So with flavoring extracts, and likewise with soluble extracts. So far as I am setting them forth, it is not to show large profits by using these different ones separately, but, rather, to show the general control of all of these lines.

The commission say in their report:

> First, there are those commodities unrelated to the main industry of meat packing as either products or by-products which compete with packing-house products. The packer, recognizing canned fish and vegetables and poultry, dairy, and cotton-oil products as substitutes for meat and animal fats, began manufacturing them or buying them for resale. Intensive use of equipment and organization, no doubt, was one motive for this widening of activity. But only by a control over these substitutes could he hope to retain any advantage he might have in control over meat supplies. The same would hold true of the substitutes for the packer's other products.

That alone covers pages 266 to 273 of Part IV of the report. It is too extensive to ask to put it in the RECORD, and I am not going to ask to have it placed there; but if Senators desire to ascertain what these unrelated commodities are, the production and sale of which are now entered into by the packers, they will find them on the pages I have indicated, namely, from 266 to 273.

The list of soda-fountain supplies is found on pages 262 and 263 of Part IV. I will not ask to have that inserted in the RECORD, as I do not want to encumber it.

It is not claimed, as I understand, that each one of these articles set out is in itself a distinct line of industry; I certainly do not claim so and do not so understand; nor is it claimed that these lists are complete.

In its yearbook for 1917 Armour & Co. advertised that it was carrying a line of 3,000 products. Allowing by the most liberal estimate possible for products and by-products of the packing industry, including varieties and brands of these, the unrelated products in which this company dealt must have run up into the hundreds. Their number can not be less to-day.

On the other hand, what the exact number of these unrelated lines is, is not the thing of greatest importance; that changes from time to time. The count will also depend upon the degree to which classification is carried. The number will be reduced to two if classification stops with foods and nonfoods. What is of prime importance is that all of the more profitable lines of goods—groceries, canned goods, provisions, and produce—are included, and large numbers of important nonfoods.

THE BIG PACKERS' ACTIVITIES IN UNRELATED FOOD LINES.

Of the unrelated lines into which the packers are extending their activity, the public's first concern is with respect to foods, particularly those foods used as substitutes for meat and other food products of the slaughtered animal. In the production of many and in the distribution of nearly all kinds of foodstuffs the large packers are constantly strengthening their position. Just at present this expanding movement is more marked in the direction of the manufacture of food specialties. In the distribution of most foods this movement has already gone far. The numerous branch and sales houses of the big packers located at every vantage point of consumption and distribution throughout the country, and the hundreds of car routes are no longer used for the exclusive sale and distribution of meats and by-products for which they were originally established.

With the permission of the Senate, I will insert a further quotation from the commission's report.

The matter referred to is as follows:

These packers have entered the wholesale grocery trade, and in practically all the more important centers of distribution they bid fair to dominate a field which a few years ago was almost exclusively occupied by the independent provision jobber and wholesale grocer. With the exception of sugar and flour, the profits on the marketing of which are, without the control of their supply, relatively small and the control of which by the packers has not yet been secured, and with the exception of fresh fruits and vegetables, into the marketing of which the packers have never ventured far, the five larger packers are now large distributors of almost all the commodities originally handled exclusively by the regular wholesale grocery, provision, and produce trade. These include dressed poultry, eggs, butter, cheese, condensed and evaporated milk, butter and lard substitutes, dried fruits, rice, coffee, breakfast and other packaged foods, jellies, pickles, and canned fruits, vegetables, and fish.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the question may be raised as to the wisdom of the packers going into these unrelated lines of business. For instance, there is complaint that there is monopoly in the wholesale grocery business, and the Government some years ago brought suit against the Southern Wholesale Grocery Co. There may be merit in the claim, and I am inclined to think there is. Then why should the packers be prohibited from going into the grocery business and competing with this monopoly?

I confess as to particular instances such as that, I can present no specific reason. I merely suggest that if the packers are permitted to go on gathering up the unrelated businesses, they will secure a monopoly of practically the entire food production and distribution of the United States. When there is substantial tendency to monopoly there is no injury. Under the bill the commission would make the rules and regulations relative to this matter, and I would desire that they have power to determine whether or not, under all the facts and circumstances, the entering into another line of business does, in fact, tend to create monopoly. And if it does, that the matter be stopped, and if not, that there be nothing laid in the way of carrying it out. Of course there would be court review on the proposition.

The packers, by the consent decree, have agreed to go out of the wholesale grocery business. Unless their participation resulted in attempts to monopolize and control that business, I should have some doubt as to the wisdom of said decree. In other words, they should not be prohibited from going into this business unless it is to produce monopoly.

I think in this connection I will insert in the RECORD a letter from former Senator Weeks, something of an authority in various lines, who deals with that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the letter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MOUNT PROSPECT,
Lancaster, N. H., August 22, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR KENYON: I am well aware how ineffective it is for one who has not heard all the evidence to pass on any pending matter, and, moreover, it is almost an impertinence for a farmer living in the extreme northern end of New Hampshire to make a suggestion relative to legislation, but after I finish my day's work I have little to do except to look over the papers, and I am following some of the activities of my friends in Washington with interest.

One of the things now receiving a great deal of newspaper attention and in which we are all more or less interested is the question of food supplies, and in that connection the activities of the packers are receiving the usual denunciations and defense. I have rather positive views on that subject, which may or may not accord with yours, but in any case I want to very briefly send them to you.

Such investigations as I have made of the packers' activities in the past leads me to the conclusion that they handle the meat business of the country most efficiently, and that if there were not such organizations as the packers with their methods of distribution the consumers would probably pay more for their meat products and in many cases not get as good meats as they do under present conditions. I doubt if that general proposition can be successfully controverted, and personally I think it would be a pity to interfere with a system that enables a citizen in the most remote section to get the benefit of this great business with almost as much regularity and with very little more cost than the citizen in the large center, but there, I think, the packers should stop. Unfortunately they have not done so, and as I see it are gradually reaching out and either temporarily or permanently controlling other food products. They did it during the war without any question, purchasing the output of many canning factories, the products of which had nothing whatever to do with the meat business, and selling it to the Government in many cases or to others in some cases.

I am told, for example, that the Cudahys are building enormous canning factories in the Hawaiian Islands and purpose controlling the canned pineapple industry, which is a very important one there, as you know. I do not think that that kind of activity should go on. It would be unthinkable and certainly unbearable to permit a half-dozen men or a half-dozen firms to obtain control of the food supply of this country, even assuming that it would, on the whole, be efficiently managed. Undoubtedly the packers will contend—and the contention has a great deal of merit—that having such distribution facilities for their meat products those facilities should be worked to their full capacity to get the highest efficiency and a resulting lower cost, and that for that reason they should go into the manufacture and distribution of other products than meat. But there is grave danger of trouble resulting from such a monopoly which is too great to warrant its being permitted even if there is a lessening of efficiency as a result.

If you could work out a solution of this difficulty which would divorce the packers from handling of any food products not related to the legitimate packing industry, my impression is that you would leave that part of the high cost of living problem in the best possible shape.

I am sure you will pardon this intrusion and will file my letter in the good old wastebasket if you do not see anything in it which merits your consideration.

Sincerely, yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS.

POULTRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. KENYON. Four of the big packers, Swift, Armour, Wilson, and Cudahy—figures for Morris not available—handled in 1918 through their principal and subsidiary companies, not including family controlled companies, 136,190,550 pounds of dressed poultry and 202,984,278 dozen of eggs, or 33 per cent of the estimated shipped eggs. If products handled by all companies in any way controlled by the five packers were included and if returns were available from all the five, it would probably be shown that the proportion of control over the estimated shipped poultry products would for 1918 equal the estimate of 65 per cent for 1917.

The percentages of the total stocks of dressed poultry held in cold storage by the five on November 30, 1917, March 31, 1918, and July 31, 1918, were, respectively, 34.26, 42.77, and 29.54.

I insert from their report as follows:

For eggs they were for the three dates, respectively, 16.89, 20.26, and 11.67.

These percentages, while comparatively large, do not in themselves represent the proportion of packer sales in wholesale distribution. Independent dealers are relatively large storers of produce, especially of eggs, while the big packers are relatively large buyers of these products as they leave storage. The packers, therefore, handle a much larger proportion of the products stored on a given date than they are reported as holding on that date.

As to dairy products, I insert the following from the commission:

Purpose of activity: Perhaps the most important of the factory dairy products is butter, the substitute for which originally was the packer's oleomargarine, the chief ingredient of which was the oleo oil of the beef animal. More recently vegetable oils, especially cottonseed oil, have been largely supplanting oleo oil in the making of oleomargarine, and the packer to retain his position of dominance over the substitutes for butter began the manufacture of vegetable substitutes.

To secure, however, the maximum benefits of control over the substitutes for butter, the packer was prompted to reach out extensively into the manufacture and distribution of butter itself. Thus commodities of widely different origin, yet supplying the same general want and therefore normally competitive in both production and consumption, are in production no longer strictly competitive. This situation works progressively to throw both butter and its substitutes into the hands of the packer. If the price of butter goes too high, the trade will go more largely to butter substitutes, and the butter manufacturer devoted exclusively to butter making loses his trade to the packer maker of substitutes. Moreover, the higher the price of butter goes the higher the price that the packer can charge for his butter substitutes, and the additional gain on substitutes will compensate him for any losses in volume or margin he may be compelled to take in his butter business, while the manufacturer devoted exclusively to butter, unable to recoup in this way, may be forced to the wall. The clear tendency is to place the trade both in butter and in butter substitutes more and more in the hands of the packers.

With the packer interest controlling both butter and its substitutes, the public interest will suffer because there will no longer be any real competition between these commodities, and it will make little difference to the packer which commodity the public buys.

Further, the more lines of milk products—butter, cheese, condensed milk—the packer enters to an important degree the greater his control of the use to which the milk supply shall be put, and the greater his power to influence the competition of butter with butter substitutes produced from his packing-house and cotton-oil-refinery investments.

Cheese containing a considerable portion of the same nutritive elements as found in lean meat becomes an important substitute for meat. For the packer to hold a commanding position in the production and distribution of cheese strengthens the packer's position in meat and as in the case of butter and its substitutes secures for him an important advantage over the manufacturer of only one of the commodities.

Swift, Armour, Wilson, and Cudahy—figures for Morris not available—handled in 1918 through their principal and subsidiary companies, but not including family-controlled companies, 155,962,975 pounds of butter and 186,691,551 pounds of cheese. If dairy products of all the big packers, including all their controlled companies, were included in these totals, they would be materially increased. However, such part of the packer sales of cheese as was reported for 1918 amounted to 49 per cent of the country's total factory-made cheese of that year.

Of the total of canned milk, in cases, for 1917 and 1918, Libby, McNeill & Libby, a Swift concern, alone distributed, respectively, 9.2 and 10.4 per cent.

The percentages of the total stocks of butter held in cold storage by the five on November 30, 1917, March 31, 1918, and July 31, 1918, were, respectively, 19.18, 33.8, and 23.64 per cent.

The commission say as to this:

These percentages, while comparatively large, do not yet represent the full strength of the packers' position in the handling of butter. The commission found in its investigation evidence that independents were relatively heavy storers of both provisions and produce, but that the big packers were relatively heavy buyers of these goods as they came out of storage or buyers of the warehouse receipts while the goods were yet in storage. In the latter case the warehouse companies usually found it difficult, if not impossible, to report the true owners on the dates in question, the original storers being given as the owners on those dates. Under these two conditions the percentage of stored goods handled by the Big Five after leaving storage would be much larger than the percentage of stored goods reported as owned by them.

The packer percentage of the total stocks of cheese held in cold storage on November 30, 1917, March 31, 1918, and July 31, 1918, were, respectively, 33.35, 34.66, and 34.09.

Quoted from report:

Again, it should be noted that these percentages fall below what appears to be the actual position of the Big Five in the wholesale distribution of cheese, and for the same reasons as those stated in the discussion of their distribution of butter. That they should be found to hold a minimum of one-third of all the cheese in cold storage is significant in that practically this entire amount is handled by them in wholesale distribution on its leaving the warehouse, while in addition to this amount large quantities held in storage on these dates by independents are bought and distributed by the packers.

GROCERY FOODS (CANNED, PACKAGED, AND BULK).

(A) CEREALS AND CEREAL PRODUCTS.

Armour, through the Armour Grain Co., is a large factor in the cereal and breakfast-food business, on the producing as well as the handling side. In 1917 he became "the largest rice dealer in the world," handling more than 30,000,000 pounds during the 11 months ending February 2, 1918, though dealing in but little prior to that period. The other big packers do not manufacture these products, and they distribute them, if at all, only as local conditions may warrant. Both Wilson & Co. (Inc.) and Morris & Co., however, are currently listing rice for sale in their branch house price lists.

According to the commission report:

The Armour Grain Co. has a nominal capital of $1,000,000, of which the Armour family owns $868,700. Stock, moreover, to the amount of $125,000 held in the name of George E. Marcy, president of the company, is assigned in blank to the Armour Grain Co. as security for a loan of a greater amount. The company reported surplus and undivided profits at the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1917, of $5,426,830.06, after deducting a dividend of 78 per cent on the capital stock. The year's net earnings amounted to $2,908,912.79, or 290 per cent on the capital stock and 68 per cent on the net worth of the company, including capital, surplus, and undivided profits, as reported at the close of the fiscal year 1916.

More than 90 country elevators, largely west and northwest of Chicago and west of Milwaukee, are operated by the Armour Grain Co., including the above subsidiaries. It has terminal elevators at Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Buffalo, and Jersey City. Its eight at Chicago and two at Kansas City constitute 25 per cent of the total elevator capacity of those cities. In 1917 its sales were 74,847,000 bushels, or 22.6 per cent of all receipts of grain at Chicago, the greatest market of the world, and its business is rapidly growing.

It is in the manufacture and distribution of cereal products and breakfast foods, however, that Armour's widening activity in foods ready for consumption becomes apparent. In the branch-house sales of 1918 such items are included as rolled oats, corn flakes, spaghetti, noodles, and pancake flour, which do not appear in the sales of 1916. These and other like products distributed by Armour & Co. are manufactured by the Armour Grain Co. or its trade-name subsidiaries.

In the latter part of 1916 or the first of 1917 the Armour Grain Co. acquired the cereal mill of the Buffalo Cereal Co., Buffalo, N. Y. This company was reorganized and, in May, 1916, incorporated under the laws of New York with a capital stock of $1,000 owned by the Armour Grain Co. The mill is operated and the products put out under the name of the "Buffalo Cereal Co., owned and operated by the Armour Grain Co."

So, also, the cereal mills known as the Mapl-Flake Mills, Battle Creek, Mich., formerly owned by a corporation of that name, were purchased by the Armour Grain Co. September 1, 1917. All of the stock of the corporation, Mapl-Flake Mills, was transferred to the Armour Grain Co. in order to continue the products under the old names and brands, and the property is operated by the Armour Grain Co. under the name of the "Mapl-Flake Mills, owned by the Armour Grain Co."

Other cereal mills are operated by the Armour Grain Co. under its own name, one of which, at Milwaukee, is leased from J. F. and A. L. Kern at a yearly rental of $27,000.

(B) LARD AND BUTTER SUBSTITUTES.

Substitutes for butter and lard derived wholly or in part from vegetable oils are of rapidly growing importance. The oils most largely used for these purposes are cottonseed, coconut, and peanut, one of which—cottonseed oil, the most abundant and widely used of vegetable oils—is extensively produced and utilized in manufacture by the big packers.

Quoting from report:

Lard compounds and lard substitutes: Lard compounds are formed of a mixture of rendered hog fats and other animal or vegetable oils. Lard substitutes are composed of refined, deodorized cottonseed oil and stearin in the proportion of 80 to 85 per cent oil and 15 to 20 per cent stearin. The stearin may be beef or vegetable. The vegetable stearin is tending to supplant the animal stearin, and lard substitutes are in many instances wholly of vegetable substance. Cooking oils composed entirely of refined, deodorized, and hydrogenated vegetable fats, generally of cottonseed origin, are also being considerably used as a substitute for the animal shortening. Peanut oil for this purpose has recently been widely advertised.

Lard compounds are of relatively small importance, and in the statistics of production are included with lard substitutes. Lard substitutes, on the other hand, are being produced in growing volume and are even crowding lard itself for supremacy.

The great packers' position in lard-compound and lard-substitute production: The Federal Trade Commission has collected the statistics of production by all slaughterers doing an interstate business and by all cottonseed-oil manufacturers. The following table shows the production of these two groups and of the Big Five packers individually and collectively:

TABLE 44.—Lard-compound and lard-substitute production of interstate slaughterers and cottonseed-oil manufacturers—The five great packers' proportion, 1916, and Jan. 1 to June 30, 1917.

[1] Includes production by the five packers in their cottonseed-oil plants.
[2] Excludes production by the five packers in their cottonseed-oil plants.

This table shows the output of only two groups of producers; it does not cover the total production of the country. The output of slaughterers doing only intrastate business and that of such producers as are not engaged in slaughtering or in cottonseed-oil production are not included. Nevertheless, out of this large proportion of the total production by all firms, the five packers, it will be noted, had 42.5 per cent in 1916 and 49.4 per cent in the first half of 1917, an increasing percentage of an increasing output.

In 1912 the output of the big packers (excluding Armour—Armour's sales for 1912 not available), together with their cottonseed-oil plants, was 183,179,846 pounds, and in 1916, 256,689,603 pounds, an increase of 40 per cent. The output of the whole industry (excluding Armour) increased in the same period 34.4 per cent, as shown above. The nonpacker output increased only 31.6 per cent, as against the four packers' 40 per cent increase.

Big packers' position in lard-compound and lard-substitute distribution.—The sales of lard compounds and lard substitutes by the big packers (excluding Armour—Armour's sales for 1912 not available) amounted in 1912 to 143,203,653 pounds and in 1916 to 212,787,964 pounds, an increase of 48.6 per cent. This, however, does not represent the full strength of packer distribution, since the sales of subsidiaries engaged primarily in the manufacture of cottonseed oil and its products were not available. The production of such subsidiaries amounted in 1912 to 33,602,381 pounds of lard substitute and in 1916 to 42,427,539 pounds. This would approximately represent the sales of these subsidiaries for those years, though on the one hand there may have been sales to other members of the Big Five group during the year or larger inventories at the close of the year than at its beginning, or, on the other hand, there may have been outside purchases during the year or smaller inventories at the close of the fiscal year than at its beginning. (The figures in the text were returned to the commission on a date and a form different from those for the figures in Table 45. The 1912 and 1916 figures of the text are strictly comparable. The 1916 and 1918 figures of the table are similarly comparable. Were the 1916 sales of the table substituted for 1916 sales of the text, or vice versa, the figures would not be strictly comparable.)

The percentage of increase of sales points to a rapid growth in volume of packer sales even during the period prior to America's entrance into the war, when the use of substitutes was less marked than in the period following. During this period, 1912–1916, while four of the big packers' sales increased 48.6 per cent, the total production of interstate slaughterers and cottonseed-oil manufacturers (excluding Armour) increased, as pointed out above, only 34.4 per cent.

The growth in lard-substitute sales for the two-year period 1916–1918 for the Big Five is shown by the following figures:

[2] Some duplication is involved in the Wilson sales, owing to the inclusion of certain interplant shipments and shipments between plants and branch houses which the company reports as being unable to exclude.

Butter substitutes: Among the several commodities that may be used as substitutes for butter and are manfactured and sold is oleomargarine (including butterine and all kinds of nut margarines).

Oleomargarine, as its name suggests, had originally as one of its components oleo oil from the beef animal. This was combined with neutral lard, vegetable oils, or butter. While the oleo oil is still thus used in the making of oleomargarine, it is being largely replaced by vegetable oils, and oleomargarine, sometimes called butterine, is often now wholly of vegetable substances, the principal ingredient being the oil of the cottonseed, coconut, or peanut, though a butter flavor may be imparted by mixing or churning the ingredients with milk. Other vegetable oils used are derived from the soy bean, corn or maize, and mustard seed.

Oleomargarine is fast becoming a food of common household use. According to the returns made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the total production of oleomargarine, colored and uncolored, for the year ending June 30, 1909, was 92,282,815 pounds (Annual Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 1909, pp. 87–88); and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, 326,528,839 pounds (Annual Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 1918, pp. 123–124). The annual output had increased during the nine-year period 253.8 per cent. In the calendar year of 1909 the production of creamery-made butter amounted to 624,764,653 pounds (Census of Manufactures, 1914, Butter, Cheese, and Condensed Milk, p. 354), and in the calendar year 1918, 793,275,309 pounds (figures furnished by the Bureau of Markets. Neither these figures nor those for 1914 include butter made on the farm, which is a relatively declining quantity), an increase during the nine-year period of 27 per cent in the annual production as against 253.8 per cent increase in oleomargarine production during approximately the same period.

Big packers' position in the production of oleomargarine: As presented elsewhere in this report (see report of the Federal Trade Commission on the Meat Packing Industry, Part I, Chap. V, sec. 10), the production of oleomargarine by the packer members of the oleo legislative pool for the fiscal year closing June 30, 1916, was 63,597,823 pounds, or 41.7 per cent of the total production in the United States (total for the United States, 152,509,913 pounds; Annual Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 1916, pp. 154, 155). These packer members included all the Big Five except the Cudahy Packing Co.

The big packers' production of oleomargarine from January 1 to June 30, 1917, as reported to the commission was 65,962,208 pounds. For the same period the total production for the country as a whole (Annual Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 1917, pp. 148, 150) was 129,123,918 pounds, thus giving the five 51.1 per cent of the total (see Table 46 below). The manufacture of the Big Five is in the main confined to slaughtering plants, though a few factories are equipped primarily for the making of this product.

The following table shows the total production of oleomargarine by all manufacturers for the calendar year 1916 and the first six months of 1917 and the big-packer production collectively and by companies. The figures for the total production are from the published reports of the Internal Revenue Bureau. Not only are high percentages shown for the five for both periods, but, with the rapidly increasing total output for the country as a whole, as indicated by the figures, the five are not only holding their own but are considerably increasing their proportion.

(C) CANNED AND OTHER GROCERY FOODS.

Quoting further from report:

In the handling of canned fruits, vegetables, and fish and of other foods both wide range of product handled and rapid growth by the five packers are shown. In some items a large proportion of the total pack is indicated. The canned-food sales of Libby, McNeill & Libby alone amounted in 1915 (after the report had gone to press Libby, McNeill & Libby revised its sales figures for 1915 and 1916 on canned pineapple, salmon, milk, tomatoes, and kraut. The revised figures, except those for tomatoes for 1916, are larger than the earlier figures reported by the company. See Exhibit XVII A and note 3 of that exhibit) to 138,068,844 pounds and in 1918 to 449,290,822 pounds, an increase of 225 per cent. For the four-year period, 1915 to 1918, these sales of the Libby company reached the enormous total of 1,179,074,122 pounds (see Exhibit XVII, A). In 1917 Libby sold 33 per cent of the total pack of asparagus and 11.5 per cent of the total pack of kraut and in 1918, 27 per cent of the total pack of pineapple and 9.7 per cent of the total world pack of salmon (see secs. 3, 4, and 5, ch. 5). Sales for the other packers segregated by commodities, if available, would show a high packer total.

Armour's tonnage sales of canned vegetables and sundries, including condiments, evaporated milk, rice, canned and dried fish, and peanut butter, but not including canned fruits and preserves, tonnage sales for which were not available, were, in 1916, 61,386,920 pounds, and in 1918, 196,066,848 pounds, a gain of 219 per cent. For the years 1916, 1917, and 1918 the total tonnage on these items amounted to 365,213,661 pounds (see Exhibit XVII, B).

Wilson's tonnage sales of condiments and preserves and canned fish, fruits, and vegetables were, in 1915, 6,822,242 pounds, and in 1918, 121,648,154 pounds. The sales of 1918 were almost eighteen times those of 1915. The total sales for the four years on these items amounted to 172,931,943 pounds (see Exhibit XVII, C).

[1] The sales given in this exhibit do not include those made by companies or selling agencies controlled through means other than stock ownership by the principal packer company. Sales, for example, made by affiliated companies controlled through stock ownership by the principal family interested in the packer company are not included.
[2] Sales are not available from Morris & Co. and The Cudahy Packing Co.
[3] After the report had gone to press Libby, McNeill & Libby revised its sales figures on the items below for 1915 and 1916. A comparison of the company's earlier figures with those below show the latter to be larger for each item except for that of tomatoes for 1916:

[1] Tonnage sales of canned fruits and preserves are not available. The sales here reported are for "Canned vegetables and sundries." For the year 1916 the sales of canned and dried fish are included, but segregated for the years 1917 and 1918. For 1916 and 1917 the sales of peanut butter are included, but segregated for 1918. Included with the sales of canned vegetables, evaporated milk, and condiments in all the years are the sales of rice.

[2] Sales are for fiscal years ending Oct. 31.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have taken more time than I should, but I have abbreviated very much what I had to say by inserting a large number of extracts that Senators may possibly read, if they feel inclined to do it.

I want to conclude what I have to say about the facts in this matter, and then I want to take just a moment or two on the law and an explanation of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to a new topic, I simply want to be sure that I understand him.

The Senator thinks, does he, that we ought to confer upon this board the authority to examine and pass upon the question as to whether a packing company should be permitted to embark or continue in any business other than that strictly of the meat-packing industry?

Mr. KENYON. Do I contend that?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. The bill as originally drawn gave to the commission the power to do that very thing. I think that section of the bill must go out, because I do not believe it is constitutional; but under section 12 of the bill certain things are made illegal, and one is to—engage or participate in any manner, either directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live-stock products, where the effect of such participation in such business may be substantially to lessen competition in or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in commerce in any line of foodstuffs

That rule being laid down, then it is for the commission to say whether or not the facts and circumstances create a situation where the rule is applicable.

Mr. REED. Then, in other words, the same end will be reached by the section the Senator has just read as would have been reached if the power had been expressly conferred?

Mr. KENYON. I realize the seriousness of that question, and I draw this distinction: As it originally stood the commission would have the power, regardless of whether there was any public question involved, regardless of whether there was any tending to monopoly or any lessening of competition, to say absolutely that they should not go into other lines of business.

Now, they interpret the rule laid down by the Congress. They are the administrative body to determine whether or not that situation exists.

Mr. REED. That brings us to this: A body of men are to be empowered to determine whether the act of a citizen tends to create a monopoly. That body is not a court.

Mr. KENYON. There is a review by the court.

Mr. REED. Yes; but its action is independent of a court. You may get protection later from the court. This body is to answer the question whether a certain thing tends to produce a monopoly.

I did not rise in any critical sense. I am trying to get some light.

Mr. KENYON. That is all right.

Mr. REED. Now, of course, it is true that if any man engages in business in which another man is engaged his act has a tendency to limit the business of that man who was already in the business; and, of course, every time a man takes over to himself the doing of a business, he monopolizes to himself that part of the business which he controls. If he does a large business the effect, of course, is larger than if he does a small business. If he does a very great business, it may come to the point where he has the major control of some particular product. Would the Senator say that such an act as that was an act tending to create a monopoly within the meaning of this section?

Mr. KENYON. No; hardly that.

Mr. REED. Then, where do we draw the line? Are we to set up a board here in Washington to say arbitrarily that A. B. can not buy chickens and sell chickens because A. B. buys too many chickens or sells too many chickens? We can not draw the line there.

Mr. KENYON. We set up a board to determine what is unfair competition. How can the board do that? We set up another board to determine unreasonable rates.

Mr. REED. I have protested against those boards that undertake arbitrarily to control business.

Mr. KENYON. I know the Senator has. I am willing to concede right now—I am perfectly frank about it—that that is a very difficult proposition, but I feel this way: We have laid down a rule as to monopoly. We have created an administrative board empowered to determine, under all the facts and circumstances, how this rule shall apply. Now, whether or not there is a delegation of legislative power is a close question.

Mr. REED. Is there a legislative power of the character we are talking about?

Mr. KENYON. There could be no other power.

Mr. REED. Is there ever a monopoly within the proper description or legal definition of a monopoly where the field is left so that another man can engage in the same business?

Mr. KENYON. In the Sherman Act we use the words "tending to monopoly." The very reason for having a commission in all of these matters that have grown up in our country is because the shades of difference are such that language can not be used to apply to every circumstance, and for that reason a commission has to work these things out. That has been the growth of it. In Great Britain they wait until they see the head, and then hit it. We do not do that. We have commissions that work out these facts.

Mr. REED. And in my opinion all of them have been failures without a single exception.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, I do not think the Interstate Commerce Commission has been a failure.

Mr. REED. I think it comes very close to being one. I think the Interstate Commerce Commission has never done anything but raise railroad rates in all its existence; but I do not care to discuss that subject. I am trying to get at the other proposition—whether in law anything can be said to be a monopoly, so that it can be prohibited, unless it is so organized as to prevent another citizen from entering that line of business; and the prevention must be something else than the ability of the so-called monopoly to undersell a competitor in the market. Is not that where we are driven?

Mr. KENYON. I do not think you can lay down any rule as to what would constitute a monopoly. Under certain circumstances certain things would be a monopoly, and under other circumstances they would not be.

Mr. REED. Does it not inevitably follow from a proper construction of the Constitution that every man in this country has the right to engage in every business in the country that is a legitimate business; that he can not be deprived of that right; that he can not be interfered with as long as he is pursuing that right in accordance with the fundamental principles of the Constitution; that among those rights guaranteed to him is the right to buy and to sell, to buy in the cheapest market he can get, to sell in the highest market he can get; and that it is nobody's business how big his business is, provided the way is left open for other people to enter that business?

Mr. KENYON. No; I do not agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. REED. I wanted to get the Senator's view; that is all.

Mr. KENYON. While bigness itself is not monopoly, yet bigness itself may reach such a point that it is the most powerful instrumentality in monopoly; and I do not concede that a man has the absolute right to conduct his business just as he pleases, or that one man or one set of men can acquire all of a line of business and create a monopoly in that business, and that it is no one else's business. I say it can be charged with a public use, just as I believe the question of the food supply of a nation is charged with a public use. The Supreme Court has held that insurance is charged with a public use; while it is not interstate commerce, it is charged with a public use. So that there is a distinction between ordinary articles of commerce and food supplies, fuel supplies, and other things that the people must have; and no body of men have the right to corner those things, or get them all, and keep them away from the people, and charge any prices that they please, and say it is nobody's business. I do not agree to that.

Mr. REED. Now we are getting outside of the question I am asking. I am trying to get at a legal principle. Let me say that if the food supply is charged with a public use, it is no more charged with a public use than the clothing supply, or the shoe supply, or than any of the necessities the great mass of the people must use are charged with a public use, and if we admit the principle that everything we eat and everything we wear and everything we use is charged with a public use, then the old line that was drawn between the public highways and instrumentalities of that kind and the private business of the citizen is entirely gone.

Mr. KENYON. There is and must be a line of demarcation between absolutely private business which we could not touch without violating the Constitution and a business which is in its nature of a public character, which we have some right to regulate, provided it comes within the channels of interstate commerce.

Mr. REED. I understand the shadowy lines which we draw between the two great fields. It is perfectly plain that a railroad is liable to control by the public. That is true because it always has been true that public highways are just what their name implies—they are highways of the public. They are not owned as property in the same sense that private property is owned. They have been public property since the days of the Cæsars and, I guess, since the days of the Pharaohs. When a railroad company acquires the right to build as a private corporation, it acquires it only as an instrumentality of the State, and it exercises and is permitted to exercise through the State the powers of eminent domain. The same statement of fact applies to the telegraph and telephone, all of them coming within that principle that the public have the absolute right to control.

Now we turn to the private business of the citizen, the right of a man to run his own farm. Clearly, the grocery keeper, the man who runs the meat shop, the butcher, have never been regarded as subject to governmental control in the sense in which I am now applying that term; and yet if the statement made by the Senator is to be taken literally—and I hardly think he meant it that way—all food products under his rule being subject to control, we would begin with the farmer. I do not think the Senator meant it so broadly as that.

Mr. KENYON. No; I do not think I said anything to warrant that.

Mr. REED. The Senator said that food products, necessary to all the people, were subject to governmental control, as I understood the Senator. I do not want to draw any false conclusions, of course.

Mr. KENYON. When a few men, whether they be farmers or packers, whoever they might be, obtain the power to control the food products of the Nation, I claim there is a way, if they are using interstate commerce, to regulate them. Monopoly is a subject of interstate commerce and it can be regulated.

Mr. REED. Both of us agree that here are the two great fields, one of which we can enter at will, one to regulate the thing which is strictly a highway, or so akin to a highway that it comes within that rule; and then there is the other great field of private venture where we can not enter.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator, of course, that we can not enter it, but where the private venture passes beyond that shadowy line it becomes charged with a public use, as it does in a monopoly.

Mr. REED. Where a few concerns by the simple, natural process of growth have enlarged themselves so that they constitute an important link in the matter of production and distribution, does the Senator think that merely on account of their size they become subject to control, or is it not necessary that something else should be added to that, namely, that in this control of the product they withhold it from the public, they forestall the market, they come within the principle of the old common law that no man could forestall the market; and is it not on that point we must reach them and not on the mere question of size?

Mr. KENYON. That is true, except that size may be a very important element.

Mr. REED. It may be; but are we not making that the controlling element here.

Mr. KENYON. I am not making it that at all. Of course, the Senator was not here during the earlier part of my remarks; but I bored the Senate in a discussion of the facts as presented about this particular claimed monopoly.

Mr. REED. I am sorry I was not here. I did not know the Senator was to speak or I would have been here. I do not want to go over the old ground, but I am trying, if I can, to clarify this question in my own mind.

I will put a very broad proposition. Suppose I go out and establish a packing house, build a better packing house than anybody else has, and by virtue of my genius—which is purely hypothetical——

Mr. KENYON. I will not concede that.

Mr. REED. I undersell every packing house in the United States, until finally they close their doors and I have the whole packing industry in my hands. I continue to manufacture and to sell for less than anybody else had manufactured or sold, and likewise I am doing business so cheaply and so economically that nobody else can see where he can make any money by starting a packing house. The field is open. Everybody in the world can enter it who wants to do so, but if he does enter it I am able to sell meat at half a cent a pound less than he can, and that ends his career. Simply because I have grown to those proportions—and I have conducted my business without forestalling the market, without working any hardships—has the Government any right to appoint a commission to come in and tell me how I shall run the business? I just put that question on that one point.

Mr. KENYON. When you control the entire meat supply?

Mr. REED. Absolutely.

Mr. KENYON. I say "yes."

Mr. REED. If that is true, the Senator and I just differ upon the proposition to this extent: I agree fully that if, having that control, I hold up the products of the country; to use the very old expression which I employed a while ago, if I "forestall" the market, if I employ my control for the purpose of starving the people or of charging outrageous prices, clearly the Government can reach me under the old principles of the common law, if I understand them. But can you reach me and undertake to regulate me until I have committed this wrong?

Mr. KENYON. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose, instead of securing this individual monopoly, he joined with others and three or four of them had it, at the same time acting together just as if they were one person; they bring prices down at times, make the products cheap to the people, perhaps, make them cheaper than they would be otherwise. Is there any evil in that which you can reach?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. What is the difference between having it done by four or five people and having it all in one person and having the five acting with the one?

Mr. REED. The difference is this: The one individual acting under his rights as a citizen of the United States causes his business to grow by natural processes and can be reached the moment he perpetrates any of the wrongs I have adverted to and which I need not now repeat. The other individual combines with several, and when he does he destroys competition by combination. That is the purpose of it. He thereby deprives the people of a competition they would have if it were not for the combination. In that respect it is distinguishable from the instance cited of the man who had himself gathered all the business to himself. He still has the field of competition open. It is true there is no one to compete, but the very moment he raises prices to a point where anybody else can make a profit the field of competition is there and it can be entered. But if as soon as a man entered there were combination between these individuals the public would be deprived of the benefit of the competition.

Without committing myself, just talking here as I am, without having given this matter mature consideration——

Mr. KENYON. I am glad of the suggestions of the Senator.

Mr. REED. It seems to me that our right to interfere with an individual who has not combined must be limited to some wrong which he perpetrates in the exercise of his business rights, if he goes beyond legitimate business, forestalls the market, or perpetrates outrages. The reason why he has a right to exist, or one reason, is that the whole field of competition is open. On the other hand, if you permit a combination between men who are competing, the very purpose of the combination is to stop the competition and deprive the public of it.

Mr. KENYON. I want to say to the Senator that his discussion is a little beyond this situation, because his last statement is what we base this on, a combination among the Five Packers.

Mr. REED. That is just what I am coming to. If there is a combination, I will go as far as the Senator will go, or anybody else will go, to send to the penitentiary every man who has combined with another man to control the price of food products in this country, either as a buyer or as a seller or as both. If there is a combination, we have a law to reach it, and if that law has not been enforced because we have never had an Attorney General who could stand up and look $250,000,000 in the face and not faint, then I hope we will have an Attorney General who can. Compromises with men who violate the law are the disgrace of the legal department of the United States Government.

If the Senator will permit the interruption, we have this astonishing illustration in very recent months. I think it was 11 of the great manufacturers of newsprint paper who were indicted, charged with combination in restraint of trade. The price of newsprint paper had mounted to extortionate figures. These gentlemen appeared in court and pleaded nolo contendere. The same day a petition in a civil suit to dissolve their combination was filed. On the same day they filed their answer, and on the same day a consent decree was taken. The fines as laid aggregated, if my recollection serves me right, as a grand total, $22,000 upon institutions who were conducting a business which, in the aggregate, ran high, in the scores of millions of dollars, and whose profits, if it was a combination—and they did not deny it was and allowed judgment against them in default—must have amounted probably to a hundred or a thousand times the amount of the fines.

Now, sir, they were given a court charter by decree of consent to plunder every newspaper in the United States. The decree stated that they should charge not more than the price fixed by the Federal Trade Commission plus the right to appeal to the Federal court. The trade commission fixed a price—and I am speaking now wholly from memory—which I think was about 3½ cents a pound. Appeal was taken to the court and the court raised the price to something like $3.70 or $3.75 a hundred pounds, and the decree recited that at the price thus fixed, or afterwards fixed on review, paper should be sold until six months after the war had been concluded. It all looked fair enough on its face, but the decree contained another provision, that the newsprint-paper manufacturers could make private contracts at any price they saw fit.

Now, there was an actual shortage of paper. It, therefore, was perfectly plain to every man running a great newspaper that if he had to rely on the market from day to day he might find himself in a position where some day he would not have paper to print and he could not go to press. Accordingly, these men went down and asked for contracts at Government prices, and they were refused the contracts. They were told that they would have to take their chances, and no great paper could afford to do that. Whereupon, under the clause permitting a contract to be made at any price the parties agreed upon, the manufacturers flatly said, "We will furnish you all the paper you want provided you will make a contract with us at the price we fixed," and so they fixed 4½ cents and 5 cents, and in some instances 6 cents, and I think it ran as high as 7 cents, by contract, and contracted practically the entire output of newsprint paper in the United States, and it is legal under the decision that was rendered. It was a court charter authorizing robbery.

Mr. KENYON. In what court was that decree entered?

Mr. REED. It was entered, I think, in one of the courts in New York, and the Attorney General of the United States was a party to the entire transaction, except the making of prices afterwards under contract.

We had a dissolution of the Tobacco Trust, and the Tobacco Trust emerged from the dissolution stronger than it ever was, and its stocks mounted in the market. We have had some other illustrations of the dissolution of trusts by agreement. We had a case here the other day against the packers. I do not know exactly what that decision was. Perhaps the Senator does?

Mr. KENYON. That was the consent decree.

Mr. REED. Another consent decree?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; and that takes away some of the unrelated business.

Mr. REED. Every one of these consent decrees, however, authorizes or commands certain things to be done, and in numerous instances the things authorized are the very practices that the trusts have found necessary in order to create and perpetuate themselves.

I thank the Senator for permission to make this interjection——

Mr. KENYON. I am glad to have it.

Mr. REED. And I say to-day that if we had men conducting the legal department of our Government who were not afraid to send a millionaire to the penitentiary we would not have this trouble; but if you proceed along the line that the Senator is now proceeding, of licensing businesses engaged in interstate commerce——

Mr. KENYON. It is not a license; there is no license feature here.

Mr. REED. Or appointing a board to supervise them, how long would it be until that principle would be extended, until business after business and enterprise after enterprise is brought under a similar control, and until men here in Washington, whom we know from experience are absolutely uninformed with reference to the businesses they undertake to control and who could not get a job, many of them, in a first-class business house in the United States, will be undertaking to run the business of the United States?

This line has to be drawn somewhere. I am not here taking a position, even on this bill at present.

Mr. KENYON. I have been suspicious that the Senator would be against the bill.

Mr. REED. The Senator's suspicions may be right and they may be wrong. I have not given the bill all the study I want to bestow upon it.

Mr. KENYON. I hope they are wrong.

Mr. REED. But if you can control everybody engaged in the meat business, I am asking the question why you can not control everybody engaged in making shoes, in making clothing, in making cotton, in making agricultural implements? Somewhere the line has to be drawn, and have we reached the point in this bill where we have found the correct line?

We talk about discretion and vesting discretion in a board. We always assume, when we vest these discretionary powers, that they are going to be exercised wisely. We forget that the authority to exercise a power wisely is also a power to exercise it unwisely, and that when we vest these powers in a little coterie of gentlemen who are brought in here to Washington, most always inexperienced, most always incompetent to make a living at home and therefore belonging to the brigade who are seeking a salary and a livelihood away from home, that the power of discretion that we vest in them is very likely to be unwisely exercised.

I am getting so that I am not willing to give any discretion at all. Congress passed a law fixing the age of men who could have certain commissions in the Army, and then stuck in a clause that the Secretary of War should make rules and regulations, whereupon he proceeded to make rules and regulations changing the age limit that Congress had fixed.

Mr. THOMAS. Is that all the change he made?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. KENYON. Is the Senator nearly through with his question?

Mr. REED. It is a long digression.

Mr. KENYON. That is all right; I am enjoying it.

Mr. REED. I want to make myself plain in this connection. I am trying to drive to the point. I want the Senator to put his mind, which is very skilled along this particular character of investigation, in which he has had much experience, upon the question whether we can afford to set up a board to control one business lest we thereby establish a precedent to set up boards to control other business, and in a little while we will have a Government of the United States by bureaucracies established at Washington. When we get to that I want to submit the further proposition whether we will not soon have it so that a man is afraid to embark in business and only the strongly entrenched will remain and competition will be destroyed by the very effort that is being made to protect the people?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am really glad that the Senator has directed attention to this very difficult legal question in the bill. I have given a great deal of thought to it, and I have been a great deal troubled about it.

The Senator raises the very interesting proposition that any lawyer's mind runs to when he thinks about this situation. I agree with many things he says, but with some I do not. If people could be sent to jail who combine to corner the food products of the United States, I wish it could be done. I would like to see an Attorney General who would go up against $200,000,000 or $2,000,000,000. I wish I had enough influence to have the Senator from Missouri appointed Attorney General. We would have a vigorous enforcement of the law.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator allude to the present administration or the coming one?

Mr. KENYON. I will say the coming one.

Mr. THOMAS. I will join the Senator in his recommendation.

Mr. KENYON. It is one thing to talk on the floor of the Senate about putting men in jail, and it is another thing to do it in the courts. Juries are not very favorably inclined, where they think a crime such as the Sherman law proscribes is a business crime, to send men to jail for it. I think there have not been over three jail sentences under the Sherman Act. I was going to say one, but out of an abundance of caution I will say three. I remember the naval stores case, where there was a jail sentence, but that was reversed. No one under the Sherman Act has ever gone to jail for a violation of it. It is a hard statute to enforce, as the Senator from Missouri knows.

I am a little in doubt, too, with our experience with the Sherman Act, the difficulties about it, the impression in the country now, which would be stronger than ever against business crimes, whether it is altogether the best thing to try to send to the penitentiary or to jail, or to try to devise some way as we have tried to do. We have no pride of opinion in this, either, and I hope we will have the help of the Senator from Missouri to work out something of a plan like this. Certain things are forbidden, such as unjust discrimination, unfair practices. Then, instead of sending the people to jail for a violation of it, the commission find that things have been done, and they draw the attention of these people to it.

They are given the chance to remedy the situation. There is no penalty until after they have been given that chance. The finding is made by the commission. Then the parties interested can take it to the circuit court of appeals. If it is sustained there, even then there is no penalty until they continue the practice. I know that is not a very vigorous method; it is not strong enough to suit my ideas about the trust question; but we have not been successful in devising anything to end trusts. They have grown more powerful every year; and they are themselves blind, for if present conditions continue, methods will be devised by which the people will end them.

Mr. REED. Now, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to submit an observation there. Under the plan the Senator has just outlined a man will know that he can enter upon any kind of a practice, no matter how outrageous it may be, and he may continue it without any danger whatever until he is caught.

Mr. KENYON. No. There are still all the laws that the Senator says should be enforced against him.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; then we are going to fall back on the old laws. I was speaking of the Senator's illustration.

Mr. KENYON. We do not repeal the laws, but they have failed in part.

Mr. REED. Then, if they have failed they would be of no avail in the future.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has suggested certain reasons why they have failed.

Mr. REED. The Senator can not supplement his plan by saying that back of it lie the vital powers of the Sherman Act and then say that the Sherman Act will not work.

Mr. KENYON. I say the Sherman Act has not worked. It is easy to say, "This should be done and these people should be sent to jail," but "you have not the right way of doing it." Help to show us the right way.

Mr. REED. Well, that is an aside; we have got to consider this concrete question. The proposition is—and we are waiving the Sherman law for the present, which is said to be innocuous and valueless——

Mr. KENYON. I do not care to be put in the position of saying that it is valueless.

Mr. REED. And we will talk about this proposed law. So far as it is concerned, a man can get up any kind of a scheme to fleece and rob the public, and he can pursue it with the full knowledge that under this proposed law he will suffer no penalty until he is caught. Then he will suffer no penalty until he has been tried by this board; then he will not suffer any penalty until he has fought the case through the court of appeals, which takes in the ordinary course of events, an indefinite period, anywhere from one to five or six years; and then he will not suffer any penalty until he is again caught and again brought before the board and again tried.

Mr. KENYON. That is not a fair way to put it——

Mr. REED. Well, he does not suffer any penalty under this proposed law.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator feel that if this board, which will be composed, I assume, of high-class men, brought the attention of the packers to certain practices, such, for instance, as "wiring on," and should say that that must be stopped, that it is illegal, or to the tremendously bad practices of which the Senator speaks, does he think they would still go on with them? There is some rule of reason in all of these matters.

Mr. REED. I do not see why they would not go on when there is no harm to come to them until the court of appeals has passed upon the question.

Mr. KENYON. They can then fall back upon the Sherman Act to which the Senator refers.

Mr. REED. Exactly; and they would be falling back on what I say is the only substantial thing we have got. Now, the Senator from Iowa is proposing a new remedy. The question is, Is it a remedy? Is anything a remedy that gives to a board the right merely to discover a wrong without any penalty being attached to the wrongdoer when he has been caught? He keeps his swag; he keeps his ill-gotten gains; he puts them in his pocket and continues his practice. He goes to the court of appeals, always virtuously claiming, of course, that he is within his rights. Then he comes back and again gets caught. I believe the Senator said there would be no penalty even then if he stopped on the second notice.

Mr. KENYON. No; I have not said that.

Mr. REED. Now, is it not proposed to set up a vast machine which will be simply employed as a cover by these gentlemen?

Mr. KENYON. They do not seem to think so, with the opposition there is to this bill.

Mr. REED. Well, now, the Senator can not charge that that opposition comes from the packing houses.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes, it does largely. I do charge it.

Mr. REED. But the Senator does not mean that my remarks are inspired by any packing house?

Mr. KENYON. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. REED. I am dealing with this question as a practical one.

Mr. KENYON. I was not referring to the opposition here—do not understand me in that way—but to the opposition that has been engendered throughout the country by the propaganda of the packers.

Mr. REED. There might be opposition for the reason that a man simply does not want a board sitting down here in Washington to assume the right to interfere in his business.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, they have a right to oppose the bill in every way they can.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire, if I may, to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa. From the colloquy which has just taken place, it seems to me, so far as the Senator has outlined the bill, that it does not go any further than we have already gone in creating the Federal Trade Commission. The Federal Trade Commission now has the power to determine the questions, for instance, first, is the matter one involving interstate commerce; second, is it one in which the public is concerned; and has there been a violation of the antitrust laws? Then, after hearing, if they find a violation of the law, they order the parties to quit. They have that authority now, and they do make such orders. They say, "You must cease and desist." That is as far as this proposed commission will go. So we shall not have gone any further than we have already authorized the Federal Trade Commission to go. That commission exercises jurisdiction in such cases now and makes orders to parties guilty of these objectionable practices to cease and desist—to quit such business. The trouble with that is that there is no penalty involved. As the Senator has suggested, the people go on and violate the law so far as they see fit. Then the commission can issue another order to desist.

Mr. KENYON. There is a penalty here. After the case has gone through the courts, or, if it is not taken to the courts, at the end of 30 days it becomes a binding order. Then, if they continue to pursue the same practice, there is a penalty. The bill goes further than the Federal Trade Commission act goes.

I had intended at some time to take up that question, and also the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act—and, of course, there is a difference between all those acts and the pending bill—but I will not attempt to do so this afternoon, as there is going to be plenty of opportunity for the discussion of this bill.

Mr. REED. I am very much interested in the Senator's views on these matters and I hope he will give them to us at an early date. I do not want to be misunderstood by reason of any questions I have asked in this debate. I am not committing myself on this bill. I am in search of information, of all the information I can get. I know the Senator from Iowa has studied the bill, and I say, not desiring to be merely complimentary, that I think he has a very great knowledge of these questions by reason of his long experience in the legal department, in his own private practice, and here as a Senator. I really want to get his views. If there is a solution of these difficulties, I want to help bring it about, but I do not want to try to do a useless thing.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, the Sherman law was practically destroyed by the decision of the Supreme Court as to the rule of reason. There is not much left to it.

I think there is some little comfort in the commodity-clause decision and that is related by analogy to the situation I have been discussing.

Here is a private business, namely, the production and marketing of coal. The railroads had proceeded for so long with their plan of owning the coal themselves and discriminating against other producers in favor of their own coal that finally Congress said to them: "You have got to get out of the coal business." They fought that through the courts, and I now hope that the decision—while I have not read it but have only seen it in the newspapers—upholds the action of Congress.

Here is the monopoly to which the Senator from Missouri has referred. If the packers go into a line of business that does not tend to create a monopoly, very well; but if they go ahead and create a monopoly and operate in interstate commerce and can not otherwise be regulated or restrained, why can not the Congress as to them, the same as in the case of the railroads engaged in the coal business, say, "If you can not be fair, if you can not be square and just about it, you have got to get out of the business"? We have not gone that far, and there is where we may be in trouble on the question of delegation of legislative power. We have put in the hands of the commission the power to draw that line.

As the Senator has made his suggestions, I desire to put into the RECORD one or two decisions at this point. I think I can safely say that the Supreme Court of the United States has never declared an act of Congress unconstitutional because of a delegation of legislative power. I have not been able to find any such decision. It has always sustained the very broad authorizations of power to make rules and regulations which Congress has conferred on the departments and Federal commissions.

I put into the RECORD the citation Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649), which establishes the rule that, despite the separation of powers, the Congress may lay down a general rule and leave to administrative officers the filling in of the details.

So, in Butfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470), the delegation of power was there sustained as to the Secretary of the Treasury to determine what teas could be excluded from the country under the congressional act prohibiting the importation of the lowest grades of tea. Discretion was left to the Secretary of the Treasury to determine the question.

The case of United States v. Grimaud (220 U. S., 506), I think is, perhaps, the clearest case on the question of the delegation of power. There the Agricultural Department was authorized to make rules and regulations, as is provided in the pending bill. In that instance it was provided that a violation of such rules might be punished criminally. The Supreme Court sustained a conviction for violation of the regulations made by the department.

In common with me, the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Wyoming were so opposed to making a violation of a mere rule, a rule passed by some commission or a rule promulgated by some officer of the Government, a criminal offense, that although one of the bills had such a provision in it originally we insisted that it go out. The Supreme Court of the United States, however, sustained such a provision in the case to which I have referred.

In the Intermountain Rate cases (234 U. S., 475), the court sustained a power delegated by Congress to the Interstate Commerce Commission to authorize a higher rate for a shorter haul despite the fact that Congress had established the principle in the act prohibiting higher rates for the short haul. In that case the rule-making power approached actually a setting aside of the principle established by Congress. That indicates the extent to which the courts have gone in sustaining such action.

Film Co. v. Ohio (236 U. S., 230) is an interesting case, and contains a complete review of the cases on the question of the delegation of power and of administrative power as distinguished from legislative power.

As I have said, in this bill the rules and regulations made by the commission are really not enforced until there is an opportunity for review by the courts of the validity of such rules and regulations. We felt that was essential to due process of law. I know the courts have uniformly held that judicial trials are not essential to due process of law, but we have met that question in a way that we believe safeguards it. I might insert in the RECORD, in case anyone should look at it hereafter, a few citations on that point.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption just at that point about the matter of due process of law?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hesitate a good deal to inquire about this, because I must confess to not having had any experience whatsoever in it, but I notice that on page 16, in line 18, this language occurs:

> The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the commission, duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case.

Then, going over to the next page, page 17, we find this language:

> No such order of the commission shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the packer or operator that the order is unsupported by evidence.

I ask the Senator if it is customary, in a procedure of this kind, to throw the burden of proof entirely upon the plaintiff, because apparently, under this language, the court itself is not permitted to accept any additional evidence.

Mr. KENYON. Let me say this: Of course, the court can send the matter back for additional evidence.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. There is a limitation there, so that it fairly may be said that it is not a de novo trial. Now, that limitation of judicial review is in accordance with the practice as to these boards, and the Supreme Court, as to orders of the Interstate Commerce Commssion, have themselves established a rule that if there is any evidence to support the finding, that is sufficient.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but under this language the packer or operator has to prove that there is no evidence.

Mr. KENYON. No; I think not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me read the language:

> Unless it is shown by the packer or operator that the order is unsupported by evidence.

Mr. KENYON. That is true, because the evidence is introduced, the order is made on that evidence; it then goes to the upper court, and there is evidence to support it. The burden would be on the packer to show that there was not sufficient evidence to support it. I think that when the court can send it back for further evidence, it obviates any such difficulty; and I want to call the Senator's attention to some cases right on that point, because I have given some thought to that question of limited judicial review and whether it should not be a complete judicial review in order to constitute due process of law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would this, in the Senator's judgment, constitute a limited judicial review?

Mr. KENYON. A limited judicial review; yes. I think it must fairly be said that it is, but at the same time it is due process of law. Whether it be wisdom to have a limited judicial review is, of course, another question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the procedure outlined here is in strict accordance with regular, orderly, judicial procedure. The review before the circuit court of appeals is in the nature of an appeal from the order of the commission; and whenever one goes to a court of appeal asking for a reversal of the order made below, whether he is the plaintiff in the case or the defendant in the case, the appellant is obliged to show that the order made is not supported by the evidence. So that it is just exactly the same practice that obtains in courts of equity and the same practice that obtains in courts of law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was not informed upon that point. Will the Senator from Iowa let me ask a question of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I am not through answering the Senator's question yet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not mean to interrupt.

Mr. KENYON. Is it another subject?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the same subject.

Mr. KENYON. All right; go ahead.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to ask, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa, whether the Senator from Montana thought it was good policy to lodge such a power with a governmental commission, and limit the review in this way, when it is applicable only to a commercial business?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The same limitation is made in connection with all these commissions which are empowered to enter into an inquiry of fact. The determination of the commission upon questions of fact has always been final whenever the facts are in controversy and disputed. A review can be had only when there is no evidence to sustain the finding. That is the regular course of procedure in the case of commissions and follows the practice of the courts of law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is this the practice pursued in connection with orders of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And in connection with orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission as well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Later on I should like to know what has been accomplished under it in the case of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. KENYON. In connection with the question of the Senator from New York, I want to say the pending packers' bill does not provide for de novo hearing by the Federal courts on appeal from the findings and orders of the proposed live-stock commission. It does provide for a review (p. 17, lines 1-7, sec. 27), but limits the grounds upon which the commission's action may be modified or set aside, to orders:

1. Unsupported by evidence;
2. Made without notice and hearing;
3. Contrary to the Constitution; and
4. Outside commission's jurisdiction.

This limitation of judicial review is in accordance with established practice in the United States courts on appeals from the Interstate Commerce Commission, as I suggested a moment ago. The Senator will find this doctrine sustained in Commission v. Illinois Central Railroad (215 U. S., 452), Procter & Gamble v. United States (225 U. S., 282), Manufacturers Co. v. United States (246 U. S., 257), Commission v. Union Pacific Railroad (222 U. S., 541).

The court said in that case—this is just a brief extract which I will read:

> In the cases thus far decided it has been settled that the orders of the commission are final unless (1) beyond the power which it could constitutionally exercise; or (2) beyond its statutory power; or (3) based upon a mistake of law. But questions of fact may be involved in the determination of questions of law, so that an order regular on its face may be set aside if it appears that (4) the rate is so low as to be confiscatory and in violation of the constitutional prohibition against taking property without due process of law; or (5) if the commission acted so arbitrarily and unjustly as to fix rates contrary to evidence or without evidence to support it; or (6) if the authority therein involved has been exercised in such an unreasonable manner as to cause it to be within the elementary rule that the substance, and not the shadow, determines the validity of the exercise of the power.

So I call the Senator's attention to that phrase, "or without evidence to support it." The Supreme Court of the United States held in these cases that if there is evidence to support it that is sufficient. The wisdom of the same is another matter and for the legislative power to determine.

> The findings of the commission are made prima facie true, and this report has ascribed to them the strength due to the judgments of a tribunal appointed by law and informed by experience. (Ill. Central v. I. C. C., 206 U. S., 441.) Its conclusions, of course, is subject to review, but when supported by evidence is accepted as final.

In Oregon Railroad v. Fairchild (224 U. S., 510) the court expressly discussed the contention that a State statute provided inadequate judicial review in that no de novo hearing in court was provided for. The statute was sustained on the ground that such de novo hearing was not essential to due process.

In the recent case of Houston v. St. Louis Packing Co. (249 U. S., 479) the court reviewing the cases declared that it would not review the decisions of the administrative departments made in pursuance of power to make rules and regulations unless such decisions were unsupported by evidence or beyond the jurisdiction conferred by Congress.

I remember—and I want to be perfectly fair about this—that when the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] was making some remarks on this bill he spoke of this very thing, and wanted to know if we had any objection to jury trials on these questions. I think I said at that time that I was very much in favor of jury trials on questions of fact. That, of course, operates as a mere delay, and unless it amounts to a denial of justice there is no necessity for jury trials as to every fact. If this is to amount to anything, I believe it is necessary to have something of this character, so that these interminable delays of juries shall not take place; but I am not averse myself to the determination by juries of questions of fact that arise, if substantial justice requires it.

While I am on this question of the law I think I will simply add this before concluding.

The bill itself is based on the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, and of course it would be useless to review the cases on that subject, because there is no other clause of the Constitution, I think, under which there have been so many decisions. There are over 1,500 cases on that subject; and from the time of Gibbons against Ogden to this day it has been held that the power of Congress to regulate commerce is absolutely free, without limitation, except that the fundamentals of the Constitution must be preserved, and its broad and universal scope has been declared again and again. Every case to a certain extent is dependent upon the particular situation and circumstances.

Mr. President, I did not intend to take anything like this amount of time. I have always been willing to concede that the section as to unrelated business was a very difficult section from the legal standpoint. We have done the best we can. It is so easy to rise and exclaim that troubles exist, great monopolies exist, and that the people who engage in these things ought to be sent to the penitentiary and that we have not the right remedy here. Perhaps we have not; but this report of the Federal Trade Commission challenged the attention of a number of Senators who had no interest whatsoever in it except the question of the public welfare, and we are trying to do the best we can. If anybody has any better remedy, there will be no pride of opinion as far as we are concerned. I can not understand the ideas that are in the heads of some people in this country that this continuous creation of monopoly, simply because it has gone on for the last 25 or 30 years, will keep going on and that the people will not find any way to regulate it.

I appreciate the force of many of the remarks which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has made. He is a keen lawyer, whose mind at once goes to the difficulties of the legal proposition. I wish he would help us solve these problems.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes, I should like to ask him a question that is in my mind.

Mr. KENYON. I am not quite through, but I shall be glad to have the Senator ask his question.

Mr. LENROOT. With regard to the powers of the commission, on page 10, I should like to ask the Senator as to the intention of the committee with reference to these various restrictions—whether they are all limited by commerce.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; "commerce" is defined, as the Senator will find.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand that; but, to illustrate, the bill says:

> Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer, any live stock or live-stock products for the purpose of apportioning the supply between any such packers—

That is not limited.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator will find that the bill gives a definition of "packers."

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator perhaps did not get my point.

Mr. KENYON. I do not get the Senator's point.

Mr. LENROOT (reading):

> Or unreasonably affecting the price of or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock or live-stock products in commerce.

The words "in commerce" apparently relate only to the last clause, and not to the first.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, the whole thing is based on transactions in commerce, being a regulation of commerce.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but my question was whether it was the intention of the committee, with reference to all of these restrictions, to restrict as to transactions in commerce?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. LENROOT. If that has not been accomplished, the Senator desires to see it accomplished?

Mr. KENYON. It was perhaps unfortunate wording. I am not at this moment prepared to say.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a short editorial from Wallace's Farmer, one of the leading farm papers of the West, on the subject of this packer legislation, and I believe I will ask the Secretary to read it at the desk. It is very short, and right to the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

PACKER LEGISLATION.

Many stockmen no doubt have been fooled by the great mass of matter which has been printed in the market papers in opposition to the legislation looking toward more control of the big packers. Stockmen should read these daily market papers with much mental reservation. As we suggested not long since, they depend for their support upon the commission men and other interests which center around the stockyards.

Now, it happens that although very little has been said about it, the packer bills which are now before the Senate committee provide for certain control of the commission men and the stockyards, as well as of the packers. Yet they are referred to all the time as if they dealt with legislation affecting the packers only. Consequently when the commission firm or the daily live-stock market papers point to the dangers of the bills it should be remembered that they themselves have a very direct personal interest. They say nothing about this. They assume to speak from a purely disinterested standpoint, and try to persuade their hearers or readers that this legislation will cripple the packers and will, therefore, greatly injure the live-stock man. Consequently they have been able to fool a great many stockmen.

Whenever there is a conflict of interest between the producer and the packer, or between the producer and the commission men, or between the producer and the stockyards companies, the live-stock market press will invariably be found on the side of the packers, or the commission men, or the stockyards, and not on the side of the producer. Their bread is buttered, not by the producer, but by these other interests, and it is human nature for them to be favorable to the people by whom they are supported.

While there are some provisions in the Kenyon bill which may seem to be rather drastic, and while some stockmen are particularly fearful of the proposal to place such great power over the packers in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, we do not think there is any danger that legislation will be enacted which will cripple the packers, provided it is enacted soon.

Those stockmen who are opposing this legislation are not doing the right thing by their fellow producers. If we do not get some legislation this fall or winter which will give the Government some control over the packing industry it is dead certain that such legislation will come later; and the longer it is delayed the more dangerous it is likely to be from the standpoint of the producer. It is astonishing to us that the packers themselves do not see this. They have been under fire for 30 years past, and the fire has been getting hotter all the time. They can expect nothing else than that it will continue to get hotter until remedial legislation is enacted; and we should think they would be glad to accept a fair bill which will give the Government some supervision over their operation. We should think they would welcome this way of relieving themselves of some of their responsibility.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say, in pointing out matters under the bill, that there will be a number of amendments proposed. The most important one will be to strike out all of section 15 except the first four lines. There will be an amendment to section 17 by adding an immunity clause. That section as it is drawn seems to some of us to be amenable to the objection that it might violate the fourth amendment to the Constitution. There will be other minor amendments, and I think it would be well if these amendments could be offered pretty soon, and then the bill reprinted with the amendments. It might save Senators some work.

Title 5 of this bill is a voluntary registration of packers and stockyards. This is an attempt to provide for an experiment in public markets. That is a portion of the bill which has been attacked a good deal, but it must be borne in mind that it is an entirely voluntary matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was attracted by what the Senator said with respect to the purpose of Title 5. If it is to apply only to public markets, why does it not say so?

Mr. KENYON. I think those who had it in mind first wanted it to read so. Then the question arose, Why should not others go into it? Why should not individuals, as well as municipalities?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It applies practically to all the business of the corporations provided for in the first part of the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I think it must be a public market. Subdivision E of article 5, and one other section which I do not see just at present, seem to me to establish public markets. I have not been particularly concerned about that feature of the bill. It will be an experiment, and it might be well to have it tried. It might be limited to municipal markets.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I call the Senator's attention to the language in line 12, page 19, where it says, referring to this subject:

of conducting or operating stockyards, or slaughtering live stock, or processing, preserving, or storing live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs.

That includes all the packers.

Mr. KENYON. It may be; but they are not compelled to go into it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall have something to say about that later on. Under this bill how they can keep from going into it passes my comprehension.

Mr. KENYON. That may be true. I shall be very much interested in hearing the Senator's argument on that line. It is not intended to force anybody into it, but to make it an entirely voluntary matter.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator give his reasons for seeking to have another commission created? Why not leave it to the Federal Trade Commission? The creation of another commission means another bureau and another set of employees and offices. Can not the Federal Trade Commission attend to this matter?

Mr. KENYON. I think that is a very proper inquiry. That matter was discussed, and many members of the committee wanted it left with the Federal Trade Commission. The Federal Trade Commission seems to be swamped with its work, and this is a subject which is about as large as the question of the control regulation of the railroads. Mr. Mayer, the counsel of Armour, stated before the committee that their business was as large as the railroad business of the country, including, I assume, the intercorporate relations. So the final judgment was that it should be a separate commission, because of the magnitude of the subject. There is no other business of such magnitude in the world. I myself do not have any objection to its going to the Federal Trade Commission, and I think a great many of the members of the committee feel the same way, but if it is to amount to anything it must be carried on by those who can do the work prescribed by the bill. I do not like to increase the number of commissions. Were this not a matter of such tremendous importance to the producers of the country I would not now favor the creation of a new commission.

The testimony before the committees and taken by the Federal Trade Commission has shown the existence of a combination among the big packers running back many years. It has shown its development by discriminatory methods, unfair dealings, rebates on railroads, and the exercise of its great power to force concessions. It has built up an institution which reaches out into the banks, many of the newspapers, railroads, business of nearly every character, and apparently is reaching out for a control of the American food supply.

The Government has tried for many years to regulate it. Indictments have been secured and trials had. Injunction after injunction has been issued in the courts. Investigation after investigation by Congress, and yet nothing has been accomplished. Present laws seem insufficient or inefficient to cope with the situation.

It would seem that the packers themselves would desire to get rid of the suspicion that surrounds them among the American producers and consumers alike. A restoration of confidence in the market places would be not only helpful to the country but helpful to them—a feeling among the producers that there is no collusion in buying; that the market places are free from any agreements, open or secret, between the big packers.

Is it any wonder that such suspicion and lack of confidence exists when the records show that the packers have agreed on percentages of buying; that they have secret memoranda, code systems, secreting their names; that they have attempted to control newspapers by subsidizing them; that they have maintained a great lobby at Washington; have employed a notorious lobbyist who, according to the evidence, gave dinners and luncheons at Washington hotels to those in public life from whom information could be secured; that their activities extended even to the furnishing of a special train to great agricultural editors from Chicago to their meeting in Atlantic City; and other innumerable things and practices shown by the record?

The instances of the witnesses were rather amazing. There were some one hundred and forty-four witnesses before the Senate committee. Often it ran like this: Mr. Witness came to town. Often he did not know what the fare was from his home. He would stop at the Willard Hotel, but seldom inquire as to the rate for his room, and did not know. He would be taken to the American Meat Packers' Institute, the lobbying branch of the packers, in the Munsey Building, his testimony arranged and then handed out to the newspapers. When the aforesaid Mr. Witness appeared before the committee he generally insisted on reading this prepared statement. Sometimes it was a little embarrassing, because he would not have a chance to read it before it had been given out to the papers. Most of the witnesses claimed they were not connected with the packers. Many subsequent developments showed that many of them were. Many of them were the same as appeared at the hearings against the Borland resolution, at which time, also, the expense of a great many of those was paid by the big packers.

Propaganda has been carried on in every direction. The testimony of Mr. Burke, who is a stockman himself, before the committee was interesting on this subject. He said, as found on page 1545, Part II:

> Then, the next step in the campaign was to get as many producers as possible. In connection with that, there was the general propaganda to deceive the public and a campaign of misrepresentation or intimidation. The vicious practices in connection with that propaganda are beyond anything the country had ever known. There has been intimidation, there has been repression, there has been everything except the truth published in regard to these bills. You have been overwhelmed, I know, with an avalanche of men who have come down here purporting to represent the live-stock industry. The producers are the principal end of the live-stock industry, and the producers you have heard here, I venture to say, do not represent the one-hundredth part of the live-stock industry.

He presented a letter from Mr. Houx, president of the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, one of the few live-stock exchanges that has not denounced this bill. Mr. Houx's letter is as follows:

> KANSAS CITY, MO., August 12, 1919.
> Mr. E. L. BURKE,
> Bolinas, Calif.
> DEAR SIR: Your good letter to hand, and I note what you say about the Kenyon-Kendrick bill.
> These packers are putting on a campaign of propaganda such as was never known. They start in with the men that borrow money from the packers' bank and influence them to enter a protest against this legislation on the ground that it will hurt credits and demoralize business. They have captured a good many of the big operators of this immediate territory, but the producers of Greenwood County, Kans., passed some resolutions, which I inclose, which seems to me to be to the point.
> Our national exchange, headed by Mr. Brown and Mr. Heineman, are taking the lead in fighting this legislation.
> Mr. Brown is going to have Mr. Heineman in Washington during the hearing to round up all the people who are adverse to the Kenyon-Kendrick bill and do everything possible to defeat it.
> I hope, however, the common people are aroused until Congress is going to act.
> The live-stock exchanges seem to be fighting this legislation on the ground that they are put in the same category with the packers.

> KANSAS CITY LIVE STOCK EXCHANGE.
> E. W. HOUX, President.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I just came into the Chamber a moment ago and I heard the statement of the Senator, as I interpret it, that substantially all the witnesses appearing before the committee testified to the effect, or at least the fact was elicited, that they came to Washington and went to the Munsey Building and thereafter gave statements which had been prepared by the packers.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator puts it broader than I would put it. I was describing the average journey of a witness from his home to Washington, taking a type. I do not say they were all of that kind, not at all. There were many splendid men here protesting against the legislation.

Mr. KING. I did not intend, and I apologize if I did, to attribute to the Senator a statement he did not make; but I have had occasion within the last day to examine very briefly a portion of the testimony which was taken before the committee which was considering the so-called Kenyon-Kendrick bill. I read one volume very hastily. There are two volumes, I understand, and I very hurriedly glanced at the second volume. In the first volume there is the testimony of a large number of men, apparently men of standing and of repute in their respective communities, men from Virginia, from Baltimore, from California, from Arizona, and from the Senator's own State, and the testimony of every one of those men in that volume, as I hurriedly glanced over the volume, indicated that they came here of their own motion; that they testified independently; that they had no relation whatever to the packers; indeed, their testimony was quite the reverse of the statement which has just been made by the Senator.

I was interested to know whether these two volumes contain the testimony which the Senator has in mind in the statement which he just made.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator keeps attributing to me a statement that I do not understand I have made. I described the course of a witness, and many of them did that very thing. I do not want for a moment to be understood that there were not men here who had no connection at all with the packers, but I do want to be understood that many witnesses came here claiming they had no connection with the packers when they had, and that many of them were sent here through agencies of the packers, and some of them were the very same witnesses who testified against the Borland resolution in the House some years ago, where their expenses were then paid by the packers. Do not understand me as saying that as to all or even a large percentage of them. Does the Senator understand how I contend my statement is?

Mr. KING. I think I understand it; and yet, if I may be pardoned for trespassing further upon the Senator's time, there was not a word in the testimony of the witnesses whose testimony I read which would indicate that they had their expenses paid by the packers or anyone else. Indeed, they were independent packers and stock growers, and there was nothing to show the slightest relationship between them and the packers to whom the bill refers.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will pursue his reading through the other volume, I think he will find sufficient evidence to sustain my statement.

I want to put in the RECORD from Mr. Burke a statement, on page 1551, in which he in turn refers to a statement made by Mr. Clay, who is the head, he says, of the largest stock-commission concern in the United States. In that statement, which Senators will find on page 1551 and which is significant as far as this fight is concerned, here is a man speaking, the head of one of the great live-stock commission concerns. Mr. Burke read from Mr. Clay's statement, as follows:

> Every attempt to discipline the packers while failing has reacted on the producer. Do not forget that the packer, the banker, the commission man, and the others allied with them can defend themselves, can meet the issues as they arise, but the farmers and feeders, the ranchmen and flockmasters as units can not defend themselves.

It may be that we have reached a position in this country where the packer, the banker, the commission man, and those allied with him, as Mr. Clay speaks of them, can all assemble on one side and the farmers, the ranchers, and flockmasters can be defenseless on their side.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator give that interpretation to Mr. Clay's testimony?

Mr. KENYON. I give it as what Mr. Burke sets out in his testimony in a statement from Mr. Clay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator put that interpretation upon Mr. Clay's statement?

Mr. KENYON. I am reading it just as it is. I do not see any other interpretation to be put on it, but it does seem like a foolish statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think if the Senator will read it again he will see that no such interpretation can be given to it. He says the organized end of business, such as bankers and packers and commission men, can defend themselves, whereas the unorganized end of the live-stock business, the producers, are not in a position to do it. Does that mean that the bankers and packers and the live stock commission men, of whom Mr. Clay is one, are allied against the producers?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think Mr. Clay meant that?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know what he meant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator said just afterwards that he meant that.

Mr. KENYON. I will put it all in the RECORD so that there will be no question about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The commission men can not live without the producers.

Mr. KENYON. But I do think the packers have such influence with the banks, the railroads, and the great interests in this country that they can do just about what we might say under the interpretation that has been given it by Mr. Burke.

But there is no use of camouflaging about that. I have put in the RECORD here a list of the banks in which they are interested. I have put in the RECORD some of the newspapers where the record shows they contributed money to the editors and the policy of the paper then was changed. I do not for one instant hesitate to say that with their great power in these banks and the companies they control, that they have used as to the railroads on the traffic question, they can do just about what Mr. Burke says. They think they can do it, and I am not certain but what they can. But if they keep on doing it there will be a Congress here some time that will put some regulation on them that will stop it.

I do not want to be anything but fair, and I put in the RECORD pages 1551 and 1552, from which I have just read. I will put in anything further about it that the Senator from New York thinks ought to go in the RECORD instead.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Mr. BURKE. I am not familiar with the situation in Kansas City. We have one in Omaha, and Mr. Gustafson, who is here to testify, is thoroughly familiar with the cooperative movement, and will be able to answer that very much better than I can.

I will not take your time, gentlemen, to read any more resolutions passed by exchanges. The St. Joe Live Stock Exchange also throws itself a bouquet for its high business standards and its splendid reputation as a business organization.

Senator KENYON. Who is going to throw bouquets at them if they do not do it themselves? Do you object to that?

Mr. BURKE. I think Mr. Williams, the solicitor, might throw a few at them.

I want to read, as one of the most illuminating things that I have seen from a commission man, and as showing their attitude, from a statement made by Mr. John Clay, who is the head of probably the largest live-stock commission concern in the United States. Mr. Clay is a man who is doing business at Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, Denver, Kansas City, St. Paul, Buffalo, St. Joseph, Fort Worth, Sioux City, and El Paso. They not only do a tremendous live-stock commission business, but they are also bankers. John Clay & Co. are private bankers who loan immense amounts of money to stockmen. They are probably the largest lenders of money, as commission men, in the United States, besides doing this very large commission business. Mr. Clay does not often come out in his weekly report and discuss legislative matters. In fact, in the beginning he rather apologized for it. He says that ordinarily they keep out of these matters, but under the present circumstances this bill is so drastic and one-sided that it deserves the attention of farmers and ranchmen, and so he takes his pen in hand and writes—and he is quite a writer, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the same Clay that is associated with Clay, Robinson & Co., of St. Paul?

Mr. BURKE. Yes, sir; this is the founder of that business. He says: "In this line we have the marvelous proposal made of placing a $10,000-a-year man to control, guide, and harass the greatest and most technical industry of this country. It is not the packer alone. You must go deeper. If sauce is good for the goose, it is good for the gander. If the packer has to be disciplined, it is reasonable that the farmer should be treated in a similar way. You must go to the logical end of the road. If you restrict others in their business, why not all? We all live under the same flag. We are certainly entitled to the same amount of justice, the same free field for our talents, our industry, our self-denial and achievements."

Now, gentlemen, the argument is this: If you catch and hang a horse thief, the next thing to do is to go to the owner of the horse and hang him.

I quote again from Mr. Clay:

"Admit the principle of those bills and you stop to a greater or less degree initiative. You hamper individual effort. You stop the work of commercial conquest. The pioneer is relegated to the distant past. The same paralysis that crept slowly over our railroad, telegraph, and telephone services under Government control will appear in our live-stock industry. It will go from packing house to ranch. It will become moribund. The progressive spirit will lose its energy, its aggressive methods. Are we to go back to the old days of the country butcher, with his insanitary killing house, his wasteful methods?

"Every attempt to discipline the packers, while failing, has reacted on the producer. Do not forget that the packer, the banker, the commission man, and the others allied with them can defend themselves, can meet the issues as they arise; but the farmers and feeders, the ranchmen and flockmasters as units can not defend themselves."

The packer, the banker, the commission man, and the others allied with them—there is the unholy combination—and Mr. Clay does not make any bones of admitting that they are on one side while the farmers and the ranchmen are defenseless. If that is the case, gentlemen, is it not about time that somebody was protecting the defenseless farmer and the ranchman?

Mr. KENYON. I also put in the RECORD from Mr. Burke's testimony concerning how one original supporter of the bill seems to have been lost. I read from page 1558:

One man—one of the vice presidents of our association—has come out in an open letter to Senator SMOOT, in which he opposes the legislation. His name is Mr. M. K. Parsons. He is an old-time stock man, lives at Salt Lake City, and his attitude in the matter is rather hard to explain until you run the matter down and find that his son is the general manager and vice president of the stockyards at Salt Lake City, and the Cudaby people are, I think, the only packers there, and I think they control and own the stockyards at Salt Lake City.

Then I put in the RECORD, too, on this subject the invitation extended to Mr. Burke by the American Meat Packers' Institute to join the special train to their meeting at Atlantic City:

THE INSTITUTE OF THE AMERICAN MEAT PACKERS,
Chicago, August 22, 1919.

Mr. E. L. BURKE,
Omaha, Nebr.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you please consider this letter an invitation for you to attend our forthcoming convention at Atlantic City, September 15, 16, and 17, as a guest of this organization?

As you may have heard, the American Meat Packers' Association recently changed its name to the Institute of American Meat Packers, at the same time transferring its headquarters from New York to Chicago. The convention to which you are invited is the annual meeting of the organization and will be of more than passing importance.

We will appreciate an immediate reply to this letter of invitation. Also, please bear in mind that, if your plans permit, we want you to make the trip from Chicago to Atlantic City on our special train, which will leave Chicago Saturday, September 13, at about 1 p. m.

Hoping to hear from you,

R. G. GOULD, Secretary.

Then I want to put in the RECORD also pages 1559 and 1560, one or two suggestions, one from Mr. Hoover, from his statement regarding the packers:

I scarcely need to repeat the views—that I expressed to you nearly a year ago, that there is here a growing and dangerous domination of the handling of the Nation's foodstuffs.

He says—

Referring to the packers Mr. Hoover says:

Their hold of the meat and many other trades has become so large through the vast equipment of slaughterhouses, cars, and distributing branches and banking alliances which each of the five controls that it is practically inconceivable that any two firms can rise to their class, and in any event even sharp competition between the two can only tend to reduce the number of five and not increase it.

It is certain, to my mind, that these businesses have been economically efficient in their period of competitive upgrowth, but as time goes on this efficiency can not fail to diminish, and, like all monopolies, begin to defeat itself by repression rather than efficiency. The worst social result of this whole growth in domination of trades is the undermining of the initiative and the equal opportunity of our people and the tyranny which necessarily follows in the commercial world.

Mr. Hoover did not hesitate to speak of the combination of packers and bankers.

I wish to put in the RECORD also, as part of my remarks, a letter to the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], which was introduced in testimony from a farmer and ranchmen in the State of Texas, showing the propaganda carried on in that State against these measures.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS,
August 26, 1919.

Mr. W. J. MICKEL,
153 Franklin Avenue, Oshkosh, Wis.

DEAR SIR: I have your courteous favor of the 23d, calling my attention to the information which you possess, relative to practices indulged by the big packers.

These concerns are now being investigated by committees of Congress, and I wish you would get in touch immediately with Senator Asle J. Gronna, who is the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture. Tell him what you know and what you could testify to. It is important that you should attend to this matter at once.

Sincerely, yours,

CHARLES E. TOWNSEND.

COMMITTEE ON REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS,
August 29, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I inclose herewith for the consideration of yourself and other members of the Agricultural Committee a letter from Mr. V. O. Hildreth, of Aledo, Tex., and a marked copy of the Fort Worth Record.

Yours, very truly,

MORRIS SHEPPARD.

Senator A. J. GRONNA, Washington.

ALEDO, TEX., August 26, 1919.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I greatly appreciate the excellent service you are rendering the country at the present time, as well as what you have done in the past. May I write a few lines in confirmation of deductions at which you have already arrived.

In the first place, much is being said about the hurtful effects of the packer agitation. The packers have nobody but themselves to blame for this agitation. Their heartless acts of greed have become so glaring that he who runs must read.

So far as the feeders of cattle were concerned, things were moving along very serenely, and had been for a year or more, until the latter half of May last the packer began to lower the price of fat cattle which we prepare at an unprecedented cost. In the space of about three weeks values of fat steers were reduced by the packers to the extent of nearly $5 per hundred, where the manufactured beef was commanding, like other commodities, the highest prices in the history of our country. Cattle feeders in many instances were losing from $40 to $60 or more per head. Many of the feeders had used large quantities of cottonseed cake, for which they paid those same packers unprecedented prices. The outlook to the feeders was exceedingly dark, and had the people followed the advice of the packers and their allies and remained quiet there is no telling where the calamity would have ended. When the lowest prices were being paid, just preceding the alarm that went up from all parts of the country warning people against the doings of the packers, the packer buyers at Fort Worth, and, no doubt, at other markets, were daily, if not oftener, receiving telegrams from Chicago packer headquarters ordering the packer boys to buy cattle lower. Immediately after this sudden and thunderous alarm went up from the people the packer boys were advised that it might be a wiser policy not to completely fleece the feeder. When the market went wrong, do you know, these fellows tried to persuade the feeders and others that Wilson had done it.

As to the commission men, I would remind you that they are the tenants and dependents of the packer. Should they have the temerity to take issue with the packer, then buyers could be instructed to give the crumbs to such commission firm. Cattle feeders would discover the firm's inability to get the prices and hunt other salesmen. Then I am informed that some of the commission houses use packer money to finance much of their cattle operations.

I would say that many of these commission men, in fact all of them perhaps, are likeable men, but there are no statesmen in their ranks that anyone knows.

If you will allow me to suggest, I should be careful to not make regulations too drastic to begin with. I do not think they should own the stockyards, because one set of packers are liable to keep other packers out and thus to some extent lessen the little competition that exists. I have heard that other packers wish to come to Fort Worth, but they are kept away by Armour and Swift, who own and control the yards and other facilities. I got this from good authority. But I am not sure but what the packers should be allowed to retain their refrigerator cars. Take the cars from them and they might have an excuse to connive with the railroads, which they to a larger extent than many suspect already control, and fail to move their beef promptly. The packers might take losses for a while and do a great many things of an obstructive character in the hope of finally winning out. Every intelligent cattleman and citizen desires that the packers make just profits, but at the same time they to some extent realize the blighting effects of monopoly that are too numerous to mention. Possibly by the use of an efficient detective system much of such rebellion might be prevented. My idea is that the regulations should be of an enforceable character and so sound and reasonable as not to call for future mollification.

With best wishes, I am, yours,

V. O. HILDRETH.

Mr. KENYON. In the testimony of Mr. Pugsley, of Nebraska, before the committee, he referred to the same propaganda and introduced a letter from Mr. Graham, president of the Western Nebraska Live Stock Association. He says this—and I want to read it, because it refers particularly to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], who has been diligent in this legislation and who has suffered the usual abuse that comes to a man who stands for this kind of legislation. This president of the Western Nebraska Live Stock Association says, after speaking of the sentiment on the bills, and so forth:

I am unqualifiedly in favor of the Kendrick-Kenyon bill, and put more faith in the honest efforts of JOHN KENDRICK than in all the propaganda put out by the packers and their satellites. Senator KENDRICK'S vision extends into the future, and it will only be a short time until the packers will have such a strangle hold on the live-stock industry that no remedial legislation can relieve. Some say let them go, the higher they climb the harder they will fall; that would be all right if in falling they did not carry the whole industry along with them.

I hope that my colleague will not object to the bouquet I am throwing him. He has had enough brickbats in this matter.

So it goes. The same old tactics are carried out with the tremendous power that comes from unlimited funds to deceive and fool the American people. They tried it in the days of Theodore Roosevelt. He was sneered at, abused, vilified through the influence of packer money because he tried to secure fair meat inspection so that the people would not be compelled, when they were robbed, to at least be robbed for rotten meat.

Has the public no right to be concerned with the great power that the packers have developed in the meat and food industries; their ramifications; their influence; their interrelations with banks and all other lines of business; their power to secure great credit; their power to crush all rivals; and to exercise combination over all the important foods of the country? Not only that, but a reaching out for an international control of meat products with foreign companies.

The attorney of one of the packers before the committee admitted frankly—and he was a frank man and, I think, tried to be helpful to the committee, Mr. Meyer—that their business was greater than the business of the railroads. It can not longer be said to be a private business. It is the same fight that was made to control the railroads.

The same arguments were then used that are being used now. Let business alone; do not shackle industry. That fight went on for 20 years, and it may be that this one will continue equally as long; but in the end there will only be one result—the people of the country will not permit their food supply to be dominated by a few men or a few corporations, and this fight will go on until such a condition is rendered impossible.

The men who are fighting this measure had better realize that legislation which may seem radical now, when the people once become aroused will seem rather conservative in comparison with the legislation which will then be enacted. This bill, however, is not a radical bill.

One organization here in the city is fighting the bill because it is not radical enough. So we hear on the one side that we are not going far enough, and on the other that we are trying to destroy business, but the issue is whether this control over the food supply of this Nation is to be exercised by a combination of five packers or whether it is to be regulated by the Government.

I know of the objections that will be raised, of course. It will be said that there is an earnest desire to help the people, but the sad situation is that the Constitution prevents us helping them.

The commission reached the conclusions enunciated in Part I, pages 389 to 391. I am not going to read them, but I insert them as a part of my remarks in the RECORD.

The extract referred to is as follows:

[Federal Trade Commission Report, Part I, pp. 389–391.]

CHAPTER IX. CONCLUSIONS.

The great power of the five packers in the meat, by-product, and food industries, the history of their growth, the ramifications of their control and influence, their interrelations, and the corporate machinery through which they work are matters that command public attention.

A fair consideration of the course the five packers have followed and the position they have already reached must lead to the conclusion that they threaten the freedom of the market of the country's food industries and of the by-product industries linked therewith. They constitute a force operating with increasing power in the direction of monopoly of an important part of the country's necessities.

An approaching packer domination of all important foods in this country and an international control of meat products with foreign companies seems a certainty unless fundamental action is taken to prevent it. The meat-packer control of other foods will not require long in developing. However rapid the acquisition of slaughtering plants and stockyards, private car lines and systems of branch houses has been, it can not be compared with the rapidity with which the big packers, now possessed of an unrivaled organism for controlling distribution, can make themselves dominant in other fields of the food industry.

It has been shown that in 1917 Armour & Co. as an incident to its business of the year, from handling practically no rice became the greatest rice merchant in the world; and that in the same year it made an increase of $9,500,000 in its sales of canned goods, this increase being more than one and a half times as great as the total sales of canned goods by two of the largest independent wholesalers in the country, concerns which have built up their trade in the course of a long period of business enterprise.

The history of the packers' growth in power is interwoven with illegal combinations, rebates, and with undisclosed control of corporations. As to the devices for secret control—whether used by the packers or by others—there does not exist adequate law. Present law does not reach the "bearer warrant" device found in the case of the Chicago Stock Yards Co. of Maine or the much used dummy stockholder device illustrated in the Kansas City Stock Yards Co. and the Chicago Bearing Metal Co. Public interest suffers by secrecy of ownership. The true ownership should be open, ascertainable without need of searching investigation by governmental agencies.

The competitor is in jeopardy so long as he has not the knowledge of true ownership, and the public is entitled to such knowledge. Unfair methods of competition are now made unlawful by the Federal Trade Commission act, and among such methods the maintenance of bogus competitors is one, but in the absence of law preventing secrecy of ownership unfair competition may run its course to the goal of monopoly and accomplish the ruin of competitors without the secret ownership being suspected and consequently without complaint to the commission or investigation of the facts.

A customer or consumer is also entitled to know, it would seem, what owners are behind a company that solicits public patronage of its goods or service. A man who consciously desires not to patronize a given company should not be put in the position of subsequently finding that he has unconsciously been purchasing from the same interests under a different name.

The theory of the chartering of corporations by the State involves a certain degree of supervision and regulation of the corporation, one customary requirement being that the incorporators of the company shall be named. It is still more important that the supervising power should know the ownership that directs the policy of a company in its active life.

Investors and minority stockholders, in fairness, should know the real control of the corporations in which they propose to place or have placed their money; and conversely majority stockholders when outsiders buy into a company should know who it is that has become a stockholder.

It is of especial importance, publicly, that ownership should be open in order to prevent evasion of surtaxes on income. Income returned in the name of a dummy if taxed on the basis of the dummy's income in practice pays a less rate than if it were taxed to the true owner.

Mr. KENYON. Beyond any question of doubt, under this record, the great packers of the country constitute a monopoly practically controlling an essential food product that the people must have in order to live. We are told that there is no way to be found to regulate this monopoly; that the thing is to let it alone; that we must not touch business; that the problem will work itself out. If the fact of monopoly and combination be established—and I base my whole argument on that; that it is a combination and monopoly—and yet people are to be told that no way can be found by the Government to regulate it; that we are powerless under constitutional limitations; then the people may well inquire whether or not the Government is a success or a failure. However, I do not believe we are violating, and my reverence for the Constitution is such that I would not urge violating, the Constitution. We are not doing that; we are providing a commission under the law and limiting it so that there can be no question of due process of law.

Mr. President, I have taken too much time of the Senate and will not now discuss the question any further.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 9, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 8, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Father soul, above all, through all, in us all, whose laws are inexorable, whose mercy endureth forever, we bless Thee for life, its opportunities for intellectual, moral, and spiritual attainments, who presideth over the destiny of men and of nations, we thank Thee for our Government—a precious heritage handed down by our fathers, its Constitution which has served us for a hundred and thirty-two years and made us strong and great, its Star-Spangled Banner whose majestic folds afford protection to every American citizen. Make us wise and strong and pure that we may go forward with undaunted courage to the larger life in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MINORITY VIEWS ON IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SABATH. To make a unanimous-consent request. Yesterday the House granted unanimous consent for two days in which to file minority views on the immigration bill. I ask unanimous consent to have the right up to 12 o'clock to file that report.

The SPEAKER. Twelve o'clock when?

Mr. SABATH. To-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two days.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the Speaker will permit, the gentleman asks permission to file his minority report to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may file his minority views up to 12 o'clock to-night on the immigration bill.

Mr. SABATH. That would also include the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would that delay the consideration of the bill to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. SIEGEL. It would not delay consideration.

Mr. SABATH. It would not.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 34.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

LEAVE TO PRINT TELEGRAM.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram showing a resolution which was passed at a mass meeting of the farmers in my district in regard to the deflation of the currency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the telegram as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object. It is too early in the session to begin to insert telegrams.

MINORITY MEMBERS OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. To present the list of the minority members of the Committee on Appropriations agreed to and by the direction of the Democratic caucus. Their names are presented in the order they will rank. I move their election.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, by direction of the Democratic caucus, presents a list of the minority members of the Committee on Appropriations, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOSEPH W. BYRNS, of Tennessee; THOMAS U. SISSON, of Mississippi; JAMES MCANDREWS, of Illinois; JOHN M. EVANS, of Montana; JOHN J. EAGAN, of New Jersey; JAMES P. BUCHANAN, of Texas; JAMES A. GALLIVAN, of Massachusetts; JAMES F. BYRNES, of South Carolina; JOHN H. SMALL, of North Carolina; S. HUBERT DENT, of Alabama; THOMAS L. RUBEY, of Missouri; EDWARD E. HOLLAND, of Virginia; WILLIAM W. HASTINGS, of Oklahoma; WILLIAM A. AYRES, of Kansas; and THOMAS F. SMITH, of New York.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, is it the intention to have these men serve in the rank in which their names were read?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes. I so stated.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Members will be elected.

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY—MERCHANT MARINE MEDAL ACT.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of the committees.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts (when the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 13264.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] calls up from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries the bill H. R. 13264. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13264, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13264, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13264) to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, it is a very short bill and should be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to present, but not in the name of Congress, a medal of merit of appropriate design with a bar and ribbon, together with a rosette or other device to be worn in lieu thereof, to any person in the merchant marine of the United States who since the 6th day of April, 1917, has distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service in the line of his profession or by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government.

SEC. 2. That no more than one medal of merit shall be issued to any one person, but for each succeeding deed or service sufficient to justify the award of a medal, the President may award a suitable bar or other suitable emblem or insignia to be worn with the decoration and the corresponding rosette or other device.

SEC. 3. That, except as otherwise prescribed herein, no medal or bar or suitable emblem or insignia in lieu of said medal shall be issued to any person after more than five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof, unless a specific statement or report distinctly setting forth the act or distinguished service and suggesting or recommending official recognition thereof shall have been made and substantiated at the time of the act or service or within five years thereafter.

SEC. 4. That in case an individual who shall distinguish himself dies before the making of the award to which he may be entitled, the award nevertheless may be made and the medal or bar or other emblem or insignia presented within five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof to such representative of the deceased as the President may designate.

SEC. 5. That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to delegate, under such conditions, regulations, and limitations as he shall prescribe, to a board of three persons appointed by and under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, the powers of making investigation and recommendation to the Secretary of Commerce of those entitled to a medal of merit as provided by this act. And the President is further authorized to make from time to time any and all rules, regulations, and orders which he shall deem necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act and to execute the full purpose and intention thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is recognized.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time on this bill to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this bill will require much discussion. It was sent to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries by the present Secretary of Commerce, a former Member of this House, the Hon. J. W. Alexander. The preliminary work with reference to the bill was made by a committee or commission appointed by his predecessor as Secretary of Commerce.

During the war with Germany one of the branches of our Government which contributed very largely to our success and ultimate victory was the merchant marine of the United States. It will be remembered that during the war the merchant marine of the country was an arm, or a branch, of the Federal Government. Not only the enormous fleet which was built by the Government directly through the Shipping Board, but a large number of privately owned vessels which were commandeered by the Government for use in the war, served the very essential purpose of carrying our men, our arms, our munitions, and our supplies of every kind to the other side. It was a service that not only involved much labor and much attention on the part of those engaged in it, but it actually did involve considerable danger and resulted in some loss of life. The ships of the merchant marine were, of course, subject to attack by German submarines. We remember how anxious the Government was to secure ships for its use during the early days of the war. Practically all of those who took part in the war in service which involved danger and sacrifice have received some sort of recognition from the Government. Such recognition is being given daily now in the award of medals or other insignia demonstrating the appreciation of the Nation of the service rendered by the representatives of our country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will my friend yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think I have any opposition to this bill, but I suppose the gentleman understands that there are thousands of those who were recommended for distinguished service on the field of battle who never have received any insignia or medal, nor have the recommendations ever been carried out. That is especially true of those who belong to the National Guard.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have no doubt, in fact I am aware, that the situation exists to which the gentleman refers, and I think all of us regret that the Government has been tardy or slow in recognizing the men who have distinguished themselves by special service to the Government during the war. But I conceive that that is no reason why we should fail to pass legislation giving the executive or administrative branch of the Government the authority to recognize such service in the merchant marine.

This bill is not intended to grant such recognition or such medals to every man who participated in the merchant marine service; only to those who distinguished themselves by extraordinary heroism or by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government.

I will call attention briefly to the provisions of the bill. The first section provides—

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to present, but not in the name of Congress, a medal of merit of appropriate design with a bar and ribbon, together with a rosette or other device to be worn in lieu thereof, to any person in the merchant marine of the United States who since the 6th day of April, 1917—

That is, since our entry into the war—has distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service in the line of his profession or by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government.

Section 2 provides that not more than one such medal be given to any person, but that an additional bar or some other suitable emblem may be worn with the medal given to those who have distinguished themselves on more than one occasion.

Section 3 provides that the medal must be awarded within a period of five years from the date of the service, unless the application has been presented and suitable foundation laid for receiving the medal within the period of five years.

Section 4 provides that if the person entitled to such recognition has deceased, the President may designate some other person, for instance, some member of his family, to receive the medal.

Section 5 provides that the President is authorized to delegate to a board of three persons appointed by him and under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, the power of making investigation and recommendation to the Secretary of Commerce of those who are entitled to a medal of merit under the provisions of this act, and, further, that the President is authorized to establish rules and regulations for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. KNUTSON). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do.

Mr. WALSH. What is contemplated as the merchant marine of the United States under this bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The merchant marine which was under the control of the United States during the war.

Mr. WALSH. What does that include—simply cargo and passenger carrying vessels?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not believe I understand the question.

Mr. WALSH. Is not that limited to passenger and cargo carrying vessels?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is intended for those who served on those vessels which were used in the war for carrying men, munitions, and supplies for the war, and, of course, for bringing the soldiers back from France as well as taking them over to France during the war.

Mr. WALSH. Well, there may have been many deeds of heroism performed by fishing vessels that have come to the aid of persons who have been attacked upon the high seas, or naval aviators, rescuing them from death by drowning. They would not be included within the terms of this bill, as I understand.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not unless those vessels were in the service of the merchant marine of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. What I am trying to get at is what is the merchant marine of the United States under the provisions of this bill? What is the merchant marine of the United States?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This bill relates only to the merchant marine of the United States which was engaged in matters pertaining to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. WALSH. I do not see that language expressed in the measure.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to attempt to answer the question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will yield gladly to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not think there is any question that under our laws every ship that is registered or documented under our United States registry is included under the American merchant marine, whether in the employ of the American Government or run and operated by some American citizen under American registry.

Mr. WALSH. I so understand; but the gentleman from Illinois says this is limited to that part of the merchant marine that was engaged in war activities.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think it applies to every man who was in the merchant marine and performed meritorious service and heroic deeds.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I said at the beginning of my remarks that this bill had its inception in the Department of Commerce. You will find in the committee report accompanying the bill a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, dated March 17, 1920, in which he states that he had caused the bill to be drafted and forwarded to the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, and with his letter he inclosed a report of the committee which had been appointed by his predecessor. This report is dated March 16, 1920, and is addressed to the Secretary of Commerce, and reads in part as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, March 16, 1920.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The committee appointed by you to examine into the subject of suitable recognition of heroic and meritorious service on the part of the merchant marine of the United States has the honor to recommend:

First. That official recognition should be made of meritorious service performed by the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States during the World War.

Second. That only one medal, preferably designated as the medal of merit, be awarded without regard to class or service.

Third. That this medal be awarded only for extraordinary heroism or distinguished service in the line of his profession or for exceptionally meritorious service to the country.

I will not read the balance of that report. Every Member of the House can get that report and read it. But I will say for myself that while I wrote the report upon the request of the chairman of the committee, and while the language of the bill may be broader than I contemplated it to be or believed it to be, it certainly was my understanding and purpose that the bill was to be limited to service in the World War.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman any information upon which this estimate of $15,000 as a total cost of this measure is based?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That estimate was made by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know upon what it is based?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not; and I do not know what computations were made in the office of the Secretary of Commerce upon which he stated to the committee that the approximate cost might be $15,000. I will say that the sum of $15,000 was the maximum, in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand the provisions of the bill, this also includes those who have not been recommended for distinguished service.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No one has been recommended yet.

Mr. DOWELL. This bill provides for a commission to make an investigation of this whole subject, does it not?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For an investigation of those entitled to the medal.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes. Now, has the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries made an estimate of the cost of that investigation, and an inquiry as to the character of the investigation, to ascertain those who are entitled to this meritorious recognition? Under the provisions of this bill, is not that unlimited, because the commission will be appointed, and no restrictions are provided with reference to the character of the investigation?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The report of the committee appointed by Secretary Redfield states that the estimated cost of medals, bars, ribbons, rosettes, and so forth, is $5,000, and the necessary expense for proper award is $10,000, so that in the opinion of the department all of the necessary work, outside of procuring the medals, bars, and ribbons themselves, will cost not to exceed $10,000, and the medals, ribbons, and so forth, $5,000.

Now, how much money can or will be expended for this purpose will, of course, depend on the Committee on Appropriations. If no appropriation is made, the work will never be done.

Mr. DOWELL. And of course if any awards at all are made, they should be made to all those entitled to receive them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly.

Mr. DOWELL. There should be no awards unless they are made to all who are entitled to them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly.

Mr. DOWELL. Now, under this provision, as I understand it, as these men have already been discharged from the service, and are scattered all over the United States, it will require a considerable investigation to ascertain those who are entitled to recognition under this bill. In other words, unless some report has been made, or unless it is intended that an entire investigation is to be made of all the acts of the sailors of our merchant marine during the entire period covered by this bill, how is this commission to ascertain and secure the facts, in view of the fact that these men have been scattered all over the United States?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Some of these men may have been discharged from the service. A large number of them have not been discharged, but there is some kind of a record of the work of the merchant marine in the files of the Shipping Board. Of course, I know that it has been recently disclosed that some of the records in the Shipping Board are not in very good shape, but in so far as these cases of extraordinary heroism and unusually meritorious service are concerned, the Shipping Board and the Department of Commerce believe that they will not have any very great difficulty in finding the men who are entitled to these awards. In fact, applications and suggestions have already been made with reference to men who believe themselves or whose friends believe them entitled to recognition for service in the merchant marine. The gentleman will readily understand how that has come about.

Mr. DOWELL. What I was trying to develop was the method by which this information was to be obtained.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the gentleman will allow me, I do not know whether I am right about it or not, but I apprehend that the Government officials under this law will not go out hunting for subjects for ornamentation or recommendation, but that the friends of the men, and those acquainted with the facts, will make application, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], and then this commission will investigate the merits of the application and will determine whether the applicant performed such distinguished service as entitles him to recognition under this law.

Mr. DOWELL. I was trying to get at the method by which all who are entitled to recognition could receive it, and no one be overlooked.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think there will be no effort made to find anyone, but only an effort to determine the merits of the applications which are made.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LANHAM. What part, if any, of the estimated cost of $15,000 is to be paid for the design to be used for the medal?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is a detail of the carrying out of the purposes of the bill which it will naturally be for the Department of Commerce to administer. Our committee did not attempt to ascertain or determine particularly as to that, since we are not an appropriating committee. Our committee reached the conclusion that it is fitting and proper that the men who rendered these services in the merchant marine during the war should receive recognition similar to that received by men in the military and naval services of the United States.

Mr. LANHAM. To whose discretion would the limitation of that amount be left?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I apprehend that the Committee on Appropriations will call before them the proper representatives of the Department of Commerce and will determine how much should be expended.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice that the bill provides that these awards may be made to anyone since April 6, 1917. Does not the gentleman think it should be limited to the period between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, during the period of hostilities?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not necessarily, because in the return of the soldiers from the other side, even subsequent to the armistice, there were some dangers involved in bringing back our forces.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think there may be more reason for the award of medals since the suspension of hostilities than before April 6, 1917?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Except that it is the purpose to limit the recognition to services which grew out of the war and pertained to the war.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But there were no extraordinary dangers since November 11, 1918.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am not sure; there may have been some vessels in the merchant-marine fleet which returned soldiers which might have run into a floating mine. They might have incurred some danger as the direct result of the war.

Mr. JONES of Texas. As a matter of fact, there was no vessel sunk after the armistice.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Texas may know about that; I am not certain of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the language of the bill, would not these medals be authorized to be granted to anyone, at least down to the present date?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think so, under the language of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As a matter of fact, if this becomes a law in this language, would not it be applicable to the future?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; because it is limited to five years' time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; five years after the application. This is a meritorious service performed for the Government any time after April 6, 1917, with no limitation on the other end of the time.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the bill is susceptible of that construction it should be amended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It seems to me that it is not only susceptible of that construction, but I have not the slightest doubt that if it becomes a law and passes out of the control of the legislative body it will be so construed by the department.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me? I concur in the gentleman's construction of the language, but is there any reason why, under proper restrictions, a man who performs a heroic deed or distinguished service to the Government of the United States in the merchant marine might not in the discretion of the President be awarded a medal without coming to Congress under a general or special law?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not undertake to say; I will not answer the gentleman's question; but I do not think it is desirable to enact legislation on the ground of taking care of men who performed distinguished services during the war and then make it applicable to the future without limit.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think the gentleman from Illinois is right in his construction, and I think there should be proper recognition of heroic deeds or distinguished services performed by persons in the merchant marine.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That ought to be considered by itself and not upon a report of a commission which bases it wholly on the ground of services during the war. May I ask my colleague further? I presume the primary intent of this bill is to grant recognition to people who performed extraordinary heroism or distinguished services in the merchant marine during the war.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is a provision of the bill which says "or by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government." He does not have to be in the merchant marine at all. Any person connected with the Shipping Board who thinks that he can get a commission to think that he borrowed money cheaply or spent it profusely under this bill can be awarded a medal. There is danger, it seems to me, in granting any such authority.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I may have misunderstood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The bill in line 7, page 1, says "any person in the merchant marine of the United States." It could not go to any person outside of the merchant marine.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I said any person in the merchant marine who performed services outside. It does not mean, I assume, that the medal is necessarily to be conferred upon somebody then in the merchant marine, but somebody who was in the merchant marine when the services were performed. I do not know how many people connected with the Shipping Board will say that they were in the merchant marine. It seems to me, and I thought when I read the bill over last session, that it was granting recognition for distinguished services on the sh'p, and we ought to see that it stops there and not put it in the power of some subordinate official of the Government to give special favor to one who had nothing to do with danger connected with the merchant marine. Granting recognition for danger is one thing and granting recognition for lip service is an entirely different thing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, if the gentleman will permit, he will concede that there is no difference in this provision as compared with the provisions for the Army and the Navy.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; but I recognize how that provision in the Army and Navy has been grossly abused, as does everyone else here. Men have been given distinguished medals all over the country for doing nothing except kissing favors—telling somebody else how great he was.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that this bill follows the language of the bills relating to the Army and the Navy, and the Department of Commerce and the committee took the position that the same treatment that is accorded to the Army and the Navy should be accorded to the merchant marine, which was in fact a large and powerful factor in our prosecution of the war.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Very naturally the committee took that position, and so far as men performed dangerous service I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That applies to the Army also.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Or if men performed an heroic service they ought to have the same recognition. Armies and navies have always received special recognition for such service, but there are millions of men in this country who rendered meritorious service to the Government who were not in the service of the Government at all, and no one is proposing to grant all of them medals. Perhaps they ought to have them. It may be that we ought to have medals, though I do not think it would add anything to the dignity of my colleague, and I do not want one so far as I am concerned. I do not believe we ought to stick them around promiscuously and decorate every man because that man happens to think he ought to have one.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, if honor is due we want to give it, but I am wondering if the gentleman who has charge of this bill, coming from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, has taken up any measure which will safeguard and protect the merchant marine, which we have so long promised the producers of this country will bring the markets of the world to the door of the producer, and that will eventually grant some relief to them. Our farmers are being pushed off the farms to-day——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman asking a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I just wanted to extend my question a little further.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think the gentleman wants to extend his remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to extend the question a little further.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will ask a question pertaining to this bill, I shall be glad to try and answer it, but I do not think it is pertinent to this inquiry for us to discuss all other questions.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall ask the question. The question is this: Is it not more important that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries bring in some measure which will first protect the producers of the country who feed and clothe the 105,000,000 people of the United States, and then later during the course of the next 12 months take some action which will do honor to these men of the merchant and marine service?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, what is there with reference to the production and shipment of cotton to which the gentleman now has reference?

Mr. BLANTON. The merchant marine, about which we have bragged so much, is not yet perfected to the extent that it is bringing the markets of the world to the doors of the producers. There is something that prevents the bringing about of sales in these markets, and we should do something so that sales may be consummated.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, if I am to reply to this address, I want to say simply that this committee, the present Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported the merchant marine act of 1920, which was passed by this House in the last session and which is producing and will produce the very results to which the gentleman refers, but unfortunately the administration of that act, as of many other acts, is in the hands of an administration which has been unable to achieve results.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For a question on the bill.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Can the gentleman tell the House the minimum and the maximum salaries received by men who served in the merchant marine during the war?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I can not do that. They had a personnel running into the thousands, and I do not know.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is it not a fact that those men drew a great deal more pay than was paid to the sailors in the Navy?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I believe they did draw more pay than was paid to the sailors in the United States Navy, and, of course, they drew more pay than was paid to the soldiers in the United States Army. There is no question about that.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is there not some way of getting an idea of the minimum amount of salary paid to men working in the merchant marine?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not think that is important in this connection, but the information can no doubt be obtained for the RECORD. I have not thought, however, that that has any relation to this subject.

Mr. McCLINTIC. It has been said that those in the merchant marine drew large salaries, and if that is true it ought to be put into the RECORD.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If they did, of course the present administration granted them those salaries, just as the present administration granted the salaries in the Railroad Administration.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the intention of the committee that these commissioners who are to be appointed by the direction of the Secretary of Commerce shall serve without compensation?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think it is a uniform rule of law that a public officer is not entitled to compensation unless the law gives it to him. This bill does not provide any compensation, and therefore the commissioners will not get any compensation, in my view, unless legislation is passed granting it to them.

Mr. WALSH. I am not asking about the uniform rule of law. I am asking about the intention of the committee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is not the intention of the committee that they shall receive compensation.

Mr. WALSH. It is the intention of the committee that these gentlemen shall serve without compensation?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; it is. In fact, it is expected that they will probably be taken out of the organization of the Department of Commerce or perhaps partly out of the Shipping Board.

Mr. WALSH. Now, will the gentleman state whether or not he would have any objection to an amendment clarifying the intention of section 1 along the line suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the effect that this extraordinary heroism or distinguished service should be while in the service of the merchant marine of the United States?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Personally, I would vote for such an amendment if it is proposed. I can not speak for the balance of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman would not object?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would not object personally. In fact, I might say to the gentleman from Massachusetts it is not my bill except in this sense, that I was requested to write the report upon it and present it to the House this morning.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time in case some one desires to speak in opposition to the bill.

Mr. DEWALT. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. DEWALT. I refer now specifically to lines 9 and 10, on page 1, which read, "who has distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service in the line of his profession," and I would ask the gentleman how inclusive the provisions of this bill would be?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Well, that is modified by the language in line 7, "to any person in the merchant marine of the United States." Now, an engineer may have distinguished himself, or may have earned merit by distinguished service in the line of his profession. A mariner may have done so.

Mr. DEWALT. In the judgment of the gentleman, as one of the framers of the bill, would this include those who were in a civil capacity and who were not regularly enlisted in the merchant marine?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think the last phrase, "or by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government," might be construed to include civilians in the merchant marine service.

Mr. DEWALT. Therefore, it would follow, necessarily, those who were actively engaged in service at sea and those who were engaged in civil service connected with the bureaus in Washington would be entitled to this distinction?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think so. Just as men in the Army and Navy who never smelled powder have been receiving medals of honor and distinction and decorations since the war. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

MERCHANT MARINE MEDAL ACT.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Does anyone desire to be recognized in opposition to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the explanation given by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] of the intention of the committee and the intention of the department is thoroughly understood by the Members of the House. But, while I recognize that many acts of extraordinary heroism and self-sacrifice were made by members of the merchant marine service during the war, particularly those serving upon vessels carrying troops and supplies across the ocean, I doubt if we ought to enact legislation so broad in its character at this particular time. Now, the estimate given by the department is $15,000, but nobody knows upon what that is based. It seems to me that if there be acts of extraordinary heroism or exceptionally meritorious service to the Government on the part of men who were employed in the danger zone upon these ships that they ought to be brought to the attention of the committee and legislation enacted to take care of them, but to permit this promiscuous pinning on of medals and the adding of bars for service where a man may be deemed meritorious upon the high seas, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts, or here in Washington, or various points throughout the United States while serving really in a civil capacity, would only result in cheapening the award of this medal to men who really deserved some recognition, and unless this measure be limited or restricted I doubt if we ought to pass it. Now, of course, it is a fine thing for this great Government to bestow recognition upon those participating in the great struggle from which we have recently emerged, particularly those serving upon the high seas, who went through the danger zone, as well as the boys in the Navy and the soldiers who went across in transports. But under the provisions of this bill broad discretion is vested in the civil establishment entirely apart from the naval or military departments of the Government, and to permit this under the provisions of this bill, with no limit as to how long the decoration may continue, except the application must be made within five years, seems to me is not wise at this particular time.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. Taking the explanation of the bill by the author and his answers thereto to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], the last provision in line 10, "or by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government," would mean ordinary civilian employees in the maritime service in the merchant marine. Now, if we enact this as to these people, why not enact a general bill which will include all citizens of the United States who rendered exceptionally meritorious service during the war? Is not that just as just and fair?

Mr. WALSH. I think there is considerable in the contention of the gentleman from California, and this service under the provisions of the bill necessarily is not required to have been in the merchant marine. It may have been some meritorious service entirely apart from that, a civilian service.

Mr. RAKER. Carrying the gentleman's suggestion a little further, if we give this medal to those who are in the merchant marine as civilians, who never went on the high seas and were in no danger except as is usually incident to human life in the transaction of general business, will not there be a general demand, and would it not be meritorious, from other citizens of the United States who rendered this service?

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman has prognosticated quite accurately.

Mr. RAKER. Now, as to the question of expense. In lines 5 and 6 there is nothing as to the size of these medals, there is nothing as to the material of the medal; it may be as big as a dinner plate or saucer; there is nothing as to the size of these bars, ribbons, rosettes, or other devices, or of what the device may be.

Mr. WALSH. I think it sets a general standard followed in these cases by other branches of the Government.

Mr. RAKER. I was wondering if the expense would not be enormous unless there was some regulation as to the device?

Mr. WALSH. These are matters of detail, and while that probably has appealed to the gentleman from California as an objection, my chief objection is that this is rather too broad in its character and ought not to be enacted at this particular time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bill now reads "by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service in the line of his profession or by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government." Suppose the House should change it so that it would read "extraordinary heroism or distinguished service at sea in the line of duty," so it would be confined to extraordinary heroism?

Mr. WALSH. Then for exceptional meritorious services to the Government?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I left that out.

Mr. WALSH. I understand. That would limit it, I think——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. To extraordinary heroism or distinguished service at sea in the line of duty.

Mr. TEMPLE. If the gentleman will yield, there might be cases in which men had performed extraordinarily heroic things which they could not be ordered to do in case of any duty.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are in the line of duty.

Mr. TEMPLE. I think the Victoria Cross is given for services beyond duty.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But it is in the line of duty. That is the term we use in the Army and Navy all the time. There is no question about that.

Mr. TEMPLE. Not in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a statement of fact, notwithstanding the gentleman's insinuation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not know whether this question has been asked before or not, but I would like the opinion of the gentleman from Massachusetts as to the meaning of this: In line 7 are the words:

To any person in the merchant marine.

Would that include a man who was not now in the merchant marine, but who, in performing this distinguished service, received injury making it necessary for him to retire, and therefore is not now in the service? Would this bill cover him?

Mr. WALSH. I think so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Any man in the service who since the 6th of April has distinguished himself. Perhaps it might have the same meaning as if the word "now" were before the word "in," reading:

Any person now in the merchant marine.

Some official will construe that word "in" to have the meaning which I expect might be given to it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me, it is a very simple matter. Of course, so far as the form of my own bill is concerned, I have made these tentative changes as to any person who in the merchant marine of the United States since the 6th of April distinguished himself.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is the idea. I had that in mind.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The word "has" does not belong in there at all.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I transpose those words as the gentleman from Illinois suggests.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion made by the gentleman——

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. GARD. I would like to ask the gentleman what he would think of an amendment which would limit the application of the bill in this wise: In the first place, I call the attention of the gentleman, on page 2 of the report, in section 4, to those to whom it is said this medal may be awarded, and the suggestion which I submit to the gentleman is that, on line 8, after the words "United States," there should be inserted the language of section 4, in part, being:

Who served on board of a merchant ship under the flag of the United States.

And then, on line 10, insert the word "duty" after the word "his," and strike out the balance of lines 10 and 11, which would limit the scope of this award to some one who had served on board a merchant ship under the flag of the United States and had distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished services in line of his duty. I speak of that because I have sent such an amendment to the Clerk's desk, and I would like to ask the gentleman what his idea would be as to such an amendment?

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, the suggestion he has in mind is covered by the proposal made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. GARD. Unfortunately, I could not hear the colloquy over there.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Illinois has suggested a change in lines 10 and 11 which, I think, covers what the gentleman from Ohio has in mind.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois cover the date there so it would be limited to November 11, 1918?

Mr. WALSH. Not this particular amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think such an amendment as that should be proposed there?

Mr. WALSH. I think there should be a limitation on the date along the line the gentleman suggested.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understood the amendment that has been proposed, or was to be proposed, covered the conferring of a badge for gallantry and extraordinary heroism for the performance of duty at sea—in line of duty. I supposed those merits of distinction in an award of this kind consisted in recognizing an act which was above and beyond the call of duty, and which therefore distinguished the individual in special duty. Every man is expected to do his duty.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. I have been thinking about the question propounded by the gentleman from Vermont, which is a good thing. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], having charge of the bill, in answer to a question propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], stated that there would not be any extra cost, which I am not going to make any complaint about, by virtue of these three persons appointed on the board. I want to call the attention to this fact, that it is and will be a special board who will receive full salary, and it is so intended by this bill. Let us not deceive ourselves. On page 2, section 6, it provides that the President shall appoint this board:

To be a board of three persons, appointed by and under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce.

Now, the Secretary of Commerce will appoint three members who are in his office, drawing salary, naturally; men who are competent; and he ought to do it, and therefore they will devote their time to this work, and not to other governmental work. Let us not deceive ourselves with the idea that this is not going to cost anything, to have three commissioners do the work. I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will so advise the House, or advise it to that effect. That is the fact, is it not?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have not the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the inquiries which have been made, which have brought out the fact that amendments which will probably be offered obviating some of these objections which I had to the measure and limiting it considerably in its scope, I do not feel justified in taking up any further time in opposition to the measure at this time, unless some other gentleman desires to consume some of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to present, but not in the name of Congress, a medal of merit of appropriate design with a bar and ribbon, together with a rosette or other device to be worn in lieu thereof, to any person in the merchant marine of the United States who since the 6th day of April, 1917, has distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service in the line of his profession or by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out all after the word "thereof," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 1, line 7, after the word "thereof," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to any person who, in the merchant marine of the United States since the 6th day of April, 1917, distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service at sea in the line of duty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to continue?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think there ought to be a limitation as to the time when this is going to run in the future. I think it should be limited to a time prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think it should be from the date of the commencement of the war to its end.

Mr. GARD. I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio submit his amendment to the Clerk's desk?

Mr. GARD. I am not familiar with the terms of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and I will ask that it be read from the floor. It should be inserted at the conclusion of the gentleman's amendment and should contain the words "and before November 12, 1918," which was the day after the armistice.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a very valid objection to that. None of us is particularly familiar with the facts of this service. Some one said on the floor that he knew, as a matter of fact, that there was no such case of heroism subsequent to the date of the armistice. I do not know that to be a fact, but if there was such a deed of heroism or distinguished service in line of duty during the bringing back of the soldiers from France, it seems to me that such an incident ought to be included within the terms of this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In a moment. In section 3, on page 2, you will find there is a limitation, that the application for this award must be made within five years after the date of the act or service justifying the award, so that if we make it certain that the act refers only to operations growing out of the war with Germany, I think there will be limitations enough in the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman refers to section 3 of the bill as being some limitation. Does not the gentleman think that section 3 applies only to that which may be in the future? At any time within five years after the rendition of this service this award may be made. It may include all the years to come, and there is absolutely no limitation as to the service in the war or anything connected with the war.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I said, if I may reply, that I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to offer an amendment which would limit this bill to matters growing out of the war with Germany. Whether that is the effect of his amendment I am not able to say, because I did not exactly hear it as read by the Clerk.

Mr. GARD. That is not the effect of the gentleman's amendment. The amendment which the gentleman is discussing is the amendment I offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. It is a limitation in time only.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The words "prior to the enactment of this bill" would cover everything that possibly could arise. But my point is that we should include any person that possibly may have rendered extraordinary service in bringing back soldiers from France. For instance, there may have been cases of drowning. I am advised that there were cases of drowning. I am informed, for instance, that soldiers were swamped in a boat near the shores of France, and sailors on a merchant-marine ship assisted in rescuing those soldiers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They get a medal for that now.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But they do not get a medal because of extraordinary heroism rendered in the war with Germany.

Mr. GARD. As to the point that is made, if the gentleman will permit, it seems to me that if the gentleman intends to confine it to service in the war with Germany or the Central Powers, it may be well for us to recognize that fact and place a limitation of time on it, so as to make it inclusive, because there is nothing in the bill that would prevent anybody in this service, either now or 10 years from now, from getting one of these medals, and the object surely is, or should be, to reward heroism in line of duty in the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer as a substitute. I think it would be better to have the language "since April 6, 1917," stricken out and have language inserted covering the time between that date and the date of the armistice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD]. Will the gentleman from Texas send his amendment to the Clerk's desk?

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is to strike out the language "since the 6th day of April, 1917," in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and insert the language I have sent up to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Amend the amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois by striking out the words "since the 6th day of April, 1917," and inserting the words "between the 6th day of April, 1917, and the 11th day of November, 1918."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Texas), there were—ayes 55, noes 11.

Accordingly the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as amended by the substitute, which has been agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Let the Clerk report the amendment as amended.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is there any opportunity for debate on that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the Mann amendment as amended by the substitute.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that the exact parliamentary situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as amended by the substitute.

Mr. GARD. The question is upon my amendment, as amended by the substitute which was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The Clerk will report it. Does the gentleman from California desire to have it read?

Mr. RAKER. I ask to have the amendment read with the substitute of the gentleman from Texas as agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "thereof," insert: "To any person who, in the merchant marine of the United States, between the 6th day of April, 1917, and the 11th day of November, 1918, distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service at sea in the line of duty."

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he intends to limit the act strictly to service performed "at sea" in its altogether technical sense? For instance, the suggestion has been made to me that there may have been some vessel in harbor or on coast duty, where perhaps a strict interpretation of the words "at sea" would not permit the awarding of a medal for distinguished service.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My technical knowledge of seamanship is not as great as that of my friend, who is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs and who comes from a part of the country a little farther east. While Chicago produced a great many persons who were connected with the Shipping Board, to run it, my technical knowledge of seamanship is not great. I do not know. I suppose the term would cover service in the harbor.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know. I do not claim to possess any mariner's license myself, but the words are rather suggestive of service performed outside of the three-mile limit.

Mr. YATES. As I understand it, when you say "at sea" you find yourself at sea. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not see. I will say to my friend from Vermont that I made the suggestion after consultation with a gentleman who is probably one of the best if not the best posted man in the House in reference to those matters pertaining to the merchant marine, but he may not have thought of this particular proposition.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I have in mind services such as were performed in some of the harbors of Great Britain. We do not recall any on our side of the ocean to be sure, yet there was a German undersea vessel prowling around our coasts for a while. It seems to me that the principle should be extended to include duty on board ship, whether at sea or in harbor. The gentleman will recall that German undersea vessels entered the harbors of Great Britain, and very likely there were acts of heroism performed under those circumstances. That could not technically be called duty at sea?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think the gentleman will remember that we draw the distinction in the Navy between shore duty and sea duty. I am very certain that the commander of a naval vessel which comes into New York Harbor does not automatically have his salary reduced on the ground that he is not engaged on sea duty because he happens to be in harbor.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. All right. That settles it. Then technically he is not ashore, or relieved of sea duty?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think that is true.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. All right, that is enough.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But I plead my technical ignorance of sea matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That, except as otherwise prescribed herein, no medal or bar or suitable emblem or insignia in lieu of said medal shall be issued to any person after more than five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof, unless a specific statement or report distinctly setting forth the act or distinguished service and suggesting or recommending official recognition thereof shall have been made and substantiated at the time of the act or service or within five years thereafter.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman what consideration prompted the carrying of this period over five years? What is the necessity for taking all that time in permitting people to make application? We have limited the time between the declaration of war and the armistice.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Since the declaration of war in 1917 three and one-half years have elapsed. The Government is now declaring its purpose to give recognition to men in the merchant marine service. It means a year and a half from the date the service was performed, if the service occurred soon after the declaration of war, in which application may be made and in which information may be spread to the people in the service that they may secure a proper award or medal.

Mr. WALSH. That is true, but does not the gentleman think it would be better to fix the time after the passage of the act in which this application should be made rather than five years after the service justifying the award, so that the limitation would not vary in different cases? One act may have been performed in May, 1917, and another may have been performed in October, 1918. Now, if you limit the time to a specified time after the enactment of this law, does not the gentleman feel that it would be better?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Under the amendment adopted recognition could be given to no acts performed after November, 1918, and therefore two years have elapsed, and it would leave three years remaining. I have no objection to the suggestion which the gentleman from Massachusetts makes. I think it is largely a matter of taste, however.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. May I suggest that it be made three years after the passage of this act?

Mr. WALSH. That was the date I had in mind. Instead of fixing the date to run from the performance of this heroic act, I think we should fix the date, say, three years after the passage of the act.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 2, line 9, strike out the words "for more than five years from the date of the act of service justifying the award thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "after three years from the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "person," strike out the words "after more than five years from the date of the act of service justifying the award thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "after three years from the passage of this act."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he proposes to follow that with another amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; in line 15 strike out the words "within five years thereafter" and substitute the words "within three years thereafter."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. While I do not believe the other amendment would be fair, still it would avoid conflict with this amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would be that no emblem or insignia should be issued after three years of the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You say it shall be issued. Is not there danger that some one may come in 2 years and 11 months or 2 years from now and make a claim and no action taken on it?

Mr. WALSH. The same danger would exist if it runs five years thereafter.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think you should limit the time in which the application should be made and not penalize the applicant for dereliction or delay of the awarding officer.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman does not limit the time in which the award shall be granted.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It says issued after three years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. "Unless," exceptions are frequently the most important part of legislation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understood that the rest of the language was going out.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh no; he does not propose that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a further amendment. On page 2, line 15, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offered that amendment in accordance with the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois in response to his inquiry, but I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield, that amendment ought not to be adopted, but unless the language is amended in some way you will be in this situation: That no medal should be granted unless the claim is made within three years—unless the claim is made more than three years after the passage of this act—as might be the case. It would automatically revive the act. I suppose that is not the desire of the gentleman to put it in that shape. Why does not the gentleman propose to make that read "unless the claim shall be made within three years after the passage of this act"? That covers everybody alike, because there has been no law heretofore, and it will make no conflict. If you put it in the language of the gentleman's amendment or leave it out entirely, there will be a conflict.

Mr. WALSH. I am going to vote against my own amendment, and I am willing that the gentleman should offer the amendment he suggests.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I shall vote against the gentleman's amendment, and if it does not prevail I shall offer an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, in order to carry out the suggestion that has been made, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, or rather a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I move to strike out the words "within five years thereafter" and insert the words "within three years after the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD to the amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 15, strike out the words "within five years thereafter" and insert in lieu thereof the words "within three years after the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That in case an individual who shall distinguish himself dies before the making of the award to which he may be entitled, the award nevertheless may be made and the medal or bar or other emblem or insignia presented within five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof to such representative of the deceased as the President may designate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentlemen who have been preparing these amendments that that clearly ought to be amended. This again says "within five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof." That would run it beyond the time when a medal can be awarded.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I was about to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this section ought to be amended in conformity to the amendment which has already been agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It should provide "within three years from the date of the passage of this act." I move to strike out in line 20 the words "within five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof" and insert at the end of line 22 the words "within three years from the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 2, line 20, strike out the words "within five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof," and after the word "designate," in line 22, insert the words "within three years after the passage of this act."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to change my amendment, if I may, and simply move to strike out the language that I have proposed to strike out, without fixing any limitation, for I think that is already covered.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois withdraws the amendment heretofore offered and offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 2, line 20, strike out the words "within five years from the date of the act or service justifying the award thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to delegate, under such conditions, regulations, and limitations as he shall prescribe, to a board of three persons appointed by and under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, the powers of making investigation and recommendation to the Secretary of Commerce of those entitled to a medal of merit as provided by this act. And the President is further authorized to make from time to time any and all rules, regulations, and orders which he shall deem necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act and to execute the full purpose and intention thereof.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word merely for the purpose of stating in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] a while ago, that of course I did not intend to be understood as saying that the officers appointed under this section to make these investigations and recommendations might not employ some of the time for which they are paid by the Government in the line of their official duty. I did mean to say that it is not intended, as I understand it from our communications with the department, that extra compensation should be given to them or to anyone else for the work performed in connection with the investigations and recommendations here contemplated. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask my colleague a question as to the grammatical and rhetorical form of this section, although he did not draw the section. I take it that the purpose of this section is to have the President prescribe conditions, regulations, and limitations which shall govern the board to be appointed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I presume they would so construe it, but what it says is that the President is authorized to delegate "under such conditions, regulations, and limitations as he shall prescribe." That is, he is authorized under such limitations as he shall prescribe, to do a certain thing. The limitations, conditions, and regulations relate to the President under the language as it is written here.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The first section provides that the President is authorized to present these medals, and here he is authorized to delegate the authority to present the medals under rules and regulations which he lays down for the guidance of the board.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But it does not say that. This says that the regulations are for the guidance of the President.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; it says that he shall prescribe them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is authorized to delegate, under conditions, regulations, and limitations, and they are applicable to the President and not to the board.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think not. The President may prescribe conditions, regulations, and limitations under which the board may act for him.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the last three lines of the section also refer to regulations and orders and rules which the President is further authorized to make, and it would seem, therefore, that the gentleman's contention is not well taken.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think it is important. I will say to my colleague that he will find, wherever a bill of this sort is prepared by a department, that invariably there is a lot of language in it that is not coherent. There is no one in these departments who knows how to use the English language in drawing laws.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be recognized?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized to offer an amendment. On page 2, in line 23, after the figure "5" strike out all the language in lines 23, 24, 25, and on page 3 all the language in lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, concluding with the word "act." Strike out also the word "and" in line 3; capitalize the word "the," and in line 5, page 3, strike out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 2, line 23, after the figure "5" strike out all of lines 23, 24, 25, and all of lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 on page 3, capitalize the word "the" in line 5, page 3, at the beginning of the line, and strike out after the word "is" the word "further."

Mr. GARD. And also strike out the word "and." The purpose of this amendment is to place the award of these medals where I think it belongs; that is, in the hands of the President. It is clearly to me much more dignified and proper to have these regulations concerning medals exclusively in the hands of the President, who may make, under the amendment I have proposed, all rules, regulations, and orders necessary to carry into effect all the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the committee will accept the amendment. Let me suggest also to omit in line 8 everything after the word "act." I am beginning to appreciate the full force and effect of the suggestion of my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] with regard to the diction of this and other bills.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I will modify my amendment so as to include, if the gentleman deems it necessary, the striking out of the words, in line 8, page 3, "and to execute the full purpose and intention thereof," and place a period after the word "act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio modifies his amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GARD modifies his amendment by striking out, page 3, line 8, after the word "act," the words "and to execute the full purpose and intention thereof," and insert a period after the word "act."

Mr. WALSH. There is a period there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We do not punctuate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the modified amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas) reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13264, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nine Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 316, nays 7, not voting 108, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CHINDBLOM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I find on examining the calendar that the bill (H. R. 14074) to amend the shipping act of 1916 as amended, has been already included in the merchant marine act which passed this House on the 5th day of June. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that that bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 14074, which has already been included in the shipping bill, be laid on the table. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXPENSES OF AMERICAN MISSION TO NEGOTIATE PEACE (S. DOC. NO. 330).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 28th of August, 1919, I submitted to the Congress a partial statement of the expenses of the American mission to negotiate peace, which was printed in Senate Document No. 80, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session. It now gives me pleasure to lay before the Congress, for its information, a statement of all of the expenditures of the American commission to negotiate peace for the entire period of its existence from December 1, 1918, to December 31, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
8 December, 1920.

Note: Statement accompanied similar message to the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO PURE FOOD AND DRUGS ACT.

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries any further business?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It has not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll of the committees.

Mr. HAUGEN (when the Committee on Agriculture was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 10311.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the bill H. R. 10311 from the House Calendar, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10311) to further amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, and amended by the act approved March 3, 1913.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, and amended by the act of March 3, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, amended in the following particulars:

(1) By striking out the period at the end of paragraph "Second," in said section 8, in case of foods, and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and adding the following clause: "or if it be in a container so made, formed, or shaped as likely to deceive or mislead the purchaser as to quantity, quality, size, kind, or origin of the food therein."

(2) By adding at the end of section 8, in case of food, as amended, a new paragraph, as follows:

"Fifth. If in the package form, and irrespective of whether or not the quantity of the contents be plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in terms of weight, measure, or numerical count, as provided in paragraph 'Third' of said section 8 as amended, the package be not filled with the food it purports to contain: Provided, however, That reasonable variations and tolerances may be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act."

Provided, however, That no penalty of fine, imprisonment, or confiscation shall be enforced for any violation of the provisions of this amendment as to domestic products shipped in interstate commerce or sold or offered for sale in the District of Columbia or in the Territories of the United States prior to or within six months after the enactment hereof, or as to products imported prior to or within six months from the enactment hereof: And provided further, That nothing in this amendment shall affect or be construed to affect any violation of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, as heretofore amended, or impair or be construed to impair any right of action or remedy thereunder.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to do away with slack filling of packages, packages of deceptive shape or appearance, the fraudulent packing of deceptive packages, false bottoms, indentation of bottles, and the like. I have here a number of exhibits furnished by the Department of Agriculture [exhibiting]. For instance, on this package the space covered by the sticker indicates the space filled, and the space above the sticker represents the amount of the unfilled package. As will be observed, only about one-quarter of the package is filled, while three-quarters of it is unfilled. We also have here samples of deceptive bottles. The enlargement of the glass has a magnifying effect which deceives the purchaser. Then we have packages and bottles with inverted bottoms. Here I have a package containing 3 ounces of potato chips. Less than one-half of the package is taken up with the contents. It is unnecessary to say that with the present price of potatoes the manufacturer could well afford to fill the package to its full capacity and still sell it at a profit at the price at which this package is sold. Yet it is filled less than one-half full, with only 3 ounces in the package, while the capacity of a package is three times that amount. The purchaser in buying this package does not ask the merchant to take the package down from his shelf and stop to read the weight of its contents, which, of course, under the present law must be printed on the package, but naturally assumes that it is reasonably full and buys it on its appearance; in other words, what it purports to contain, and is thus deceived.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What does the other part of the package contain? How did they fill it? Did they put a partition in it?

Mr. HAUGEN. The other part contains nothing; there was no partition; it was only filled to that extent.

Here is a candy box having a false bottom, with only about 75 per cent of its capacity filled with candy and the false bottom occupying about 25 per cent of the capacity of the box. We have a number of exhibits here. This bottle was filled with olives, the glass, being of a magnifying shape, greatly enlarged the appearance of its contents and thus deceived the purchaser.

As I stated, the object of the bill is to do away with deception and fraud, and, so far as I know, the honest manufacturers, merchants, and dealers are back of the measure. It will provide a protection to the honest man against deception and fraud. I will insert a resolution submitted by Commissioner W. B. Barney, of Iowa, and unanimously passed at the convention of the Association of American Dairy, Food, and Drug Officials at St. Louis last October:

Be it resolved by the Association of American Dairy, Food, and Drug Officials in convention assembled, That the slack-filled package bill, known as H. R. 10311, introduced by GILBERT N. HAUGEN, be indorsed, and that we urge upon Congress to amend the food and drugs act as therein set forth, so that the size and shape of the container shall be a true index as to the quantity of material contained therein.

Here we have a small bottle that contains two ounces, and another bottle which, due to its shape, appears to contain much more, while in reality it contains only 1¾ ounces. The tall bottle gives the appearance of containing a much larger amount than the thicker one, while in fact it contains less.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. DOWELL. Is that article sold by the ounce, or otherwise?

Mr. HAUGEN. The pure food and drug act requires that the contents be marked on it.

Mr. DOWELL. I did not get that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Under the pure food and drug act they are required to mark the contents on the bottle, the quantity by number or by weight. But the deception here is in the appearance.

Mr. DOWELL. But if it does not contain the amount required, as I understand it, under the law they are liable to be punished?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly; but the deception here is in the appearance or in the package itself, and not in the representation as to weight or quantity it contains, which is marked on it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. As I read the bill, it covers only cases where the package does not actually contain the amount of food or liquid, or whatever it may be, that it is purported to contain. Would that cover a case like the case the gentleman now presents? In that case the bottle is completely filled, is it not?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. Then it would not come within the provisions of the law?

Mr. HAUGEN. The design of the bottle makes it appear or purport to contain more than it actually does. What we want to do is to prevent deception by the appearance of the container.

Mr. HUSTED. How under the provisions of this bill would you provide against a case of deception of that particular kind?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is to be left to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. It will be for him to determine whether the package is deceptive or not.

Mr. HUSTED. He does not seem to have much discretion about it, because if the package is actually completely filled with the substance which it purports to contain there is not any opportunity to exercise executive discretion about it, is there?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. What the gentleman is seeking, I presume, is to have these containers so undressed that we may see what we are getting.

Mr. HAUGEN. You might put it that way. The object is to require them to use containers that will not deceive the purchaser.

Mr. BLANTON. They dress them up in such a way that we do not know what we are buying?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. In this case about three-fourths of the space is unfilled. We leave much to the discretion and good judgment of the officials of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. HICKS. Might not that be subject to a lot of abuse? If the Department of Agriculture might want to wreck a man, he might do it under that clause by claiming that the container of his goods was intended to deceive?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is possible, but not probable, that that could be done. We must have faith in the officials of the Department of Agriculture. I would rather trust the officials of the Department of Agriculture to determine the question than leave it to those practicing deception and fraud. There might be hardships experienced under this measure, but in view of the deception and fraud that is being practiced we believe that it is high time that something should be done to do away with the practice, and this seems to our committee to be the proper way to safeguard the purchaser, and merchant as well.

Mr. HICKS. I agree with the gentleman. Is there any chance to have the decision of the Department of Agriculture reviewed in any way?

Mr. HAUGEN. The courts, of course, could review the cases.

Mr. HICKS. That would be the only resort?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; just as at present under the pure food and drug act.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. I have read the original act of 1906 and the act of 1913, amendatory thereto, and also this report. I desire to call attention to some things here of which I desire to have an explanation. In the first place, on page 2, line 5, the gentleman thinks it a violation of law where a container is not so formed, made, or shaped that it is likely to mislead and deceive the purchaser in the quantity, quality, size, kind, or origin of the food therein, and he leaves out entirely that which is ordinarily recognized in the law of crime—that is, the matter of intent. There is no question here in the bill as to whether the making of the container is with the intent to mislead the purchaser, but merely that it is likely to mislead the purchaser.

Mr. HAUGEN. That matter was fully discussed in the committee and was given due consideration. The committee did not overlook the matter suggested, but the gentleman will agree that a partly filled package or a container containing less than what it purports or appears to contain deceives the purchaser, even though the manufacturer or packer did not expressly intend for it to do so. Besides, as the gentleman knows, it is difficult to prove the intent of the manufacturer in this case, and it seemed to the committee that under the circumstances it would be far wiser to place a burden of proof on the manufacturer or packer who has caused a deceptive package to be placed on the market rather than to place the burden of proof on the Department of Agriculture, which has the duty of enforcing the act, especially inasmuch as variances and tolerances are authorized. We believe that it should be left largely to the determination of the officials of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GARD. To the determination of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GARD. This is merely as to whether the person who buys is likely to be deceived, and you take the judgment of the Department of Agriculture as to whether anyone who buys will likely be deceived, whether there is any intent to deceive associated with it or not?

Mr. HAUGEN. If it were a close question, the manufacturer would probably submit the package to the department for approval, and when once that question was passed upon and the container approved by the department that would, of course, settle the matter so far as the department is concerned.

Mr. GARD. Another matter. We have a new paragraph, No. 5. I desire some explanation on that, inasmuch as the gentleman is familiar with it and I am not. The new paragraph 5 would seem to me to impose a penalty upon appearance or appearances, whereas in reality the law in every other respect has been complied with. For instance, the package might be a large package. It might have printed on it in legible characters and letters outside the exact contents, and it may contain the exact contents purported to be carried, but because it is a larger package than you commonly associate with a pound, for example, or 2 pounds, section 5 covers that. Is that the intent of it?

Mr. HAUGEN. For instance, in this package containing potato chips. The package is capable of holding about 10 ounces. The packer puts in only 3 ounces and, although he so labeled it correctly, one would naturally think looking at the size of the package, unless he stopped to read the weight of its contents, that it contained more; and even should he stop to read the weight of the contents he might not realize how much in quantity 3 ounces of potato chips actually are. In other words, if that size package is used, the packer should be required to put in somewhere near 9 or 10 ounces, its full capacity, instead of 3 ounces, only a third of its capacity, or else use a smaller container. The housewife looks at this package, and assumes that it contains at least 9 or 10 ounces of potato chips, but it does not.

Mr. GARD. In the matter of the package said to contain that which it does absolutely contain—the full weight and contents said to be contained—it might merely be remarked that that package might not be of a design which would suit the whim of somebody in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HAUGEN. The people who sold that package of potato chips went the limit, and it is time they are to be called to a halt. The idea of selling 3 or 4 ounces of potato chips at such a price when potatoes are selling in the country at 40 or 50 cents a bushel, containing 960 ounces, is ridiculous. It is high time they should be called down and required to fill the container.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I will if I may have my time extended.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Let me suggest to the gentleman that packages such as the chairman of the committee has now in his hand are not usually marked with the quantity they contain, but are usually marked with the price, and as the price of the commodity goes up the quantity contained in the package goes down. Such a package might be marked as a 25-cent package, and whereas formerly 25 cents would buy that package full, it is still a 25-cent package, but it is only a quarter full, and that is likely to deceive the purchaser.

Mr. GARD. Doubtless the gentleman is more familiar with this than I am, but under the words which it is proposed to add to the section it is made a crime if—irrespective of whether or not the quantity of the contents be plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in terms of weight, measure, or numerical count, as provided in paragraph "Third" of said section 8 as amended, the package be not filled with the food it purports to contain.

In other words, if you take that package and put upon the outside of it an exact statement of the number of ounces it contains or its exact weight and the contents of the package are in exact correspondence with that statement on the outside, still, because the package happens to be 2 inches longer or an inch wider than a similar package made by somebody else or different than somebody in the department thinks it ought to be, the person is guilty of a crime.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; if it goes beyond a reasonable limit of tolerance, to such an extent that the purchaser is likely to be deceived, the manufacturer deliberately puts it out for the purpose of deceiving, and it ought to be forbidden.

Mr. GARD. I trust the gentleman is not going to ask that we pass a law which provides that if a manufacturer puts on the outside of a package a true statement of its weight and contents, yet if the package does not happen to correspond exactly with the idea of somebody in the department as to what the package should be, that manufacturer is guilty of a crime.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In the case cited by the chairman [Mr. HAUGEN] the package in his hand is one large enough to contain 4 or 5 pounds, into which the manufacturer puts only 1 pound, and when a man does that he does not do it honestly. I think there ought to be a law to catch him at it.

Mr. GARD. I think there is plenty of recourse to the law as it now stands. I question very much the advisability of this legislation. However, I am seeking information. I thank the gentleman for affording me opportunity to obtain it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from Ohio a few minutes ago spoke of the necessity of proving fraudulent intent. In no law of this kind is that required. The pure food and drugs act does not require proof of intention to defraud. That is eliminated altogether from legislation of this character. These laws are always written in this way, and if we undertake now to require the proof of intent to commit a fraud, this law will be ineffectual.

Mr. HAUGEN. The pure food and drugs act requires that the contents of a package shall be plainly marked on the outside. That requirement has been complied with in the case of these packages, but this large package is filled only one-quarter full, which is deceiving the purchaser who does not read the weight of its contents, but buys it on its appearance, or who does read the weight of its contents, but does not correctly judge the weight of such an article and thinks that in quantity it completely fills the container.

Mr. GARD. What does that package contain?

Mr. HAUGEN. Spaghetti.

Mr. GARD. Spaghetti is what is usually called loose food, I think.

Mr. HAUGEN. Here is a package, for instance, which is only about one-quarter full, There can be no legitimate excuse for that. The committee asked one of the witnesses who appeared before it, and who testified that he had put false bottoms in candy boxes, why such practices were indulged in and how long the practice had prevailed. His excuse was that competition had driven them to it and said that it had prevailed 12 or 15 years. Now, when you drive an honest man to such practices it is time to call a halt on the unscrupulous ones in order to protect the honest men. We have honest men in business, as we have in every other activity. A large majority of them are honest, but evidently a few are not.

Mr. GARD. I understand, but if a package is plainly marked on the outside as containing 2 ounces, and the package does contain 2 ounces, what difference does it make whether the package be half an inch longer or shorter?

Mr. HAUGEN. I venture to say there is not one customer in a thousand who is guided by the weight marked on the outside of the package. They go by the appearance of the package.

Mr. GARD. If they do not read what is stated on the wrapper of the package, then the law which requires the marking of the outside of the package is of no effect.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was believed, when the pure food and drugs act was passed, that the marking of the weight or numerical count of the contents of the package would meet every requirement, but it has failed in this respect, and it seems necessary now to require what is proposed in this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Is the act intended to cover a case like this: Assume that the container is plainly marked with a statement of the quantity which it actually contains and that the package is actually filled?

Mr. HAUGEN. Then it fulfills the requirements of the proposed law if the package in its design is not deceptive.

Mr. HUSTED. No; I do not think so. Even though its true quantity is correctly and plainly marked on the outside of the package, still if the package has some peculiar shape, which the Secretary of Agriculture considers is apt to deceive somebody, that brings it under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. If it has a peculiar shape that deceives the purchaser as to its contents it does not come up to the requirements of the proposed law.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Is not this the fact, that the ordinary purchaser thinks very largely in terms of volume rather than of weight?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly. He thinks that the weight indicated on the package indicates the volume. When he buys a large package he expects it to contain its full capacity.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. When he comes to buy he estimates the quantity, and he goes more by the bulk of the package than by the statement which is contained on the outside of it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; he estimates its contents by the appearance of the container and seldom stops to read the weight or figure out what part of the volume of the package so many ounces represent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume that the committee had hearings on this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. They had.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Was there any objection filed on the part of any legitimate industry against the enactment of this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. Several witnesses who appeared suggested amendments. Several amendments were suggested. One amendment, for instance, proposed that 18 months should be given to dispose of the labels and containers on hand. The committee thought 18 months rather excessive, and made the time 6 months.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Who were the people that proposed the suggestions—the manufacturers of the bottles or packages or dealers in commodities inclosed in the package?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not recall now.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I recollect that several were from men who had packages on their hands.

Mr. HAUGEN. They wanted time to dispose of the packages. They wanted 18 months, and the committee fixed the time at 6 months. The bill was reported several months ago, so they have had considerable time now in which to dispose of such labels and packages as might be objected to.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. As the gentleman knows, I am in hearty accord with the purpose of his bill; but there is one objection I have to it, and that is to the proviso. I think we should make this law in effect on the passage of the bill. They have had some time now in which to make disposition of their packages. They have been perpetrating a fraud and they know it, and they have had six months in which to get rid of these things.

Mr. HAUGEN. But, after all, they have much money invested in their labels and packages and it would be a hardship to enforce the law immediately. They should have a reasonable time to use up the labels and the packages.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I would like to call attention to the proviso, page 2, which reads:

Provided, however, That reasonable variations and tolerances may be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act.

I would like to inquire whether that provision has ever been in a former law.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, yes; variations and tolerances are already provided for in the pure-food law.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Section 3 does not deal with that phase of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit, I think that language ought to be changed to make it perfectly legal so that it will say reasonable variations shall be permitted and tolerances shall be established by rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That was one of the objections urged to the bill as it was drafted, that the word "shall" was not used and the word "may" was used. We determined after hearing the entire proposition to use the word "may," and not use the word "shall." If the department is compelled to establish tolerances in advance, every dealer, every crooked manufacturer in the country, would know just how crooked he could be, and the standard would be, not what it ought to be, but what it ought to be less the tolerances. The manufacturers would take advantage of the tolerances in every instance. That is the idea we took of it, and our idea was gathered from the broad experience of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will say to my friend from Michigan that I am satisfied that if the law is enacted in the present language the courts will knock it out the first thing they do. Congress may leave to the department a discretion in fixing the details, but we can not delegate our authority as to what the principle shall be. We can not say to the department you shall use your discretion about fixing tolerances or not as you please, because that is legislation, and we have to exercise our legislative authority. We can say tolerances shall be permitted, we can say that variations shall be fixed by the Department of Agriculture as a matter of detail. We can not leave to their discretion this legislative discretion as to whether or not they will allow tolerances. That is my judgment and that is the theory on which the pure-food law was passed after a most careful examination as to the law on the subject.

Mr. ANDERSON. Suppose the department should be of the opinion that no tolerances should be allowed in the case?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would put it that tolerances shall be established by rules and regulations of the department. If the department should refuse to establish tolerances reasonable variations would still be permitted, to be found by the courts, and the courts in the end are the final judges. You can not leave to the department to say anything they please about what shall be the law. We make the law, we can not confer upon somebody else legislative power; just as in the railroad legislation Congress provides that the railroad rates shall be just, fair, and reasonable. We do not leave to the Interstate Commerce Commission to say what the rates shall be. We can not pass an act saying that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall determine whether or not rates are fair, just, and reasonable. That is legislation.

I had no doubt when the pure food law was passed as to the effect of that language. I would not undertake to say that I have read all the decisions on the subject since, because I have not, but I have read them all up to that time.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the Department of Agriculture is required now to say what tolerances shall be, you might as well make up your mind that there will be further variations and tolerances.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Tolerances apply now to all these packages that are marked. Packages are required to have the contents marked thereon, but it is not possible to make two bottles to contain exactly the same quantity, and it is not possible to make two packages, even by machinery, to contain exactly the same quantity. If by legislation you say that they shall, you can not change the fact that they will not. Tolerances must be allowed if this legislation is to be enacted and enforced.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. They always are allowed, but to establish them in advance, so that the one who wishes to evade the law can know just how far he can go in evading the law, I submit, is dangerous.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think there has been any trouble about that.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It just practically changes the standard.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think there has been any trouble on that point, but it is perfectly clear that it ought not to be left to a department anywhere in the Government to say, after a package has been put up, whether it complies with what the department then wants to have done. Let them pick out one man's package and another man's package and determine the matter in advance, so that all men will be on equal terms. Tolerances are allowed upon the theory that it is not possible to make or fill two packages with precisely the same quantity, and it is not. What they do, as a matter of fact, where packages are put up, is to test a number of packages and see whether they come within the limit fixed.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There are lots of packages that can be filled to the very limit, where no tolerance is necessary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But it is not possible to know exactly how much is going into them.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. They can be filled. There are a lot of packages that can be filled. There are lots of commodities of a kind where the entire interior of the package can be filled with the material.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can take two packages of cardboard or two tin cans or two glass bottles, and there is not a gentleman in this House who can fill them so that they will be evenly filled on the top. There is bound to be a variation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the gentleman from Illinois should have his way, it would be serving notice on the trade that it is not necessary for them to fill their packages, that an ounce could be left out or that to fill up to an inch from the top would be enough, and we would find that that is the quantity that they would put in.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the department should say that it would make a tolerance that an inch from the top would be enough, that of course would give that opportunity, but I take it that the department would use good judgment about a matter of that sort. The difficulty now is that men will take a large package, we will say, for a breakfast food, which looks as though it contains twice as much as another package. People buy according to the eye, to a very large extent. The quantity of contents may be marked on the package, but one can not tell by the eye in advance, and you do not get a chance to see what the quantity is until you have bought the package. We want to prevent that. That is what this legislation is designed to prevent. That will be accomplished by giving the department power to fix the tolerances, requiring them to fix the tolerances before the packages are made and not after.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The right should be given to the Department of Agriculture in each case as it arises to determine whether or not the party under suspicion has gone so far from compliance with the law as to indicate his intention to deceive—whether he has gone so far that the result of his work is likely to deceive the purchaser.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Michigan contend that a man manufacturing a food or other product should put it up and mark the quantity on the outside of the package and then leave it to some clerk in the Department of Agriculture to determine as between two manufacturers, whether one is violating the law, by fixing a rule after the packages are made?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But this is not to reach the package with the proper quantity marked upon it. Let us take a package such as the chairman of the committee there has exhibited. Suppose it will hold four ounces and only three are put inside of it and only three are marked upon the package. There has been no deception as to the quantity except as the purchaser is deceived by the appearance of the box.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The manufacturer who has filled it has used too large a box.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And he has used that large box for the purpose of deceiving the purchaser.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. He has used a box likely to deceive the purchaser.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman, and I think it is fraudulent.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. He ought not to be permitted to do it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think he ought to be forbidden from doing it, but I do not think it ought to be left with a department clerk to say what he can do after it has been done, not telling the man in advance what he is permitted to do.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The danger is, as I have said before and again repeat, that if the tolerances and variations are established in advance they will become the standard, and the manufacturer will conform only to them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no proposition here to change existing law upon that subject. It has worked satisfactorily so far as the department is concerned, and in the main so far as the people and the manufacturers are concerned.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The officials of the department—the head of the Bureau of Chemistry himself was there with his assistants—testified that it would not be wise to establish the standards in advance; it would not be wise to use the word "shall" where we have used the word "may."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, it is very natural, I suppose, for a Department of Agriculture official to imagine that he is the whole thing, and that he ought to be able to determine hereafter as between two individuals, as between a friend and an enemy, whether one can be punished or not, without making a rule.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from Illinois has already said that the law now in the hands of the Department of Agriculture and its officials has worked well and there is no need of this change.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But they do not propose to change the law as it now stands.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But they do propose this and say that it is necessary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is an addition. This does not affect the existing law as to the quantity of contents in the package. This is only an addition. They have not proposed to change existing law as to making tolerances.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When we had these hearings we had large tables covered with different kinds of containers and boxes——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I had this whole House pretty nearly covered——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Our room was pretty nearly filled up with them, and if anyone had seen them as we saw them and taken notice of the methods employed to deceive the public he would realize the importance of a bill of this kind.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And we gave a great deal of attention to it, and I believe it is better than it will be if we adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am just as much concerned for fear the courts will knock it out as any member of the committee.

Mr. HAUGEN. The contention was also that if the word "shall" was used the measure might not become operative before the variance and tolerance were fixed by the department, which might be two or three years before all are completed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, if it takes the department two or three years to determine what tolerance shall be allowed, why should the manufacturer be required to determine instantly at the risk of the penitentiary what shall be allowed? That is a queer proposition, it seems to me.

Mr. HAUGEN. They can submit the container to the department and have it approved——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the department with all the information at its command can not determine, why should a man who wants to follow the law in the prosecution of his business be required to go ahead at his own risk without any information, to be subject afterwards to the determination of a clerk here as to whether he is proceeding properly or not?

Mr. HAUGEN. In most instances the question in reference to tolerances of a package can easily be determined. It does not require very much effort on the part of either the manufacturer or the department to determine most of them, but there are, of course, some close cases, and, as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, there are a number of instances where no tolerances whatever will be necessary, and if we use the word "shall," it will be necessary to fix tolerances and variations in every instance, including those not necessary, and before tolerances can be established for each and every article a long time may be consumed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, there is no case on earth where one man can put in two packages identically the same quantity.

Mr. HAUGEN. I agree with the gentleman——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Or one man make two packages of identically the same size.

Mr. HAUGEN. I agree to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Without the provision for tolerances and variations this would not be a good bill, would it?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are a safeguard for the manufacturer.

Mr. BLANTON. But that is absolutely necessary to the legislation, is it not?

Mr. HAUGEN. I think it is most desirable.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is so, if what the gentleman from Illinois has said is true, and I feel sure it is true, that the courts would undoubtedly knock this law out because of our delegation of authority, then why not perfect it by changing "may" into "shall."

Mr. HAUGEN. If there is any question as to the constitutionality of the bill, and if it hinges on the one word, the suggestion is good.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer the gentleman from Illinois as authority.

Mr. HAUGEN. And he is very good authority. I am not going to discuss the legal phase of it. It has been discussed by the solicitor of the department, attorneys from the department, and other very able attorneys before the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I see no necessity for any provision here which requires the package to be filled. This is not like the original provision in pure-food bills at all, which fixes absolutely the quantity which was to be put in, but it is a question of whether a container may be made likely to deceive or mislead a purchaser. Now, there may be some immaterial variation which might be regarded here as a reasonable variation which would deceive nobody. Everybody knows, just as the gentleman from Illinois stated, that it is absolutely impossible to fill each one of these to just a precise level, and nobody would be deceived because he found one box with one level and another with some immaterial variation as to level.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is one bottle that in size seems to be twice as large as this one?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet it contains less, and yet it is filled. One bottle is calculated to deceive the public and the other is not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not the question——

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman from Illinois stated you may fill up four of these to a level to the top, and yet when you place them on the shelves in business houses to be sold one would be down to a certain extent and another would be up a little.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The law has nothing to say about filling anything; at least it is not necessary that it should.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee said it was to make merchants fill containers and fill bottles.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not what I am speaking about. It is to prevent sending out a container which apparently contains a great deal more material than it really does, and that is the way the law reads.

Mr. BLANTON. Whether a box, for instance, is filled a third?

Mr. PELL. Would it not have to be marked how much there is?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; under the general provisions of the pure-food law; but that is not in this bill.

Mr. PELL. Then how are people going to be fooled——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. People are very easily deceived.

Mr. PELL. If a person can read writing, that seems to be a protection.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield or is the gentleman from Texas recognized in opposition?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. How much time? Does the gentleman yield the balance of his time?

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 12 minutes.

Mr. SANDERS of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. In the case of apples, as I understand it, they go into cold storage in the fall of the year with the package properly filled. If it is taken out of cold storage, it is the custom of the trade to fill the top of the package with a corrugated sheet of paper, which, of course, would reduce the contents of the package. How would this affect that situation?

Mr. HAUGEN. It would not affect it at all. The only question is as to what it contained at the time of shipment. As to the shrinkage, that is another matter.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield, I understood him to say that when the shipment was made if the barrel was full——

Mr. HAUGEN. At the time it was offered for shipment. That is the only question. Offered for shipment in interstate commerce.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. When apples are put into storage the barrel is filled, and when it comes out it is not full. That is the time it is offered for shipment. There should be a provision to take care of shrinkage. Shrinkage may not only apply to apples but to fruits and vegetables as well. I think a provision should be made in this bill taking care of shrinkage.

Mr. HAUGEN. My understanding is that there has been no objection made to that. Under the Gould amendment that is very satisfactory. We are not anticipating any trouble over it,

I would be very glad to amend the bill in any way, however, so as to protect the apple growers.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. The apple people are fearful of trouble if this bill is passed in this shape.

Mr. HAUGEN. I appreciate that, and I have had a great deal of correspondence relative to that. I am aware of the gentleman's interest in the matter, and I am as willing to protect the interest which he has.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, at first blush you will think there is not so much involved in this legislation. It is a very short bill, only two amendments offered to the food and drugs act, but an extended hearing before the Committee on Agriculture showed that there were growing up in this country not one but many hundreds of crooked manufacturers who are fooling the public in the manner as indicated here by the exhibition of these packages. Honest manufacturers who have been in business all their lives and who have built up trade on certain lines of goods packed in certain forms of packages that have a reputation all over the country came before the committee and made a showing that appealed to us, in the sense of honesty and fair dealing, that this legislation ought to be passed by Congress in order that honest manufacturers and the consuming public might be protected.

Now, for instance, take this potato carton [exhibiting]. When opened it is only one-third full. An honest manufacturer tells us that he does not want that to exist. The only reason that that package was made in that manner was to fool the eye of the purchaser and unload on him empty space and to charge for that, and the manufacturer who is guilty of that is guilty of a fraud against the whole buying public. It is his business to make his money by deceiving the public, and yet he is in competition with an honest manufacturer in the potato business who puts on the market a package well filled. There is the public to be protected on the one hand and the honest manufacturer to be protected on the other.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Do not disturb me until I get through, and then you can ask any question you wish.

Here are the necessary essentials for the housewife. She goes into the market place. She wants to buy some of these articles, and there are on the shelf of the merchant two bottles, both of them, so far as the contents are concerned, looking alike. But here is a bottle that apparently has much more of contents than the smaller bottle, and yet the smaller bottle has twice as much of the ingredients as the larger bottle. The manufacturer who puts up this bottle [exhibiting] did it for the purpose of deceiving. He is selling the space. The man who put up the contents of this bottle [exhibiting] is putting up a thing that the housewife is buying. She is not intending to buy a bottle. Here is the honest manufacturer providing contents for sale; here is the dishonest manufacturer, in competition with him, providing a deceptive bottle for sale.

Now, as to spices, a box containing spices was exhibited here. It has an isinglass front. The housewife looks on the merchant's shelves and sees the package. Here is the isinglass disclosing the contents. She needs the spices for seasoning purposes. She does not stop to inquire whether or not that container is filled with the spices she is buying, but it is the contents that the housewife wants; it is not the empty space.

But when she opens that container she finds that just above the isinglass through which she has looked two-thirds of the container is empty space. Therefore, a crooked manufacturer has imposed on the housewife. He has imposed on the purchasers of the country, and he is in competition with the honest manufacturer who puts up a similar package but who fills the spaces with the spices that the housewife seeks to buy.

Here is another manufacturer who has put up olives for sale. The housewife goes into the store for the purpose of buying a bottle of olives. This bottle sitting on the grocery shelf has the ability to enlarge the size of the olive. It has the further capacity of keeping the olives from fitting closer together in the bottle. And when the housewife purchases what she believes to be luscious olives, to her consternation when she opens that bottle she finds she has been defrauded; that she has bought small olives in the first place, and very few of them in the bottle. She has suffered from an imposition. And yet the olive dealer who uses that bottle is in competition with an honest olive dealer who, when the housewife buys the contents of his container, gives full value for her money. There are two parties defrauded, the consumer of the various articles and the honest manufacturer who wants to deal in an honest way. These honest manufacturers came before our committee, not with these containers alone but with hundreds of them, and exhibited them in the committee, and you would be astonished at the fraud that is rampant throughout our Nation in containers of this kind.

These are simply amendments to the food and drugs act.

We want to make these men act honestly. You go into a grocery store and call for a package of macaroni—any of you—and see what you get. I tried that out just before I left home. You get two-thirds space and one-third macaroni—a cheap article like that. The same thing goes through the whole category of manufactured products. Honest manufacturers admitted that the competition was so unfair that unless something were done they would be driven to unfair means themselves. It is up to this Congress to pass this simple legislation restraining dishonest men from selling empty spaces and fooling the eyes of the purchasers. They went so far during the war that where a manufacturer had a reputation of selling a certain line of spices that the housewives all over the country were familiar with, those prices were prohibitory in practice, and the honest manufacturers were cutting down the size of their cartons and putting in the spices they supplied, and giving an honest measure.

Yet they found that they were forced, in order to make the sales which they formerly made, to go back to the old-sized packages and slack-fill those packages. That is what was done. The trade wanted that size package, and so when the housewife goes in and looks at the package she does not know that it is not filled and that she is being fooled and that her money is being taken from her.

There is only one way to reach it that I know of, and that is by passing an amendment to the pure food and drugs act and driving these men back to filling their packages and not fooling the eyes of the purchasers of the Nation. That is all. I would not put a proviso to this bill giving six months' leeway to these dishonest people to hold up the public that much longer by selling empty space. I would make this bill go into effect as soon as the Congress passes it and the President signs it. It does not penalize those people, but it should penalize them for engaging in a fraud against the American people. Let them lose these fraudulent containers. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. Does anyone desire recognition in opposition to the bill?

Mr. PELL. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman grant me three minutes?

Mr. PELL. The gentleman may take all the time he wants.

Mr. BLANTON. I want only three minutes.

Mr. PELL. And I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. How much time did the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PELL. Three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York yields to the gentleman from Texas three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] a few minutes ago was of the impression that this bill if enacted into law would not reach a potato container like the one exhibited here, which is filled one-third with potatoes and the other two-thirds with space. At least that is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What I thought was that this technical provision in this paragraph might well be left out, because I thought the paragraph at the top of the page covered all that was necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman sees that it does meet just such a case as this, and requires the container to be filled.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That paragraph does, yes; but I thought it might just as well be left out and avoid that legal question, as I thought the other paragraph covered it.

Mr. BLANTON. That was the only point I wanted to clear up, that this particular bill if passed into a law will require manufacturers to fill their containers. They can not fill a package one-third full of potatoes and sell it as a full package. That is all I wanted to say.

Mr. PELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should like to have the gentleman yield to me to offer an amendment, and then yield to me some time.

Mr. PELL. I yield for that purpose such time as the gentleman wants.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New York that if he yields to the gentleman from Illinois to offer an amendment, he loses the floor.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think not under the Calendar Wednesday rule. I do not know. There is an hour allotted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be inclined offhand to say that it would be wiser to debate first and then offer the amendment later.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; I want to offer the amendment so it will be before the House.

Mr. PELL. Then I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes, and let him offer the amendment afterwards.

The SPEAKER. The first impression of the Chair would be that if the gentleman from New York yielded to the gentleman from Illinois to offer an amendment, he would yield the floor.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We are operating under the Calendar Wednesday rule on a House Calendar bill. The bill is not read further for amendment. Supposing I offer an amendment, which is permissible during the time for debate. It may be permissible afterwards. I will not undertake to say. But somebody may want to offer an amendment to the amendment, and some discussion may be desired, which must be had, I assume—though I may not be correct about that—within the two hours. Is there any further debate after the two hours? Of course the rule provides two hours' general debate and that is all there is on a House Calendar bill—general debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule, to save time on this occasion but not as a precedent, that the gentleman can offer the amendment and then take his time. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Amend page 2, line 13, by striking out the words "of said section 8, as amended."

Amend, page 2, line 14, by striking out the proviso and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, however, That reasonable variations shall be permitted and tolerances shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act."

Amend, page 2, line 20, by striking out the word "amendment" and insert the words "amendatory act."

Amend, page 3, line 1, by striking out the word "amendment" and insert in lieu thereof the words "amendatory act."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There are four of these amendments. Three of them are merely formal and technical. Two of them relate to striking out the word "amendment" and inserting the words "amendatory act."

I suppose this bill was prepared in this form by somebody in the Department of Agriculture who does not know the difference between an amendment on the floor of the House and an amendatory act of Congress. We never refer in a law to an amendment, but we always refer to amendatory acts of Congress, and I assume there is no objection to those amendments. The one on page 2, line 13, the language reads—

Paragraph "Third" of said section 8 as amended.

I think that is a little confusing. It is an amendment to the third paragraph of the food provision of section 8; and if we simply strike out "of said section 8 as amended" and leave it "paragraph 'Third'" it says what it means, and it does not mean anything different from what it says. Those are not material changes, and have no purpose except to make the language of the bill more properly conform to legislative forms.

I had more or less to do with the passage of the original act. I worked a long time on the pure food act. I drew the bill and represented the committee on the floor of the House, and have several times since then been concerned with these amendments to it.

I have no use for fraud. I believe in protecting the public as far as possible from fraudulent practices. When the pure food bill first came before the House, and before that in the committee, I said that whenever a fraudulent practice had grown up and you prevented it by legislation the bright wit of man would seek to find some other fraudulent practice that would take its place. When we first passed the pure food law to forbid fraudulent adulteration, then they commenced to make packages that looked as though they had large quantities of food in them but did not. The manufacturers, jobbers, wholesalers, and retailers had originally obtained the striking out of the pure food bill of the provision requiring the quantity of the contents to be marked upon the package, but afterwards the same manufacturers, jobbers, wholesalers, and retailers unanimously came before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and asked us to put into the law what they had theretofore resisted, a provision requiring the quantity of the contents to be put upon the package, because an honest dealer did not have much show against a dishonest dealer.

We put that on. No one can tell by the looks of two packages that are nearly alike how big they are or how much they contain. I brought cans into the House that varied considerably in quantity of contents and defied Members to pick out which contained the most, either by looks or lifting, and they could not do it. But the eye can tell a large package from a small package.

During the war—and I do not attempt to criticize too severely a large number of people who put small quantities in packages—during the war, when wheat by the action of Congress had gone up in price from $1 a bushel to $2.25 a bushel or more, and macaroni, which is made from wheat and put up in packages, and the manufacturers could not easily change the size of the packages and could not change them fast enough to keep up with the rise in the price of wheat, I do not wonder that honest manufacturers put smaller quantities in the packages. There is no escape from the proposition that they were sure to do it. Whether they will put in larger quantities when the price of wheat has gone down, I do not undertake to say.

I do not believe in fraud. I believe there ought to be a requirement that packages shall be reasonably well filled. I do not want to leave it to a department clerk or a clerk in the office of the Solicitor of the Agricultural Department to say as between the two men on his new inspection, "I think you are violating the law and should go to the penitentiary," and to the other, "You are not violating the law," when no one can tell in advance how he is going to obey the law. I do not think you can make a law that leaves to the department the power to say, after the act is passed, whether a man has committed a crime or not. I do not think the Congress can delegate to the Department of Agriculture its legislative authority. We can pass a law requiring that packages going in interstate commerce shall be filled, because it would be impossible to fill two packages exactly alike, even by hand, and most of the packages are filled by machinery; as a corollary to that there ought to be a provision that a reasonable variation shall be allowed. If we say a reasonable variation shall be allowed, we have the right to direct the department to fix what those variations shall be in the first instance, the courts having the final determination of it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Without discussing the question of law, which I concede to be close, why could we not leave out entirely the second provision? It seems to me that the first provision would afford sufficient protection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can not fill two cans just alike. I know; I do some canning myself. The canners all concede that. You can not fill two bottles just alike. It was desirable to have variations permitted and have them defined on the theory that the definition would fix it so that a bottle or package could be varied to the extent that it was not possible to fill them just alike. You allow variations in filling packages that are necessary to meet the case in filling the package. The packages in the main are filled by machinery. You can not get them identical, and it was not desirable to leave to the department in each case the right to prosecute a man because a clerk thought he had not filled a package sufficiently when two men had filled them just alike, and to prosecute one and not the other.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I fear I did not make myself clear. I wanted to ask the gentleman if it would not be sufficient protection to the purchaser to leave out the directions as to the variations and tolerances.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman means to leave out paragraph 2 of the bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and that would avoid the legal question, and the purchaser would be sufficiently protected under the first provision.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That possibly is true. I am not discussing that phase of it. I am discussing the question that if this goes in, making it illegal if the package is not filled with the food it purports to contain, the law should provide that reasonable variations shall be permitted. You can not fill the packages identically alike. Then I think it should provide that tolerances should be established by rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of law.

After the pure-food law was passed there came from all over the country demands from honest manufacturers desiring to know whether what they were doing would comply with the law. They desired to comply with the law. Of course, there are some dishonest manufacturers who are trying their best to evade the law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the bill should be amended as the gentleman suggests, would it be necessary for tolerances or variations to be established before the law was effective?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; the law is effective anyhow. But it is within the power of the department to fix the tolerances before it attempts to prosecute anybody. If the department has not fixed the tolerances, it ought not to prosecute a man who is trying to obey the law. If the department thinks that somebody is evading the law or violating the provisions of the law, let the department fix the tolerances for the future. There is no great difficulty about that. There has never been any difficulty about enforcing the law where we required that the tolerances should be fixed on the quantity or contents. Although they have not fixed the tolerances for every case where packages are put up, yet they do not prosecute until they fix the tolerances.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the matter was spoken of when the committee was considering the bill, and some one said—I can not recall now who made the remark or who advanced the opinion—that if it were made necessary by the law to establish tolerances and variations it would have to be done in advance, and the law would not be complete and would not be effective and could not be enforced until that had been done.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think that was some one who did not know what he was talking about. That law is on the statute books as to the quantity of contents, and all packages do not have the tolerances fixed as yet. A new style of package may come up, and they fix the tolerance for it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It impressed us as having force.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The legal end of it, of course, perhaps did not impress the Committee on Agriculture as much as it did the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. One committee is composed of men who are the brainiest in the country on the subject of agriculture, and one is composed of men who are studying the law under the constitutional power given to Congress. I do not see any objection to saying that the department shall fix it. I believe in preventing fraud. I think all men ought to be treated alike about it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The chief of the Bureau of Chemistry in the department said he was not insistent that the word should be "may" instead of "shall," and respecting that he said this:

> I do not think that the department has any particular objection to that change in the language. The thought in our minds was this, that if it is mandatory to establish tolerances it is mandatory to publish them, and when we publish a tolerance it means that it ceases to become a tolerance and becomes a practice. If we say that a tolerance in a certain type of bottle shall be half an ounce, in a 12-ounce bottle, because that is reasonable, you will give the very skillful manufacturer a prescription of which he may take advantage. We thought it would be better not to make it mandatory and to leave it to the administrative judgment, because if you publish a tolerance it is taken advantage of.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That just shows that this distinguished gentleman was talking about a subject with which he was not familiar, although it is his business to be familiar with it. The law requires the tolerance to be fixed for a 12-ounce bottle, and he is saying if it did require it that it would be difficult to enforce. It is now the law, and the tolerance has been fixed by his department. He simply was not familiar with either the law or his own branch of the department. That is the trouble with him. Of course, whenever one of these distinguished scientists in the chemistry department gets to dealing with the subject of what the law is, he is lost, and this man was lost both as to the facts and his own work. That is the law now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand the gentleman to mean from that statement that tolerances and variations are already fixed now that would apply to these measures here that we are seeking to have corrected?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the gentleman one other question because I know he is an authority upon this subject. An opinion has been expressed here that the last proviso of the bill should be eliminated and that the bill should go into effect at once instead of allowing six months. If the gentleman's amendment respecting tolerances shall be agreed to, and the tolerances shall be fixed by the department, what effect would that have upon the proposition to eliminate the last proviso?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will say frankly I think the proviso ought to be made 18 months instead of 6, and I think I can convince any gentleman in a few words that it ought not to go into effect at once. I am very sure of one thing, and that is that if the House should pass the bill providing that it go into effect at once, it would not go into effect during the present Congress. The goods referred to here are already on the shelves of the retailers all over the country. Those men have purchased them from the manufacturers and have paid for them in good faith. There has been much talk about people being deceived. It is very largely overdrawn. I believe in having matters so arranged that the people can tell by the looks of the goods what the quantity is they are purchasing. Let us suppose, however, that a housewife buys a package like the one illustrated here and finds that it is only one-third full. If she does not know enough to realize that it is but one-third full, no law can protect her. These retailers have the goods now on their shelves, and by providing that the law shall take effect at once we will be punishing not the man who produced the goods but the man who sells them. We would provide in that event that the man who sells a package now on his shelves the day after this act goes into effect is guilty of a crime. Is there anyone here so foolish as to do that? I think not. In the very nature of things, where the packages have been put up and made in the trade, there ought to be a reasonable time within which to dispose of them. You do not reduce the cost of things by requiring the destruction of great quantities of goods of any kind. Legislation is for the long term, and when we enact legislation we should enact legislation that is fair and that will stand, legislation that will not produce a kick back. Pass a bill and endeavor to punish people because they are selling goods already on their shelves which the people must have, because we provide in the bill that it is a crime to sell the goods, and such a bill would not become a law. So what is the use of doing that. However, the amendment that I have proposed would not have any effect upon it at all. While we would say that it is their duty to fix tolerances, we would still have made it a crime to sell the stuff.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When the gentleman urges that the time limit should be longer than is provided in the bill, has he in mind the fact that this bill has been before the House for more than a year?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have in mind this fact: Most packages for the trade are made and ordered a year and a half in advance. We have had this matter up a number of times. Packages are ordered a year and a half in advance. Large quantities of them are put up a year in advance. The tomatoes for this year have been canned, the fruit has all been canned. There is no object to be gained in saying that this law shall apply to one of those cans six months from now. You may as well say it now, because they will still be on the shelves of the retailer and be sold a year from now. If we want legislation to be approved and enforced, we must be fair. Six months is not a fair time in which to dispose of the packaged goods owned in the best of faith by everybody after purchase from the manufacturer, and in most cases in the best of faith by the manufacturer himself.

Do not for the purpose of punishing one crook—and I am willing to protect the honest manufacturer against him—do not for the purpose of punishing one crook endeavor to penalize 100 honest manufacturers or 100 honest dealers. That is my position. That is all. I want to be fair and reasonable. I want to prevent fraud, but I do not want to commit fraud in doing it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, in almost every one of these instances the variation is so evidently flagrant that the element of good faith which the gentleman emphasizes is not present at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is as to those particular people——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And when we fixed the time—that was the consensus of the opinion of the committee—we fixed it at six months, and the gentleman will notice this bill was reported to the House, I think, the 1st of November, 1919, more than a year ago, and the trade had notice at the time the bill was pending and that the law was to be enacted and some change was to be made and that fraudulent practices must cease. It seems to me if we add a year now, too much time altogether would be allowed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not care how quickly you punish the fellow who is committing fraud, and this will not stop punishing the man who commits the fraud. Here is the new rule of conduct which applies to the honest man as well as to the dishonest man. The honest man must comply with it as well as the man who wants to commit a fraud, and yet you do not give the honest man time to turn around before you punish him. That is what it seems to me, and I have not any doubt about it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from New York yield me two or three minutes?

Mr. PELL. I do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to the point of law which he raises, and I think if this second provision with reference to filling packages is kept in the law his amendment ought to prevail, otherwise we are in danger of having the court make such a ruling upon this whole act as to make it unenforceable; but I also agree with some of the things suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PELL] with reference to our adopting unnecessary regulations. And it really seems to me—and in the absence of the chairman of the committee I would like to have for a moment the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]—it really seems to me as if this second provision might well be omitted entirely, and thus this legal question be avoided. The first provision is that if a package "be in a container so made, formed, or shaped as likely to deceive or mislead the purchaser as to quantity, quality, size, kind, or origin of the food therein" it shall be subject to the penalties of this statute. Now, I do not see at this time just why that provision would not be sufficient without any provision in reference to the filling of the package. Here is a package which gentlemen have said was filled only about one-third. It is quite evident this first provision would cover that, without any provision that it should be filled, for the size of the package would deceive the purchaser. As soon as you make a provision requiring the package to be filled then arises this question of variations and tolerances, because, as the gentleman from Illinois has well said, it is impossible to fill all of these packages exactly, and, with all due deference to the chairman of the committee, my colleague [Mr. HAUGEN], I think this provision would apply to apples in barrels, which, as one gentleman who is familiar with the subject has said, those apples will shrink afterwards and finally the container may not be entirely full, although it may have been filled entirely full to begin with. Will some gentleman state——

Mr. LAYTON. I do not think there would be very much difference for a good while.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, some gentleman mentioned that.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to suggest the elimination of a portion of this. Has the gentleman the bill before him?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have the bill.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Page 2, beginning with lines 4, 5, and 6, does the gentleman suggest those words should be left out?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; not that; but the second provision, with reference to the filling of the package, I suggested might be left out. I was simply inquiring of the gentleman from Michigan and my colleague, the chairman of the committee, as to what they think about it. It seems to me when the provision was made, as it is at the top of the page, prohibiting a container to be so made as to be likely to deceive or mislead the purchaser as to the quantity, quality, and so forth, it would cover all that is necessary and protect the purchaser, without going into this somewhat dangerous question with reference to absolutely filling the box. If the container does not deceive the person, then the box must be reasonably filled, necessarily; otherwise they are deceived by the container.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose you have a rectangular-shaped box that in no way apparently deceives the public and would not deceive anyone if properly filled; it is not so built as to deceive if it is properly filled. If it were so built under this law with this section eliminated, it would be a violation of the law. Then you come to the question of filling it. You put in a certain content, say, one-third full and you mark on it its actual weight under the present pure food law. It meets the requirements of the present pure food law and this amendment, and yet it is only one-third filled. I think the gentleman is mistaken when he concludes that this particular paragraph is not needed to cover manufacturers filling the package. I think without it they could keep on deceiving, because these containers are not built to deceive. They might be built by a certain manufacturer who has no idea of the contents that are going into them. They might be used by other manufacturers and filled with an entirely different content.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is just the trouble. These containers are built to deceive, but are filled just the same——

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact, there is not as much deception about the matter as gentlemen think. The housewife who goes to the grocery store and buys one of these bottles knows that the sunken panel on it takes away from the content. The trouble about the whole matter is that when the housewife goes to buy, some drummer has gone around the town and sold to all the stores, and she has got to buy that particular kind of bottle, though she knows she is getting a smaller quantity.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not agree with my friend from Delaware on that point. I want to yield to my friend from New York [Mr. SANDERS], who asked me to yield a moment ago.

Mr. SANDERS of New York. In the matter of storing apples, they go into the storehouse in the fall with the package full, as I understand it. They remain there for perhaps six months. There is a natural shrinkage which goes on, but which is offset by placing a corrugated paper on the top of the barrel in order to take up the slack and to prevent the apples from becoming bruised in transit. It is certainly much better to have it done in that way than to attempt to fill the barrels with fresh apples, inasmuch as that would destroy many of the apples by bruising. The question is whether or not that would be illegal unless some provision were made for it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would be illegal unless some tolerance was established. But that the committee expects to establish. My thought was that we might well leave out this entire provision in reference to the filling, which requires an exactness that was not necessary, and also requires a large number of agents to go over the country and examine these packages. Moreover, it adds greatly to our force in order to put in effect an unnecessary regulation. I would like to hear from the chairman of the committee on that.

Mr. HAUGEN. In the opinion of the gentleman, would that protect the false bottom?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The first provision that you have would protect against the false bottoms so far as that is concerned. There would not be any trouble about that. There might be something else, of which the gentleman is aware.

Mr. HAUGEN. This says if a container was made as to form or shape that would be "likely to deceive," and the other provision is to protect against false bottoms and various abuses and deceptions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think very clearly that where there was a false bottom it would be considered a container calculated to deceive the public. If that is the only question I think the second part might as well be left out. It is not the first provision I sought to have omitted—the one the gentleman is reading. I wanted that retained.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understood the situation was to strike out line 14.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; with reference to the filling of the packages.

Mr. HAUGEN. As a matter of safety, is it not better to leave it in in order to make it absolutely certain?

Mr. Speaker, if there are no others who wish to speak, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the committee has other bills which it desires to call up, but it seems to be the desire of Members that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. BLACK (at the request of Mr. JONES of Texas) for 10 days, on account of death of his father.

To Mr. JAMES of Michigan (at the request of Mr. KELLEY of Michigan) indefinitely, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DOREMUS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of George H. Lozon (H. R. 13783) Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

FLORENCE B. WELLS AND G. W. GILKISON.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 600.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Florence B. Wells the sum of $186.66, and to G. W. Gilkison the sum of $120, the same being the amount received by them per month as clerks to the late Mahlon M. Garland, a Representative in Congress from Pennsylvania at the time of his death, November 19, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is merely to pay them back salary?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes. This is the usual resolution; the amount is certified from the Clerk's record.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CLARENCE W. NICHOLS AND RAY E. KOLLAR.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 604.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Clarence W. Nichols the sum of $153.33 and to Ray E. Kollar the sum of $153.33, the same being the amount received by them per month as clerks to the late Dick T. Morgan, a Representative in Congress from Oklahoma at the time of his death, July 4, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the committee is entitled to have other bills considered, and that by moving that the House adjourn now it does not lose that right. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, December 9, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

113. A letter from the chairman of the War Finance Corporation, transmitting the third annual report of that body; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

114. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting annual report on the state of the finances for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

115. A letter from the assistant inspector general of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, transmitting summaries of the reports of inspections of 32 State homes for disabled volunteer soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

116. A letter from the president of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, transmitting report of that organization for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, together with a record of the changes in membership of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

117. A letter from the chairman of Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, transmitting report of the official proceedings of that body for the year ended December 31, 1919, together with other information; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

118. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting statement of disbursements required by section 193, United States Revised Statutes, during the period from December 1, 1919, to November 30, 1920, from contingent expenses, Department of Commerce, 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921; general expenses, Bureau of Standards, 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921; statement of expenditures under all appropriations for the support of the Bureau of Fisheries during the fiscal year 1920; statement showing typewriters, etc., exchanged by the department during the fiscal year 1920 for new machines; statement showing travel performed by officers and employees of the Department of Commerce who traveled on official business from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1920; statement covering the first four months of the fiscal year 1921 showing average number of employees of the department receiving increased compensation at the rate of $240 per annum and the average number, by grades, receiving the same at each other rate; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce.

119. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting detailed report concerning the rental of buildings and lands comprising property acquired for the extension of the Capitol grounds; to the Committee on Appropriations.

120. A letter from the Librarian, transmitting annual report as Librarian of Congress and the annual report of the superintendent of the Library Building and grounds for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on the Library.

121. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting with a letter from the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army a report of water diversion from the Great Lakes and Niagara River; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

122. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting draft of a bill to amend section 62 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States"; to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

123. A letter from the acting vice chairman of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, transmitting report of the publications issued by the Federal Board for Vocational Education during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Printing.

124. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report of typewriters, adding machines, etc., exchanged in part payment for new machines for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Appropriations.

125. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of report relative to the necessity of constructing a road between Ajo and Tucson, across the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

126. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting list of claims which have been considered, adjusted, and determined by the Commissioner of Lighthouses, on account of damages caused by collisions for which vessels of the Lighthouse Service were responsible; to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

127. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of Commerce submitting deficiency and supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

128. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting draft of bill to amend the law respecting sales of national forest timber; to the Committee on Agriculture.

129. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting draft of bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with owners of forest lands in the administration and protection of such lands in or near the national forests; to the Committee on Agriculture.

130. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting draft of a bill for the protection of wild animals and birds in the Kaibab National Forest; to the Committee on Agriculture.

131. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting draft of proposed legislation amending food and drugs act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

132. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting detailed report of the expenditures made from tribal funds of the Confederated Bands of Utes during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

133. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report relating to the construction, enlargement, and improvement of Fort Hall irrigation project, etc.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

134. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting detailed report of the expenditures made in per capita payments to the Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche Indians during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

135. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report of all moneys collected and deposited during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, under the appropriation "Determining heirs of deceased Indian allottees, 1920"; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

136. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting statement of the expenditures for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, of money under the caption "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor"; to the Committee on Indian Affairs

137. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, reporting that no expenditures were made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, for the construction of hospitals from the appropriation "Relieving distress and prevention, etc., of disease among Indians, 1920"; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

138. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report of expenditures made for the purpose of encouraging industry and support among the Indians on the Tongue River Reservation, Mont., during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

139. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting statement of the cost of all survey and allotment work on Indian reservations for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 9, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have come together as the representatives of a people whose Lord is the living God. All that adds meaning to life, all that hath set the standard of honor, all that has given glory to labor comes from Thy inspiration. Thou hast held us in the hollow of Thy hand.

We have set apart this morning hour to make mention of the name of a great statesman, to record with loving remembrance those qualities of heart and mind that enabled him to make an impress upon this great Nation.

We thank Thee for all the elements of manhood that have ever entered into the leadership of this great Nation of ours. We pray Thee to continue Thy blessing and that Thou wilt stir the highest qualities of life within us, that we may still follow the guidance of God in all our affairs and receive from Thee Thy constant approval. For Christ's sake. Amen.

MILES POINDEXTER, a Senator from the State of Washington, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 13264) to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 10311) to further amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, and amended by the act approved March 3, 1913, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4526) to amend section 501 of the transportation act, 1920, reported it favorably without amendment.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to offer a short amendment to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have already had the amendment printed, but would like to have it printed in the RECORD. It removes an objection by broadening the effect of the legislation so as to include other matters besides agriculture.

The amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amend Senate joint resolution No. 212 by striking out the word "revive," in the fourth line, and inserting the word "resume," and striking out the words "and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated," in the fifth and sixth lines, and inserting at the end of the seventh line, after the word "agricultural," the words "and other," so that the same will read:

* * * to resume the activities of the War Finance Corporation with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets.

Also amend, in line 16, by striking out the words "of extension."

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR BANKHEAD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, by order of the Senate to-day has been set aside for memorial addresses on my former colleague, the late Senator BANKHEAD of Alabama. I send to the desk the following resolutions and ask to have them read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 396) were read by the Assistant Secretary, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its profound sorrow in the death of the Hon. JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD, late a Senator from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public service.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, we meet to-day to mourn the death of a friend and colleague who passed into eternity, loved by his family and his friends, respected by his colleagues, and honored by the great constituency he served so well for a third of a century.

JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD, descendant of that sturdy Scotch-Irish stock to which America owes so much, was born on his father's farm in Marion, now Lamar County, near the old town of Moscow, Ala., September 13, 1842. His father, James Greer Bankhead, a native of Union District, S. C., settled at that place in 1818 and resided there until his death in 1861. His mother, Susan Hollis, was born in Darlington District, S. C., and came with her parents to Alabama in 1822, where she remained until her death at the age of 75.

Senator BANKHEAD was educated in the country schools of his native county, and with this meager scholastic preparation became by wide reading and contact with the world a man of solid and practical learning. Realizing the need of proper training for the business of life, he was always the champion of education for the youth of the land. He was married November 13, 1866, at Wetumpka, Ala., to Tallulah Brockman, a native of South Carolina, who had been reared in Alabama, and they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1916 at their home, Sunset, at Jasper, Ala. The five children surviving them are Louise, wife of A. G. Lund; Marie, wife of the late Thomas M. Owen; John H. Bankhead, jr.; William B. Bankhead; and Henry M. Bankhead. An interesting and unprecedented incident in American political history was that during the time Senator BANKHEAD was a Member of the Senate his son, WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, was a Member of the House, and on more than one occasion they were serving as presiding officers in their respective legislative bodies at the same time.

At the outbreak of the war between the Confederate States and the United States, JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD enlisted as a private in Company K, Sixteenth Alabama Regiment, Infantry Volunteers, in the company of Capt. J. D. Powers and the regiment commanded by Col. William B. Wood, of Florence, Ala. He was in the conflict from the beginning to the end; in the Battles of Fishing Creek, Perryville, Murfreesboro—indeed, he was in all the battles of the western army in which his command participated, except when disabled from wounds received in battle. After the Battle of Fishing Creek he was promoted to third lieutenant, and became captain after the Battle of Shiloh. He led the Sixteenth Alabama Regiment in a furious charge at Chickamauga and was wounded. The battle ground was an old sedge field, which caught fire and burned rapidly to the dismay of many a wounded soldier. Capt. BANKHEAD's life was in imminent peril, but he crawled from the bloody and fiery field, carrying upon his back Pvt. John Custer, who was totally disabled. Senator BANKHEAD's death removed from the Senate the last Confederate soldier to occupy a seat in this body. In 1918, when the United Confederate Veterans held the first reunion of the organization in the National Capital, wearing the gray Confederate uniform he appeared upon the floor of the Senate, received the cordial greeting of his friends and colleagues on both sides of the Chamber, and offered the motion, unanimously adopted, that out of respect to the valor of the Confederate soldier the Senate adjourn. He said, quoting from his remarks:

A little more than half a century ago Confederate soldiers in arms were hammering at the gates of Washington in an effort to sever their relations with the National Government. Thursday, marching with broken body and faltering step on a mission of peace and love, not of hatred and bloodshed, but in a spirit of resolute reconciliation and absolute loyalty to our flag, they will voice in vibrant tones to all the world an indissoluble Union of the United States. I am grateful that God has spared me to see this day, when my old comrades in arms of the Confederacy are here in the Capital of that Nation which for four years they struggled desperately to destroy, but which none in all this great Republic are now more anxious to preserve.

On the occasion of the great parade down Pennsylvania Avenue, Senator BANKHEAD and Senator KNUTE NELSON, of Minnesota, a veteran of the Union Army, wearing the blue, marched down Pennsylvania Avenue side by side, denoting to the cheering throngs the established fact of a reunited country.

During his service in Congress he voted for the bill to locate and mark the graves of Confederate soldiers who died in northern prisons or were buried in the North; he actively supported all claims for loss of property during the war; he voted for the resolution to return to the several States all Confederate flags and banners in the possession of the Federal Government and for the measure providing for the compilation of the rosters of the Union and Confederate Armies. The welfare of his comrades in arms was ever dear to his heart. He died a great American, loyal to his reunited country, but he never forgot the hardships and the suffering of his comrades with whom he fought so valiantly for the flag that only lives in history.

After the Civil War Capt. BANKHEAD returned to his home and resumed life on the farm. Although at the time he was in his early twenties, he was elected a member of the Alabama House of Representatives for the session of 1865–66 from Marion County. He was a member of the State senate from the twelfth senatorial district in the general assembly of 1876–77, during which time he voted for Gen. John T. Morgan to become a Senator in the Congress from Alabama. Thirty years later he succeeded Senator Morgan to that post of honor. In 1880 he again served in the House of Representatives of the Alabama General Assembly, this time from the county of Lamar, which he had helped to create. His service in both branches of the general assembly brought Capt. BANKHEAD into public attention as a man of more than ordinary ability. This fact, coupled with his humane character, prompted Gov. R. W. Cobb to appoint him warden of the State penitentiary. During his four years' service as head of the penal system of the State many changes for the betterment of the prisoners were effected. He recommended other reforms since adopted, including reformatory training schools for youthful delinquents.

On September 3, 1886, at Fayette courthouse, Capt. BANKHEAD was nominated for Congress by the Democratic convention of the sixth congressional district of Alabama, and elected to the office in November of that year, serving continuously from March 4, 1887, to March 4, 1907, a period of 20 years. For many years he was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and chairman of that committee during the period of Democratic control. It was during his chairmanship that the Congressional Library at Washington was completed. For his own State he was instrumental in securing Federal appropriations for a number of public buildings. After March 4, 1897, he became a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and during his entire congressional service, both in the House and Senate, always took a prominent part in legislation to promote navigation. In recognition of his interest in the subject he was appointed in 1907 a member of the National Waterways Commission. Through his efforts the Warrior River, in Alabama, has been made navigable from the great coal and iron fields, where it rises, to Mobile Bay. Realizing the value of deep-sea shipping to the port of Mobile, he worked unceasingly for the deepening of that harbor and for improvements and benefits to navigation of the adjacent waterways. Early recognizing the advantage and economy of water power, he devoted much labor to the enactment of a water-power bill and the development of the immense water-power energy at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, one of the great and successful results of his public career. During his fatal illness the water-power law recently passed was in conference, and his last request to any of his colleagues concerning legislation of any character was a message of his concern about certain features of that measure.

He was always an earnest advocate of effective transportation methods and a pioneer in the promotion of good roads. He was one of the organizers, and for many years president, of the Alabama Good Roads Association, and from its organization several years ago to the time of his death president of the United States Good Roads Association, one of the largest and most influential organizations of its kind. He stood in the forefront of the men who in the last two decades pressed unceasingly for national aid toward the construction of a great system of highways throughout the country. His speeches in the Senate 13 years ago were among the first in suppport of Federal aid for post roads, since an adopted policy of the Government. He was undaunted by the criticisms of his opponents, and went steadily on to his objective and secured an appropriation of $500,000 for an experimentation and demonstration. He had driven the entering wedge and the sentiment of the country approved his action. Subsequently his bill was adopted for an appropriation of $75,000,000 for post roads, later increased to $200,000,000, to be expended in cooperation with the several States of the Union. His earnest and unceasing efforts in the end accomplished a great public work, for which grateful friends have justly made acknowledgment by naming a great transcontinental highway in his honor. The Bankhead Highway, beginning at Washington, D. C., and ending at San Diego, Calif., is a just recognition by the public of the achievements wrought by JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD on behalf of good roads throughout the Nation.

In a primary election held August 27, 1906, in a contest with six other aspirants, Senator BANKHEAD was nominated by the Democratic Party of the State of Alabama to succeed to the first vacancy that might occur in the position of United States Senator from Alabama. On the death of the venerable and distinguished Senator John T. Morgan on June 18, 1907, he was formally elected by the State legislature. In 1911 he was reelected by the people for a full term to expire March 4, 1919. Again he was reelected and was serving his thirteenth year in the Senate when death called him. Altogether his period of service in Congress was nearly 33 years.

In the Senate he was a member of the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee and for seven years the chairman, and at the time of his death chairman of the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries. He was for some time a member of the Agriculture Committee and later of the Commerce Committee.

He was a man who never ceased to grow in mental power and capacity to serve; each new responsibility that came to him he successfully mastered. He filled with credit to himself and his State the high positions conferred upon him. He died at his post of duty, a faithful public servant, mourned by a devoted people, who loved him for his frank and manly dealings with his fellows, his loyalty to his trusts of high responsibility, and his unassuming and modest mode of life.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, Senator BANKHEAD and I were associated as members of the House in the Fiftieth Congress. It was my last term of a six-year service, and his first term of a continuous service of 20 years in that body. When we parted on the 4th of March, 1889, I never expected that we would in the future become associates in the Senate. While I realized that he had a great political future in store for him, as for myself, I felt that my political career was at an end. But the stress of politics brought me in 1895 into the Senate, while he was still serving in the House. In 1907, however, he left the House and joined me in the Senate; and from that time till the day of his death we were associates on one of the leading and important committees of this body.

In 1861, at 18 years of age, he entered the Confederate Army, and served till the end of the war with bravery, skill, and fortitude. He participated in many skirmishes and battles, and was three times wounded.

Owing to changed conditions at home, and owing to changes in our own makeup, we of the Union Army on our return from the war found it no easy matter to take up the threads and duties of civil life and to find suitable places for our future activity and usefulness. Most of us, however, in due time "found ourselves" in one way or another, for we were in a prosperous and happy part of the country, though a few were irretrievably lost by the wayside. Sheer exhaustion terminated the war on the part of the South, and the returned Confederate soldier had a much harder problem to encounter. He returned entirely empty-handed to an impoverished and in some places devastated country.

The system of labor which had flourished before the war was no more. Political and social chaos seemed to prevail, more or less. It was not an easy task for the Confederate soldier to adjust himself to such conditions, to find a place for his activity, to find an opening for even a scanty living; for this is what confronted him, and this was a trial more heart-sickening, more utterly discouraging, than the stress and strain of the march, bivouac, skirmish, and battle.

Yet, somehow, in the midst of all this adversity the mass of the Confederate soldiers "found themselves." Their war service had toughened them. Though they found scanty rations at home on their return, they had often had scantier rations in the army. It was hard work to cultivate a neglected farm with old, worn-out implements, mules, and horses; but they had oftentimes in the Army made long marches, partly shoeless, scantily clad, and with empty haversacks.

Such men were not given to much repining. Slowly but surely, in one way or another, most of them went to work—many of them, too, who had never done any real work before. The problems of reconstruction came as an aftermath of the war, and proved in many cases as great a burden and drawback. The post-war burdens were, however, bravely carried by the old Confederate veterans until a new South gradually arose from the persistent efforts of the veterans and their sons and daughters, for they became reconciled to the fate of the Confederacy, and they began to realize that a greater future was in store for their country under the Stars and Stripes than ever before.

Senator BANKHEAD was among the first and foremost to enter upon the great work of restoring the South. While his occupation was that of a farmer, which he never forsook, he was gifted as a safe and sound legislator; and his people took occasion immediately on his return from the war to avail themselves of his service in the State legislature, where he served many years in both branches with great credit and ability. After an interval of a few years, in which he served the State in an administrative capacity, his people in 1886 sent him to Congress as a Member of the House, and there he remained till he came to the Senate in 1907. He became a prominent and leading Member of this body, and is an example of what a legislator can accomplish by devoting his attention to a few special subjects instead of seeking to cover the entire field of legislation.

While he was faithful in attending the sessions of the Senate and of the committees of which he was a member, there were two subjects that were ever near to his heart and to which he devoted special attention, namely, good roads and water-power development. As a farmer, he felt that one of the first needs of the farmer was a system of good roads; and being equally interested in the industrial development of the country he saw the necessity for legislation to develop and improve as rapidly as possible the many water powers scattered over the land. He was very active and persistent in securing the necessary legislation in these two fields, and while he was chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads his work for good roads was crowned with success. He secured a most liberal appropriation for a series of years for a far-reaching scheme of road construction throughout the several States of the Union. He contributed more than anyone else to the accomplishment of this beneficent result.

In the matter of the water-power legislation Senator BANKHEAD was equally persistent and energetic as a member of the Committee on Commerce, though he did not live to see the final passage of the water-power bill; yet the bill as finally passed was substantially the same bill which had been agreed upon by a conference committee of which he was chairman in the session immediately preceding the session in which the bill was passed. The report of the conference committee was adopted by the House, and would undoubtedly have been adopted by the Senate could it have been taken up before adjournment.

Many Senators have great speeches to their credit, but few, if any, have to their credit legislative measures of as great importance as these two important laws to the credit of Senator BANKHEAD. He was always earnest and sincere. He was slow to promise, but a promise made was never broken. He was never enamored with any legislative utopias. He was the best example of a safe and sound legislator that I have ever come in contact with in all my legislative career. He had the faculty of intuitively grasping in an instant, as it were, the bad and objectionable features of any proposed legislation, and if he came to the conclusion that it was dangerous or unwise he never hesitated to say so and to oppose it.

From the moment that the war was over, and Senator BANKHEAD returned to his home to take up under many drawbacks the duties of civil life, he became thoroughly loyal to the restored Union, and was ever zealous for its welfare and prosperity. While cherishing the memories of the war, and proud of the valor of the southern soldier, his activity was wholly in favor of the progress and prosperity of our reunited country. He was proud of the fact, and he had a right to be, that he had a son who was a prominent officer in our Army during the recent war. He had another son who followed in his father's footsteps and became a Member of the House in 1917, and is still a prominent Member of that body; and thus in these respects has this old Confederate veteran, who never quailed in war or adversity, been more blessed and more fortunate than some of us—fortunate and blessed because his heart and soul has been devoted since the days of the Civil War to the welfare, the prosperity, and the integrity of our common country, purified and strengthened through the crucible of war for all time to come.

During my service here I have been quite intimate with many of my colleagues; with none of them, however, so intimate and close as with Senator BANKHEAD. During the Civil War we had been enemies in arms, but here in the Senate, when we were together, it seemed as though we had been comrades rather than enemies in arms. The spirit of true soldierhood was upon us, and so it was not so easy to realize that we had been opponents in arms. As soldiers, each of us had aimed to do his whole duty; but when the war was over its asperities were laid aside, as were the weapons we had used. The Union survived the shock of war, but along with it will also survive the memory of the heroic valor of the soldiers who fought that war.

Senator BANKHEAD was the last survivor in this body of the veterans of the Confederate Army, and of the Union Army there are only two, advanced in years, who survive. While the Senator in his youth was a true sample of the old South, in his maturer and later years he was the living embodiment of the new South, with all its loyalty, vigor, and prosperity. He has been more fortunate than the patriarch Moses. He has not only been permitted to view the promised land of a reunited country, but he has also been permitted to enter it and enjoy all its blessings in full measure for more than half a century.

Dear Confederate veteran, accept this token from an old Union soldier.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as one who honored and loved Senator BANKHEAD, I should not want this occasion to pass without joining his colleagues here in testifying to his exemplary life, great personality, nobility of character, and the extraordinary length and value to his country of his public career.

I need not refer to the interesting biographical data already mentioned, but beginning with his service here we find a continuation of accomplishments which characterized his long and faithful public service.

In the Democratic primaries of 1906 he was nominated alternate Senator, and in June, 1907, he was appointed United States Senator by the governor to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. John T. Morgan, and in July, 1907, was elected to that office by the legislature. He was reelected by the legislature in January, 1911, for the full term beginning March 4, 1913. He was reelected November 5, 1918, for the full term beginning March 4, 1919. Although he had opposition in the primaries of 1918 he made this characteristic announcement June 24 of that year:

It is my purpose to remain in Washington during the campaign. I feel a pressing obligation to contribute, by my presence, every energy I possess to aid our President in the prosecution of the war to a victorious conclusion.

My son and grandsons, the sons and grandsons of my fellow citizens all over Alabama, are with the colors. I can help them best by staying at my place of duty. I could not help them by a political campaign in Alabama in my own interests.

I shall stay close to my duty here in this hour of national peril, let the results of my political fortune be what they may, and submit my candidacy with an abiding faith that the people of Alabama will not fail to protect the interests of a faithful public servant.

He did remain at his post and the people of Alabama did prove true.

In the Senate he gave special attention to the work of the Commerce Committee, of which he was a member, and the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, of which he became chairman.

Early recognizing the economy of water power he made the development of Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, one of the great and successful labors of his incomparable public service. And the farmers of the country will ever have cause to bless his memory for this work in behalf of the enrichment of their fields. By this development the need of agriculture for cheap and abundant fertilizer will be supplied.

The Bankhead Highway, the longest road in the world bearing one name, beginning in Washington, D. C., and ending at San Diego, Calif., is a just recognition by the public of the achievements wrought by JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD in behalf of good roads throughout the Nation. Until he pressed the matter of Federal aid to military and post roads, the people of the United States had believed that a constitutional inhibition precluded this assistance out of the National Treasury. His first efforts to prove otherwise were derided by his political opponents. In the face of criticism he went steadily on to his objective and secured an appropriation for experimentation and demonstration. Soon the Nation awoke to its opportunities and privileges and got behind the great leader on the subject. The last good roads legislation he secured carried an appropriation of $300,000,000, to be expended within the several States of the Union. In appreciation of this work for the good of mankind a grateful people have named the greatest transcontinental highway in his honor. Along this highway it is contemplated that double rows of trees will be planted in memory of the soldiers of the World War, and thus the Bankhead Highway becomes in a double sense a "Road of Remembrance."

Illustrative of his deep concern for the welfare of the people and the prosperity of the country and his resourcefulness in emergencies, may be cited his efforts and plans to relieve the deplorable conditions which confronted the cotton growers in the fall of 1914, when the price dropped far below the cost of production. A measure was introduced in the Senate requiring the Government to purchase 5,000,000 bales. It would have been a profitable transaction for the Government, but there were serious objections to the proposal, and Senator BANKHEAD urged a more feasible, more efficacious, and more statesmanlike plan, to wit, that the State issue three-year bonds and buy at 10 cents per pound one-half the cotton crop grown in the State. If his plan had been adopted the farmers of Alabama, for instance, would have saved $10,000,000, and the State would have had a profit of $25,000,000—enough to have paid the entire bonded and floating debt of the State, with enough over to have hard-surfaced the main public roads.

The Senate will recall that extraordinary and most impressive occurrence, June 5, 1917, when Senator BANKHEAD appeared in his gray uniform and submitted a motion which was unanimously agreed to, in these eloquent words:

Mr. President, in submitting the motion I intend to make I trust no Senator will feel that it is an imposition upon the time or the business of the Senate or that its purpose implies any motive of disloyalty to the flag of our country. On the contrary, it is intended as a tribute to the patriotism of the Confederate veteran and his son, who stand ready and willing to offer their lives and their means for the perpetuation of the Union which they so desperately and at such great sacrifice attempted to dissolve. I take the liberty of offering this motion since I am the only remaining Senator who served four full years as a Confederate soldier.

The local post of the Grand Army of the Republic and the civic organizations of the city of Washington have extended the Confederate veterans a most generous and pressing invitation to hold their twenty-seventh annual reunion in the Capital City of the Nation, and in the same generous and gracious spirit the invitation was accepted. Today the shattered remnants of the armies of Lee and Jackson, Johnston and Bragg, and of the navies of the Confederacy, who are physically and financially able, are in Washington and on Thursday will march with their sons down Pennsylvania Avenue in review before the President of the United States. Think, Senators, of the significance of a spectacle like this! A little more than half a century ago these same men in arms were hammering at the gates of Washington in an effort to sever their relations with the National Government. Thursday, marching with broken body and faltering step, on a mission of peace and love, not of hatred and bloodshed, but in a spirit of resolute reconciliation and absolute loyalty to our flag, they will voice in vibrant tones to all the world an indissoluble Union of the United States. I am grateful that God has spared me to see this day, when my old comrades in arms of the Confederacy are here in the Capital of that Nation which for four years they struggled desperately to destroy, but which none in all this great Republic are now more anxious to preserve.

For four years I marched and fought under the Stars and Bars. Five immediate members of my family are now enlisted under the Stars and Stripes, a son, two grandsons, and two nephews. They will even up our records.

Now, Mr. President, as a mark of honor and respect to the Confederate veterans assembled in reunion in the city of Washington, the Capital of the United States of America, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD further shows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, June 8, 1917, at 12 o'clock m.

I was proud to march that day, as one of the sons, in the grand parade that was the climax of the reunion, down Pennsylvania Avenue, behind the Confederate veteran in gray side by side with the Union veteran, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], in blue, their comradeship denoting to the cheering throngs the unity of the country.

The last of the Confederates in the United States Senate passed with the death of Capt. BANKHEAD, which occurred at his home in Washington, D. C., March 1, 1920.

Accompanied by his loved companion, with whom he had lived an ideal married life of 54 years, his children and grandchildren, his faithful secretaries, and a large delegation of Members of both Houses of Congress, his remains were taken to the State he had served so long and ably and buried amid the hills he had loved so ardently and among the people who had delighted to honor him in life and who mourned him in death. After the funeral at the Methodist Church in Jasper, Ala., the burial services were conducted by the Masons, of which he was past grand master.

We need him now in dealing with the serious governmental problems which confront us. To be deprived of his great aid in their wise solution means a material loss to the Nation.

Even tempered, self-controlled, gentle, and kind, always considerate of others, he made warm friends, whom he held in growing attachment.

Of commanding appearance, he was great in mind and in heart as well.

His practical common sense, sound judgment, sterling honesty, and noble purposes, combined with unusual intellectual gifts and high character to make him a true statesman and wise leader.

His patriotism was deep and strong and ran true through every fiber of his being.

He lived the wholesome life of the good citizen in full sympathy and close touch with his fellow men.

He recognized and illustrated the truth that the true road to preferment is the straight though hard road of personal effort, and the rule of that road is the clean, though harsh, rule of survival by merit.

He appreciated the value of the sailor's skill which enables him to go forward by the very winds that blow against him.

Day by day and hour by hour he made for himself while here the life in the spiritual world he now enjoys. In that place in the spiritual universe which only the mind and spirit may apprehend, the only test is character, and our departed friend lived a life here which assures us the final judgment admitted him to a freer, fuller, happier existence.

To-night as I sat at my window
While the West was all agleam
With that strange and wonderful splendor
That is fleeting as a dream,
I thought that the hands of angels
Had flung heaven's gateways wide,
And I caught some glimpse of the glory
From the hills on the other side.

Is it not a comforting fancy,
This sunset thought of mine,
That always the gates of heaven
Swing open at day's decline—
That those whose work is all ended
From our earthly woes and ills
May pass to the peace and gladness
That crown the beautiful hills?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, no one who knew Senator BANKHEAD can think of him or speak of him as we speak of him here to-day without a keen sense of personal loss, for he was one of those men, none too common, who always inspired affection in all who came in contact with him. As my thoughts turn to him many memories arise of days long dead, for we both began our life in Washington in the same Congress. For six years I was with him in the House, and all the memories of our acquaintance there and of my service with him are pleasant and smiling as they look at me out of the past. They are recollections I like to recall.

Then after those six years I came to the Senate. Senator BANKHEAD continued to serve in the House for 14 years longer, and then he also came to the Senate, where he remained until his death 12 years later. Here the acquaintanceship of the House ripened into friendship, and I became very much attached to him; something not very remarkable, for he was endowed as few men are with the happy gift of attaching people to him, all without effort or intention, for the power was innate and he could not help exercising it wherever he went and upon whomever he met. Rufus Choate once said that there are some men whom one hates with cause and others peremptorily, like Dr. Fell of the familiar rhyme. I think the reverse has also much truth in it. As we go on in the world we encounter very many of our fellow men, for the most part with indifference, but there are always some, fortunately for us not a few, whom we respect, admire, love, and esteem for good and easily explained reasons, and also others, by no means so numerous, who excite a feeling of affection at once, at the first contact and peremptorily, no cause or reason being either asked or required. The rare quality of these last was characteristic of Senator BANKHEAD. It is a gift which, like what we call personal charm, rather defies analysis, but no one who has felt it as we did with him ever denies the fact of its existence.

Many elements go to the making up of this power to inspire affection at the first sight, on no especial grounds or on no grounds at all. It is there. It holds us captive, and no more need be said. Yet there are qualities in the man so endowed which if not the cause of the ability to inspire affection go with it and are inseparable from it. Kindliness, gentleness, tolerance, and good sense; sympathetic ways, something again quite indefinable; a generous loyalty to friends which draws no lines of politics or party; an abundant sense of humor; and an atmosphere inviting trust and confidence which are never disappointed. We shall all, I believe, agree that in this enumeration I have been describing Senator BANKHEAD as we knew him, and if this be granted there is no cause for wonder at our fondness for him or at the grief we all felt when he ceased to live.

To make sure of the Congress, which we entered together, I glanced at the little biographical sketch of Senator BANKHEAD in the Directory. It was very brief, and I read it through in a moment. Four years a soldier in the Confederate Army and thrice wounded. A planter by occupation. Three times a representative in the General Assembly of Alabama, a year in the State senate, another in the lower branch; then 20 years in the House of Representatives and 12 years in the Senate. That is all. A dry, unadorned list of dates and offices, and yet as I reflected upon it I found much meaning in it, and the record of a fine and useful life shone very clearly through the commonplace words of the catalogue. A planter, it said, one who drew his living and sustained his family from the earth itself; one of that ancient calling which goes back to a dim past, when the men who settled down in one spot and tilled the soil lifted the whole race from the savagery of wandering tribes to the permanency of a fixed dwelling place, which is the first stage and the sure foundation of enduring and organized society. Through the steady effort of such men the landowner replaced the nomad. "A planter" meant also a freeholder, a position reached after years of struggle by the people of our western civilization, and the freeholder, thus established, has become the bulwark of society, for the men who own their own land can always be trusted to protect their land, and that means to guard their country.

Then comes four years of war, with its proof of high courage and readiness to sacrifice all for the cause the man holds dear. Then follows more than half a century of public service, always upward, and in due time attaining to the high places of public life. It was a most honorable and distinguished service, that of Senator BANKHEAD, never clamorous or self-advertised, but always as modest in appearance as it was diligent, valuable, and effective in reality. Two years before his death there was held here in Washington the twenty-seventh annual reunion of the Confederate Veterans, and Senator BANKHEAD made on this floor a motion that the Senate adjourn over the day of their parade. I imagine that all who were present must recall the scene when Senator BANKHEAD, dressed in a uniform of Confederate gray, simple, as always, without notice and without parade, arose and addressed the Senate in support of his motion. It was an occasion far more memorable than most of those which, widely heralded, carefully announced, and decked with all the forms of official ceremony, have in this Chamber drawn crowds of sight-seers and arrested public attention; the more memorable because it was a most significant expression of the union of a great people. Those words, the words that he then uttered, have been quoted already on this floor by two Senators. I have them here. Nothing I could say of him would be complete without them.

Senator BANKHEAD said:

To-day the shattered remnants of the armies of Lee and Jackson, Johnston and Bragg, and of the navies of the Confederacy, who are physically and financially able, are in Washington and on Thursday will march with their sons down Pennsylvania Avenue in review before the President of the United States. Think, Senators, of the significance of a spectacle like this! A little more than half a century ago these same men in arms were hammering at the gates of Washington in an effort to sever their relations with the National Government. Thursday, marching with broken body and faltering step, on a mission of peace and love, not of hatred and bloodshed, but in a spirit of resolute reconciliation and absolute loyalty to our flag, they will voice in vibrant tones to all the world an indissoluble Union of the United States. I am grateful that God has spared me to see this day, when my old comrades in arms of the Confederacy are here in the Capital of that Nation which for four years they struggled desperately to destroy, but which none in all this great Republic are now more anxious to preserve.

For four years I marched and fought under the Stars and Bars. Five immediate members of my family are now enlisted under the Stars and Stripes—a son, two grandsons, and two nephews. They will even up our records.

It seems to me that this was a very noble declaration. It came from the heart. It was instinct with love of country. It was American in the highest sense, generous, patriotic, brave, and truthful. To me it seems to be filled with a very beautiful spirit. It was a fitting conclusion and a crown above price to a long and well-spent life given to the service of his country. As Emerson said of another distinguished American so we may say of Senator BANKHEAD: "Yet the fullness of his respect for every man and his self-respect at the same time have their reward, and after sitting all these years on his plain wooden bench with eternal patience, Honor comes and sits down by him."

Such a man gives us faith in America and in the American people. What better service can anyone render to his country and his time? What greater reward can any man earn than to have all who know him feel a great gladness that he lived and a deep sorrow that he has gone from among them?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, occasions of this character are peculiarly trying and painful to me, where the subject of our obsequies was a very close and very dear friend of mine through all the years of manhood's real life.

I first heard of him the day I first met him as we took our first congressional oath of office at the opening of the Fiftieth Congress, in December, 1887.

That was a truly great House of Representatives, on whose membership he early impressed himself as a man of rare judgment and great sincerity of purpose and equal sincerity of speech. Modest, yet firm, and, if need be, aggressive in the right as he was given to see it. Unfaltering in his friendships, yet just in his judgments even where they were concerned. As brave as a lion, as tender as a woman, as true as a magnet, he stepped unassumingly into public life in his early manhood and by these striking characteristics maintained himself in the love and admiration of the people of his State until the final summons came to him, as it will soon come to us all.

The Fiftieth Congress and the two or three succeeding ones had, in my judgment, no superior in our legislative history, and I deem it a great honor and benefit to myself and to all those who served with the men of that day.

Dingley and Reed, of Maine; Carlisle and Breckenridge, of Kentucky; Culbertson and Mills, of Texas; Bland, Burns, Hatch, and Stone, of Missouri; Sunset Cox and Amos Cummings, of New York; Turner and Crisp, of Georgia; Cannon, Springer, and Payson, of Illinois; Holman and Shively, of Indiana; Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts, Julius C. Burroughs, of Michigan; McKinley, Grosvenor, and Butterworth, of Ohio; Pig Iron Kelly and Dalzell, of Pennsylvania; and as many more of as great if not equal ability, but possibly less renown, shed glory on that Congress in which our friend first served.

A hasty retrospect of the Senate reveals at once the names of Aldrich and Allison, Hoar and Sherman, Edmunds and Hale, Daniels of Virginia, Evarts of New York, George and Walthall of Mississippi, Ingalls and Plumb, Voorhees and Turpie, Vance, Vest, Morgan and Pugh, of Alabama, and Isham G. Harris of Tennessee. What a galaxy of brains and patriotism here faces us. Our dead friend JOHN H. BANKHEAD knew them all, and finally reached the Senate early enough to mingle with some of them.

Still purposeful, courageous, and undaunted he pursued his course undoubting and unafraid until in this body he succeeded in impressing on the country the necessity of aid by the General Government to good roads in the States, and the great impetus thus given promises shortly to so lessen the costs of transportation as to double the profits of all original producers without increasing the cost to the consumers. A great continental highway from ocean to ocean, now in course of construction, justly bears his name, and this monument to his vision, patriotism, perseverance and statesmanship will keep his memory fresh in the minds of grateful people, when all the great men I have mentioned will be known only to a few students of our history.

But it is not as Congressman or Senator or statesman that my memory cherishes him, but as JOHN BANKHEAD, the man and friend whom I loved. He was not demonstrative in his affections or other emotions, but calm, deep, and intensely sincere, in consequence of which he was loved most by those who knew him best. Slow to ask but quick to grant reasonable favors. Slow to anger, which was terrible when justly provoked, yet quick to forgive and forget unpremeditated injuries. Just in his judgment of men and their motives, hating injustice, cant, and hypocrisy with an intense hate wherever seen, yet looking with pitying leniency on the foibles and weaknesses of his fellows.

Possessing such character, it is no wonder that his friends so loved him and his State so honored him. He was the last Confederate soldier to serve in this body, and how like him it was to rarely speak and never boast of his long, brave service to the lost cause. He never regretted it, never apologized for it, never doubted that right was on the side for which he fought. After it was finished he was singularly free from the ruinous prejudices that always follow such catastrophes.

But I have no doubt that the sufferings through which the South passed in the long-drawn period of reconstruction intensified his love for his own State until it became a passion with him. This was not unnatural in a man like him.

How intense was this feeling for his native State of Alabama was revealed to me in private converse shortly before his death wherein he spoke so feelingly of Carmack's tribute to the South and expressed his thorough and complete accord with every sentiment uttered, and repeated almost verbatim that thrilling and tender burst of pathetic eloquence:

"The South is a land that has known sorrows; it is a land that has broken the ashen crust and moistened it with tears; a land scarred and riven by the plowshare of war and billowed with the graves of her dead, but a land of legend, a land of song, a land of hallowed and heroic memories. To that land every drop of my blood, every fiber of my being, every pulsation of my heart is consecrated forever. I was born of her womb, I was nurtured at her breast, and when my last hour shall come I pray God I may be pillowed on her bosom and rocked to sleep within her tender and encircling arms."

That prayer has been answered, and he sleeps well.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, one of my earliest memories of congressional life is that of Congressman JOHN H. BANKHEAD. His strong features and distinguished personal appearance made him a marked figure, even to the stranger. His bearing was dignified and confident, and before he spoke he was recognized as an unusual man, for even the first impressions of him were that his dignity was native and not of art, and his look of confidence was but the record of victories in combats with the shams and errors of life.

I soon came to know him personally and well, and during the remainder of my life, as I inventory the value of friendship, which is the greatest personal benefit which comes from congressional life, I shall put high estimate upon my memory of close friendship with Representative and Senator BANKHEAD. I learned that my first impressions were right and that the inner qualities of the man were more than faithful to their facial advertisements.

I have served in the National Congress nearly 18 years. I do not know how many different men have been my colleagues during that period, but their number has been several thousand. Practically all of them have been far above the average of men in character and ability, and yet even now I find it is comparatively few of them that I remember well. Indeed, it is true that only a few really close, warm friendships are formed in Congress. Respect is general, but that heart relation which is unaffected by creed or politics, by wealth or poverty, by social position or selfish desires, that something, which for lack of better name we call true friendship, is all too uncommon. It is, however, the rarest and most precious jewel of congressional service.

The friendship of Senator BANKHEAD was genuine. He knew no deception. He was a shrewd legislator and most successful in the causes for which he contended, but he never employed the arts and intrigues of hypocricy. His lips never said "I love you" when his heart was not in accord. He probably believed that the truth should not be spoken at all times, especially when it would produce unfruitful pain. But he never lied to accomplish an end. His word was frankly spoken and always passed at par among his colleagues.

Since I have been in the Senate, and until death separated him from it, he and I were members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Some of the time he was chairman of it. Some of the time I was chairman. All of the time we worked in closest harmony. When he was absent he authorized me to vote him on all matters, and in a similar manner I trusted him when I was away. I believe I knew him and, knowing him, I believed in him.

As a legislator he was well equipped with good judgment, rare insight, common sense, broad experience, and almost sublime courage. He was not spectacular, but he was honest and sound. I could, with profit to those who hear or read what I may say, recount his public achievements, but they have already been told by others more eloquently and in detail.

I like to think of him as a man without sham or pretense.

He was proud of his family, which he loved with all the affection and devotion of a true husband and father. If my memory is not defective, I think that his death is the first break in his own family ties. His large and distinguished family of children grew into useful manhood and beautiful womanhood. He saw and guided their growth and rejoiced in it, for every one was a credit and honor not only to the devoted father and mother but to the community and State in which they grew and lived. One of his beloved sons was an honored Member of the House of Representatives when the father died. Senator BANKHEAD felt that he had been unusually blessed. And so, indeed, he had been. Until he was stricken at last, sickness had been almost unknown to him and his loved ones. He and they lived in an all-pervading atmosphere of love and confidence. Such an atmosphere is conducive to health, happiness, and long life.

About the last time I saw him he told me that he was in his seventy-eighth year. A ripe old age. And yet we did not think he was old, and he could have passed for much younger. He asked for no handicap in the race with his colleagues. Until the very last he faithfully and efficiently performed his duties, and we shall miss him. His State lost a faithful representative here; his country, at a time when it needs strong men, has lost one of its best Senators. If, however, a long life's record of great usefulness is worth while, his family and the Senate should take hope and comfort.

Mr. President, the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who was also a colleague in the House and Senate of the late Senator BANKHEAD, is on the program to speak to-day. He is unavoidably absent. He has, however, sent his remarks to me and asked me to read them. If I may have the permission of the Senate, I will now proceed to do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the men who were the youth of 60 years ago may seem out of date to-day. They may not grasp our problems in the progressive way that many of us think they should be undertaken. Their sterling character and Spartan devotion to what they believe in, however, are an inspiration to those who admire sincerity of purpose and unswerving loyalty to honest conviction. These men of another generation grasped the fundamentals of life. They held to them and applied them to all the problems they met. The fundamental principles of human action are, after all, a pretty safe guide. They are as immutable as the stars, and the man who follows them will be right more often than he will be wrong.

It was my good fortune to enter Congress when it had among its membership many of these men. They were men of strong character, marked ability, uncompromising in their belief in the principles that control human action and unswerving in their devotion to what they thought to be the fundamental principles of their Government and the beliefs of the fathers of the Republic. Among these men was JOHN H. BANKHEAD. He was not the great debater that many of them were, but in all else he was the peer of any. While making no pretensions to oratory or debating skill, he expressed himself with rare concisiveness and clarity. He was frank and open in all he did. When he came to a conclusion upon a matter there was no doubt as to his position. He knew what he wanted and he sought to attain it by direct, open, fair, and honorable means. The rule of right was the sole guide to his acts. He had but little sympathy with many of the so-called progressive doctrines of to-day, simply because they did not to his mind square with the principles in which he firmly believed. He was another great and good man whom many called a "standpatter" and a "reactionary." He was a "standpatter" in the sense that he stood firmly by his convictions and tried to carry them out without swerving. He was a "reactionary" in the sense that he applied what he believed to be the tried principles of experience to the problems of to-day. In his judgment the principles which the fathers applied to their problems were sufficient to meet our problems if honestly and fearlessly followed and if properly adapted to changed conditions.

JOHN H. BANKHEAD may have been mistaken in his judgment, but he did that which he thought was right and for the best interests of his State and his country. The same courage that led him to fight bravely on the battle field for the cause he believed to be right led him to stand unflinchingly for his convictions in the battles of peace. While a strong partisan, he did not hesitate to go against his party when it took a position contrary to the principles that controlled his actions.

The legislative career of JOHN H. BANKHEAD was one of marked success. He did much for his State and country. He gave the most careful attention to every matter that was presented to him. He neglected no opportunity to serve his people. Their needs commanded all his energy and ability. The great problems of internal improvement and development had his special attention. He was an ardent and effective advocate of water transportation facilities, both domestic and foreign. Good roads had no more earnest or efficient champion than he, and he lived to see much of his hopes realized in this direction. Water-power legislation had been pending for many years. He fully appreciated its importance. It had his special attention, and everything that he could do to promote its passage he did. As chairman of a conference committee he did much to bring about an agreement on this legislation between the House and the Senate, but the report that was submitted was not adopted because of the close of Congress. The report which he had so much to do with securing was largely the basis of action of the succeeding Congress. He did not live to see this legislation passed. It is now on the statute books and to his close study and earnest efforts is largely due this great measure of a real, constructive character.

It is an inspiration to have known JOHN H. BANKHEAD, to have acted with him in the work of important legislation, and to have counted him my friend. I am glad to pay this feeble tribute to his memory. Words are empty symbols, but his acts and deeds are living, vital things to move us to higher and better living.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I received the news of Senator BANKHEAD'S death last spring with as much regret and heartfelt sorrow as I have ever experienced at the departure of a friend. As Members of the House and as Senators our legislative duties were along similar lines; the needs of his district and State and mine were somewhat the same; and our committee assignments for many years were identical. Like myself, he was a practical planter and loved the life of the farm. His vacations were always spent on his plantation overlooking the actual farm work and rusticating with old friends and admirers. In saying a few words in testimony of his high character and devoted public service, therefore, my thoughts are those of one who has seen in action the wonderful talent and unselfish industry which characterized the work of the deceased Senator.

JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD was born on his father's farm in Marion, now Lamar County, near the old town of Moscow, Ala., September 13, 1842. He was educated in the country schools of his native place, and at the outbreak of the War between the States cast his fortunes with the South. Young BANKHEAD enlisted as a private in the Sixteenth Alabama Infantry, served from the beginning until the end of the struggle, and was mustered out as a captain. During the Battle of Chickamauga—one of the important battles of the Confederacy—Capt. BANKHEAD was severely wounded but displayed unflinching courage and determination by crawling from the field carrying on his back a disabled comrade.

After the war Capt. BANKHEAD returned to his farm life. While a young man he was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives, then to the State senate, and later to Congress, serving in the National House of Representatives from 1887 to 1907, a period of 20 years. In 1907 he was appointed to the Senate to succeed Senator John T. Morgan and was subsequently elected by the legislature. He was twice reelected by the people of Alabama to a seat in this body and had served only a year of his last term when death overtook him.

As a fellow member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, to which I was appointed in 1901, my friendship with the late Senator developed. He was as deeply interested in improving navigation on the Warrior River as I was in the allied problems of transportation and flood control on the Mississippi, and there was always the most cordial cooperation between us in helping to solve these very difficult questions. This made a strong bond between us and brought me into the most friendly relations with the late Senator, whom I soon learned to admire and honor. He was not local or provincial in viewpoint and always took a broad national attitude in matters before Congress. The people of Alabama are greatly indebted to him for invaluable service in having the Warrior River made a navigable stream from the rich coal fields to Mobile Bay and for deepening Mobile Harbor. Alabama ought to be also truly grateful for his inestimable assistance in developing water power at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River. In the Senate we served on the Commerce Committee together, and as a Senator his interest in the waterway problems of the country never lessened.

Senator BANKHEAD was a pioneer in the good-roads movement; and the fact that the great transcontinental highway from this city to San Diego, Calif., was named in his honor testifies strongly to the incomparable service he rendered the Nation and the cause of adequate transportation for our country's products.

In my relations with the distinguished Alabamian one of his outstanding traits of character was his absolute justice to all. He was a sincere man, and his associates always knew where he stood. No mere persuasion nor glamor of personal or political expediency could swerve this soldier-statesman from the path of principle. Honesty, political courage, and a scrupulous regard for fairness were the mainsprings of his very nature. He never tried to deceive and was always frank and open in expressing his convictions. He had wonderful stability of character and inexorably followed the strict line of duty when it once became clear to him.

Senator BANKHEAD was a very amiable and courteous man, always kind and considerate with others. During my association of 20 years with him I never knew the Senator to use a harsh word or do an unkind act. He was always humane in dealing with his fellowman; in fact, he had a deep appreciation of human nature, and to this may be largely attributed his great success in life. Yet, withal, he was a firm man, and stood fast to his ideals of right.

The Senator was a most attentive Member of his body and one of its hardest workers. He was not a great orator, nor did he often address the Senate, but when he took the floor his speeches attracted close attention, as they always contained luminous facts in support of his arguments. His colleagues in the Senate regarded him as a sound, practical statesman, who had learned at first hand in the hard school of human experience to grapple with the problems of life and solve them, and no Member of this body was held in higher esteem. Even in his later years he seldom absented himself from the sessions of the Senate, and was at his post of duty when the final summons came.

The death of Senator BANKHEAD has left a niche in the public life of Alabama and the country difficult to fill. His name was associated with the wonderful progress and attainments of his native State, and his great personality and splendid example ought to be a guiding star for the youth of Alabama, aye, for every boy in America. His beloved State, whose people loved him in life, will forever revere his memory, and his many friends in the Senate will look back on their associations with this noble American with pleasure and pride. Personally, I have lost a good friend; his family, a devoted father; and the Nation an able and faithful public servant. My heart goes out to his family in their sorrow, and my hope is that remembrance of the Senator's splendid, upright character and remarkable achievements for State and Nation will in a measure help to assuage their grief.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, when I came to the United States Senate, nearly eight years ago, my acquaintance was largely confined to those Senators from the States that bordered on Tennessee, and coming from the same section, with the same common interest, traditions, and aspirations my closest association in this body was in the beginning usually with them.

What I have to say in regard to some of those great Senators is not to be understood as an invidious comparison with Senators from other States and other sections, nor those who now occupy seats from the States I have mentioned. I would say much of what I am about to say of them, both living and dead.

I speak only of the dead, of those who have answered their last roll call and now sleep in the soil of the great States whose people honored and trusted them to represent them in this great legislative body. They were Thomas S. Martin, of Virginia; Augustus O. Bacon, of Georgia; Joseph F. Johnson and JOHN H. BANKHEAD, of Alabama; James P. Clarke, of Arkansas; William J. Stone, of Missouri; and W. O. Bradley and Ollie M. James, of Kentucky—just one-half of the Senators representing those States in March, 1913. They all died in the discharge of the public duties confided to them by a loyal and trusting people and enjoying in the fullest measures the admiration and confidence of their constituencies.

They were with one exception men of a generation gone by, few of which survive them. They were of that sturdy and indomitable stock who conquered the American wilderness, established homes, churches, and schools and constructed our incomparable Government, and made America the greatest Nation of the world. They were men of different and varied types. There were among them planters, business men, soldiers, lawyers, jurists, and orators, and each and all of them excelled and were great in their particular avocations and professions, adorning and contributing to the success, honor, and glory of them. They were constructive statesmen, and their States, their common country, and their Government are all better for their example and honorable public services. They were manly men, men of courage, men who walked erect and looked the sun in the face without a tremor. They were men of convictions, with the courage and ability to defend and maintain them. They knew no masters and acknowledged no superior save their God. They were sun-crowned American citizens, the highest eulogy which can be conferred on any man. It is no wonder that I admired these splendid citizens and statesmen and delighted in their society and friendship.

Mr. President, recalling the character and services of these illustrious Senators causes emotions of sadness and regret that they are no longer here and that their places know them no more, but it is useful for us to do so. It is not only a solace and a stimulus, but it is an inspiration to those who follow them to emulate their great services, their rectitude of purpose, their patriotism, and their devotion to their people and to their country. This is all we can do, for—

> The good knights are dust,
> Their swords are rust, and
> Their souls with the saints, we trust.

Mr. President, we are met here to-day to commemorate the life, character, and public services and to do honor to the memory of one of this distinguished group of Senators, the peer of any of them, Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD.

I will not speak of his early days, nor attempt to give any biographical sketch of him, nor will I recount all the places of public trust that he held in his State and the Federal service. That has been done by other loving and admiring friends who knew him better and are proud of his friendship and association and of the honors he has conferred upon their great State. When I became a Member of the Senate, circumstances and common interest threw me much with him and I had ample opportunity to judge of his character as a man and his abilities as a Senator. I soon formed a high estimate of him in every respect, and the longer I knew him and the closer I got to him the greater was my admiration and respect and the stronger my affection for him. I would not undertake to recall the many kindnesses I received at his hands or the great assistance he gave me in the early days of my service here. I have no words to describe my affectionate regard for him and my deep and sincere sense of loss when he was gone. The loss of friends whom we loved and esteemed is something akin to the loss of those who are close to us by the ties of blood and family relations, which we feel a reluctance to speak of. They are sorrows of the innermost and most sacred emotions of the heart and soul and can not be fittingly described in words. They are too sacred to be confided to others.

Senator BANKHEAD was one of those men whom nature endowed and made superior in many things that go to make up a successful life and a leader of men. Success marked all his relations, associations, and efforts in life. He was fortunate and happy in his marriage and in the affection and assistance of an estimable and lovable wife, who survives him. He was happy in living to see his children emerge from childhood and youth and become valued members of society, and especially in seeing his sons, of whom he was justly proud, occupy prominent positions in the forefront of their professions, possessing the fullest confidence and admiration of their friends and fellow citizens. I have often thought there was no greater happiness that could come to a father and mother in their declining years, or which would enable them to meet the end, which all mortals must contemplate with more resignation and composure, than the realization of fond hopes of this character. He was happy in acquiring and holding through a long and sometimes tempestuous public career in which great problems were met and solved the love and confidence of the people of a great State. He had the consciousness of having discharged his duty in every trust confided to him faithfully, honestly, and with self-sacrificing devotion. This must have added much to the peace and tranquillity which seemed to possess him when his soul, without a struggle, passed away and entered into the great beyond.

He was strong physically, mentally, and morally, and his great courage, indomnitable determination to do what he believed was right gave him force and a power to accomplish with an unusual measure of success every undertaking to which he devoted himself.

Alabama has produced many strong, able, and patriotic men, and those whom Senator BANKHEAD came in contact with in his many civic and political struggles were no exception to the rule. A mere statement of the honors conferred upon him by the people of that State, and the high offices he was chosen to fill, conclusively establishes the assertion of his friends of his integrity, ability, and the faithful discharge of duty and of his right to be called a leader of men, for no man not possessing all of these qualities in an eminent degree could have won the victories that came to him or acquired and retained the confidence of the people of that great State.

He loved his State and his section and was proud and loyal to his country and his Government. When yet a youth, believing firmly in the righteousness of the cause of the South, he volunteered as private in the Confederate Army and made a brave soldier, serving throughout that great struggle, winning promotions to that of a captaincy for gallantry in action. And when that sacred cause was lost and the banner with the cross of St. Andrew was furled, furled in sadness and in defeat but without dishonor or the semblance thereof, he accepted the inevitable result and returned to his allegiance to the Union, and from then on the Stars and Stripes was his flag and the United States was his Government, and it never had a more loyal and devoted adherent.

Senator BANKHEAD was a firm believer in the Christian religion and held the church and all that it teaches and inculcates with that high respect which is the duty of all men and so necessary an element in the good citizen and the public servant. He never thrust his views of such matters upon others, but when occasion required in such remarks as he made upon the subject his firmness, sincerity, and faith were evident and unmistakable.

While a cordial and loyal friend when once that relation was established, he did not form friendships readily or without first coming to decisive conclusions as to the character and the worth of men. He estimated their merits or demerits with care and formed his conclusions with deliberation, but when he believed a man was worthy of his friendship his attachments were strong and his friendship loyal to the utmost degree. He had the confidence of his fellow Senators and they all respected him for his rugged integrity, his fairness and courtesy, and devotion to duty.

He was not a man of words, but rather of action. He was not an orator, but had a clear conception of what he wanted to say and present for the consideration of his audience, and he stated it concisely and in simple words with such clearness and force that those whom he addressed always understood him and were often convinced of the soundness of his views.

He did not speak often and addressed the Senate only when he had a purpose to accomplish. His fort and the secret of his success was his extraordinary common sense and the ability to apply it in a practical manner to the situation or the problem that confronted him. His judgment was as honest as it was sound. He had a grasp of business propositions and he brought his experience to bear on all legislation which affected the economic interest of the country.

His greatest services in the Senate were in the committee room, where, after all, the most effective work is done in the promotion and perfecting of wise legislation. The discussion of bills and policies in committees and the free exchange of opinions there bring out the merits or demerits of the measure in hand in a manner which can not be done in the open debate of the Senate. Those informal discussions call for a more complete knowledge of the subject in hand and more ability in presenting the merits of the measure and meeting the objections to it than the preparation and delivery of formal addresses in this Chamber. Were it not for the careful and laborious work of committees it is impossible to say how much unwise legislation would reach the statute books.

I am confident that earnest and devoted committee work is the best service that a Senator can render his people and his country. Senator BANKHEAD attended the meetings of his committees with great regularity and gave careful attention to all bills considered by them, and his views concerning them were always pertinent and valuable and aided much toward clearing up errors and perfecting legislation.

He was especially interested and gave great attention as a member of the Committee on Commerce to the development and improvement of the waterways of the country. His services to his own State along these lines were marked and valuable, but they extended to all the waterways of the Nation, for he was broad and liberal in his policies and efforts to develop the interest of the entire country. He was deeply interested in public highways and accomplished more in developing a national system of improved highways perhaps than any other man who has been in the Senate for many years. He took great interest in our Postal System and did much to improve its economical administration and efficiency. He was deeply interested in agriculture and educational matters, and did splendid work in promoting legislation for the advancement of their interest.

He had a great reverence for the Constitution of the fathers and opposed all insidious efforts to undermine and violate its beneficent provisions. While not a lawyer, he thoroughly understood the great and underlying principles of our Government, and he lived up to his conceptions of them, consistently and fearlessly. He believed that the National Government was created by the States and had no powers but those that the States had delegated to it but, in the exercise of these powers, it was absolute. He believed that the Federal Government should be confined to the powers so expressly vested and those necessarily implied for their full and efficient exercise, but he at all times upheld the reserved rights and powers of the States and firmly resisted all encroachments upon them, believing in the sovereignty of the States in all local matters. He firmly believed and had faith in the great fundamental policies of his party and was ever ready to defend and maintain them. He never followed false gods or wild and impracticable heresies which have from time to time disturbed and afflicted our country, regardless of the temporary advantage which they seem to give, or the attractiveness or special benefits to be derived from them, and had an unutterable contempt for the timeserver and the opportunist. May we have more men of his courage, faith, and firmness—

> Those who would bend the bow of JOHN H. BANKHEAD > Must gird their loins for unusual strength, and > Look aloft for faith and inspiration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, these splendid eulogies to this splendid man make us all feel, as we are, in the presence of a hallowed spirit. No finer tributes have ever been paid to a deceased Member of the Senate, and none have been more deserved.

It is always difficult to speak of a dead friend. When I first entered the Senate I was one of its youngest Members; Senator BANKHEAD one of its oldest. He was one of the Members to whom I was attracted. Of course, I had known of his public services. I felt for him almost the affection of a son for a father. He was my friend; I was his. We did not always agree, but differences of opinion did not lessen my ardent admiration for his fine qualities. He was big of body, big of heart, big of mind. He was always well poised. He never flew off at a tangent. He did not depend upon the judgment of others when deciding what to say or how to vote. He was his own master.

In this day and generation there is so little of charity for those who entertain different opinions that it is sometimes hard to get a just estimate of one's moral or mental makeup. To illustrate, some men affect to believe that anyone who adheres to the firmly established principles of democracy is a conservative if not a reactionary. Others do not hesitate to assert that anyone who looks forward to the further development of fundamental principles is a radical. Both are wrong. If I may assume to characterize our late friend, I would say of him that he was progressive without being radical and conservative without being reactionary. He was never ready to reject the established principles of our Government simply because they were old, or to accept as true strange doctrines simply because they were new. His feet were always on the ground; his head never above the clouds.

What a splendid heritage he has left to his family, his friends, his State, and his country. His life of almost fourscore years was full of activity and service. He was the last of the distinguished Confederate soldiers to serve in the Senate. He cast his lot with his State during the Civil War, but when the war was over and the States were reunited no one dared question his loyalty to the Stars and Stripes. Thrice was he wounded while in the Confederate service.

His people loved to honor him. He represented Marion County in the general assembly of the State during the sessions of 1865, 1866, and 1867. He was a member of the State senate in 1876 and 1877. He was elected to the House of Representatives during the Fiftieth Congress and reelected 10 successive times. His service in the United States Senate began in 1907 and continued uninterrupted until the day of his death. During all of this time he was one of the real Congressmen and one of the real Senators who always "the path of duty trod." It is no small compliment to be elected by a constituency to the House of Representatives for 10 consecutive times, and then to be transferred to the United States Senate and reelected for three consecutive times. Such honors come to but few men; and no man can receive them who is not indeed worthy.

The path to public favor is not a royal road. No man can enter it and maintain himself who bends to every breeze that blows. No matter what his views may have been, whether we agreed with them or not, we had to respect them as the views of the honest public servant. He served his immediate constituency well, but he served the whole country none the less. His services were not sectional, they were Nation wide.

He sought to serve his people, but he never surrendered his conscientious convictions. His conclusions were not reached by putting his ear to the ground to ascertain how many votes he would win or lose by a given course; they were the result of investigation and of reflection.

Senator BANKHEAD always had the courage of his convictions. He thought what he said and said what he thought, and by this manly course won and kept the confidence of his constituents and of his fellow citizens, whether North or South, East or West.

Others have spoken more in detail of his splendid service in the Senate. I shall not attempt to repeat it. He was not given to much speaking, but when he did speak it was out of the fullness of his heart, and with his thoughts fully matured. Much of our best legislation is in part his handiwork.

His death is a distinct loss to this Chamber, to his State, and to the Nation. Peace to his ashes!

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, on March 1, 1920, JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD, citizen, soldier, patriot, and friend, and an honored Member of this body, knocked gently upon the door that leads into that mysterious realm beyond, and entered. The soul of Alabama's distinguished son had taken its flight from the mortal highway of life to the celestial highway leading to "the undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns."

Though serving in both Houses of Congress for many years with honor and distinction, it is not of such service that I desire to speak to-day in the time allotted to me as much as it is to recall the many pleasing incidents that came to my knowledge concerning the life and character of Senator BANKHEAD and to touch upon a few of the special features which attracted me to him as we together passed along the highway of life. I shall therefore leave the record in Congress, or at least much of it, for others to dwell upon. I may say that his record has been made up and the book of life sealed until eternity.

It was in 1893 that I first met the late Senator from Alabama, at which time he was serving as a Member of the House, and it is with great pleasure that I may truthfully say that during all of these years our relations have been pleasant and cordial.

I will therefore not attempt to follow the entire congressional career of our late colleague, for that would be useless. What he strived for and what he accomplished in both Houses of Congress need but little exploitation at the hands of those who knew him and of his public and private record.

Born in the South and of the South in all that the word implies, Senator BANKHEAD, while believing firmly in the principles of the Government of the United States, answered the call to arms when his section went to war. He shouldered his musket, a young boy, and marched to the front, ready with the call of the early morning reveille to fight for his beloved Confederacy. And I may say, there was none stronger in his convictions, braver or more courageous or daring in the face of a hostile enemy, or more loyal to the South and all its traditions than he. During the years from 1861 to 1865 he was found always at the front and never in the rear. That was his position on every question that confronted him in life—leading the fight for what he thought was right.

I came to this body as a new Member in 1918, but even before this I had found that throughout the whole country there was deep interest in the Bankhead Highway, a magnificent roadway that would connect the great city of Washington with the smaller cities and towns of the South and West, as far as San Diego, Calif., the plan of such highway being the product of the Alabamian's brain. He saw into the future and realized that better roads mean quicker transportation, saving of loss of time in transit, larger loads of various commodities going from one section to another, and the use of the autotruck to supplant the slow-moving farm horse or mule, meaning, in a word, an enlightened movement in favor of production, transportation, and selling problems of farm produce. There is also the greater problem of quicker transportation between town and country home, linking the two in many material ways. Senator BANKHEAD conceived wisely when he began the great work of planning and seeing the construction of this great highway, and in the years to come it will be a monument to his great genius.

Let me say that when I came to Washington to take my seat as a Member of this body I traveled with my family from my home in South Carolina in an automobile along this very Bankhead Highway, and as I left mile after mile behind me I realized more and more what this great undertaking would mean in the years to come.

As a Member on this side of the Senate Chamber with Senator BANKHEAD and as a fellow member of the Committee on Post Offices, it was my pleasure to come in frequent contact with him and to watch the workings of his head and heart. I saw his work from day to day, and I saw him stand firm always for justice and right. Though of a quiet nature, speaking but seldom on the floor of this Chamber, and then not in the fashion of the forensic orator to catch the plaudits of the listening crowd, but in an earnest, sincere way, he was firm in his convictions when convinced that his proper line of action lay along a certain definite course.

I served with Senator BANKHEAD from the date of my entrance in this body until the time of his death, and there was none who more genuinely and sincerely felt the great loss at his taking away as I.

In all the years that I had the privilege of enjoying the friendship of the Alabama Senator I found him to be a man in every way. Indeed—

> He was a man, take him for all in all,
> I shall not look upon his like again.

I wish to say a word concerning the South Carolina connections of the late Senator.

Mrs. Bankhead, his good wife, was a South Carolinian, her maiden name being Brockman, from Spartanburg County, the county next adjoining the one in which I live. She was closely related to many of the best people in that section. Among those of close kinship were the Moores, the Andersons, and others—all people of the very best standing in Spartanburg County. They are the pioneers in old Nazareth Presbyterian Church, a landmark for all that is good in religious life in that section of the county.

In addition to this the father of the late Senator, James Greer Bankhead, was a native of the old Union, S. C., district, settling at that place in 1818 and residing there until his death in 1861. Mrs. Susan Hollis, mother of the late Senator, was also born in the Darlington district of South Carolina, moving from that section with her parents to Alabama in 1822. These people have always been the leaders in all that is good and true and have led in the religious life and moral upbuilding in that part of South Carolina. I may say that the Moores, the Andersons, the Clevelands, the Barrys, and others of the Nazareth Church section of Spartanburg County are leaving a generation which is in every way maintaining the high standard set by those who have already traveled the roadway of life and now sleep. Mrs. Bankhead was of these.

There was also another strong tie linking me to the Alabama Senator and which brought South Carolina and Alabama close together. The Hon. W. H. Perry, for many years a Representative in the House from my State and district, married one of Senator BANKHEAD's daughters, his father having been governor of South Carolina some years ago.

When the earthly work of our late colleague was done I had the honor of being made a member of the Senate party which attended his funeral in the little town of Jasper, Ala. I well remember the large and sympathetic crowd which had gathered from every part of the State to pay their last respects to their friend and statesman. The torrential rains which occurred at that time caused the funeral to be postponed. This gave me the opportunity of observing the beautiful floral tributes which had been brought to the church, and also the church itself, and I may say of the latter that I was surprised that so small a town could have so large and costly a structure, but it was typical of the deep religious sentiment which prevails in that section. These floral offerings attested in the most sympathetic manner the deep affection in which our late colleague was held by all alike. Those who attended the funeral were from every walk, including high State and Federal officials, farmers, business men, and others, all alike testifying by their presence their deep affection for their departed friend.

The funeral services were conducted by a lifelong friend of Senator BANKHEAD—Rev. James T. Morris, of the Methodist Church. Both he and the Senator were Confederate soldiers, and the venerable pastor spoke most feelingly of the long, cordial, and close relationship which had existed between them.

I remember also that about two years ago I was visiting in Montgomery, Ala., and was most hospitably shown over the capitol building in that city by a son-in-law of the late Senator, Mr. Thomas M. Owen, who was the costodian of archives and history, and who held a position of great respect, admiration, and honor among his home people. I was greatly interested in the many interesting things he showed me, and I shall always deeply appreciate his courtesy. Since that time I understand he, too, has passed over the river of life, and that his good wife has succeeded him in his work. It will thus be seen that Senator BANKHEAD in all of his connections and relations stood well to the front in everything that was worth while.

In conclusion I wish to say that Senator BANKHEAD, while holding strongly to his own views and opinions, was broad-minded and tolerant of the opinions of others. He loved peace above everything. He was willing to fight, and did fight when it was necessary, but was a firm believer in the pursuit of peaceful methods and kindly acts as opposed to open warfare. This kindly and big-hearted friend has left us.

He went, "not like the quarry slave, at night, scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust, approached his grave like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

And here I wish to say that just as our late friend and colleague planned a mortal highway—a highway upon which human feet might tread—there was likewise planned for him another highway over which he has now passed into that everlasting spirit world of the unknowable beyond.

After a life full of good works, a life full of love and kindness for family and friends, of justice and equity to his fellow man, and a divine reverence for God, tired with the burdens of life, but still ready to carry his burdens, God touched him and he slept.

Finally, we are reminded that—

> The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
> And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
> Await alike the inevitable hour—
> The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, Senator BANKHEAD and I were warm friends for more than 30 years—ever since I was a boy. I was in college with two of his sons and learned to know him well then, and he always treated me as if I was one of his boys, and frequently spoke of me in that affectionate way. When I came to the House he was one of the first to congratulate me, and was my friend and adviser while there. Later on, when I became a candidate for the Senate, in many ways he again demonstrated his friendship for me. After I was elected to this body he requested that I serve on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, of which he was chairman, and throughout the long years of our friendship, many of them close and intimate, I do not recall that there was ever a difference between us. He was at all times a safe adviser, and I turned to him often. As a friend he never hesitated or halted. He was ever ready to stand up four square. My association with him I shall never forget. His many acts of kindness toward me will ever live in my memory. It is a pity that a man like he was should have to die.

One of the most beautiful attributes of his character was shown in his home life. I do not know that I ever knew a man who adored his family as did Senator BANKHEAD. His high-minded and delightful wife, his attractive daughters, his splendid boys, and his lovely grandchildren, each and every one of them, were objects of almost his worship, and they adored him in the same way. It was an inspiration to visit in his home. His pride, while always modestly expressed, about his boys, all of whom have been wonderfully successful, literally knew no bounds.

In the War between the States Senator BANKHEAD entered into the Confederate service as a boy, and took an honorable, a courageous, and a conspicuous part, and came out a captain. When the war was over he accepted defeat like the man he was and gave unlimited allegiance and devotion to the flag of our common country. He never wavered in that devotion. He was at all times the highest and best type of the American citizen.

In politics, Senator BANKHEAD was almost without exception successful. He was successful because he deserved success. He was successful because he was a fighter. He was successful because he was a man of the highest principles, because there was nothing little or mean about him. He was a man of big body, big heart, big brain, and big soul. In his earlier days especially he was a campaigner of great ability. He was an excellent speaker and most diplomatic and engaging. He knew human nature as did few men. I recall an incident in one of his campaigns for Congress. In one of the counties of his district lived a very excellent and well-to-do farmer who was quite powerful in politics. For some reason this farmer was very much opposed to the nomination of Senator BANKHEAD, and Senator BANKHEAD tried in every way he could to reach him, but without effect. One hot day in June he was riding by this farmer's home, and he saw the farmer plowing out in the field, so he got out of his buggy and went to the end of the row and waited for the farmer to get back. When he did so, Senator BANKHEAD told him he wanted to talk to him about politics. The old farmer was testy and said he did not want to hear anything about politics. He said he did not have time to talk, that he wanted to plow that cotton. Senator BANKHEAD said, "Hand me that plow." He took the plow and the reins, turned the mule around and started to sweep up the cotton, saying to the old farmer, "Now, you walk along the middle of the row with me and let me explain this matter to you, while I plow." The farmer walked with him about two rows and said, "All right, any politician that can plow cotton like you can have my vote," and he voted for and supported him as long as he lived.

So far as I know the only time he was ever defeated in any political contest was when he was defeated for Congress in 1906, after 20 years of splendid service in the House. Later on in the same year he was nominated as an alternate Senator from Alabama, and in June, 1907, was appointed Senator by reason of his majority vote in the primary for alternate Senator, so that his defeat for the House resulted happily in his coming to the Senate. This method of selecting Senators was quite unusual, and the only time I have ever known of its being employed. The facts were that Senators Morgan and Pettus, of Alabama, were very old men, and the State Democratic executive committee concluded that as either one of these Senators might suddenly die, it would be wise to let the people in a primary select their successors while they were yet alive.

An interesting thing happened between Senator BANKHEAD and myself in reference to this race for alternate Senator. In the spring of 1906 I was passing through Birmingham on my way to attend the commencement exercises of the University of Alabama. I happened to meet Senator BANKHEAD at the Morris Hotel. Only a short time before he had been defeated for Congress. I had read in the newspapers about the primary for alternate Senators, and I urged Senator BANKHEAD to make the race. He expressed great doubt about his ability to win. He seemed to think that because he had been defeated for Congress he did not have much show for an alternate senatorship. I told him that I believed the fact that he had been defeated, taken in connection with his record in Congress, would make the people of Alabama feel all the more kindly toward him. He went on down to the university commencement with me and while there held a meeting of his friends and announced his candidacy and won by a majority over all. He often afterwards told me that I had decided him to run.

Counting his service in both Houses Senator BANKHEAD was in Congress more than 32 years. His record in both Houses was one of great service to his State and to the Nation. He did more for the waterways of Alabama and those of the rest of the country, perhaps, than any other man. It was his service on the Rivers and Harbors Committee that gave him his first national fame. His work on water-power legislation added to that fame. In the Senate his great work was on the passage of laws giving Federal aid to road building. As chairman of the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee he did more than any other one man to bring about the passage of the laws that we now have on the statute books by which the National Government is cooperating with the various States to build up a splendid system of roads throughout the country. One of these great highways bears his name. As chairman of the Post Office Committee he was always fair and just, a stickler for the rights of the Government, and yet always liberal, and even generous, to the employees in the service. He took great pride in the Postal Service, and its remarkable growth in the last few years was in a great measure due to his careful supervision and to the excellent legislation that he fathered.

Mr. President, we all, I am sure, recall with the keenest pleasure his many delightful personal and social qualities. He had few enemies, none in this body, I believe. His friends were legion. He was courteous and fair and just to all, a man of great poise of character, with high ideals, honorable ambitions, fixed purposes, and as kind a heart as ever beat in a human being. He was an honor to his State and the Nation. In his life I honored and respected him, esteemed and loved him. In his death I felt, and still feel, the keenest sense of personal loss.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the touching and tender words of commendation and praise by those who have served long with him in this body constitute the best proof of Senator BANKHEAD's high standing and popularity with his colleagues.

My colleague, Senator UNDERWOOD, in his speech has presented the important facts and events in the public career of Senator BANKHEAD, and I shall not undertake to repeat or discuss them in detail.

Every man who conquers his surroundings and rises superior to the forces that oppose him is not only a helpful example to the struggling youths of the country, but he is entitled to a prominent place on the scroll of those who achieve success, for after all only those who merit success should have their names listed in the catalogue of the great. Circumstances and peculiar conditions seem at times to thrust some men into the forefront of financial success or political prominence and power, and it frequently happens that we are unable to understand just why such a one was so favored by fortune. But, Mr. President, the man whose memory we honor to-day does not belong to that class.

In the field of stubborn conflict he earned every honor that came to him. He was in the true meaning of the term "a self-made man." I have always felt that that term was intended to tell the story of one who had known hardships and privations—one who had battled with adverse conditions and in spite of them had achieved success.

Senator BANKHEAD as a boy was one of these. In 1860, when the War between the States arrayed the people of the North and the people of the South on opposing sides, JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD took his place as a private in the ranks of the Confederate Army. He was three times wounded in battle. He participated in the settlement of the gravest and most momentous question that ever affected the national life of the country. In that conflict the indisputable status of the Union was finally and forever fixed. He lived to see the mingled blood of brothers North and South cement the sections in the bonds of an everlasting union. When the war was over he, like all of his surviving comrades, accepted in good faith the settlement of the sword, and from that time on to the day of his death he contributed to the upbuilding, advancement, and perpetuity of the American Union. At the end of the war he returned to his State and devoted himself bravely to the task of aiding and encouraging his people in restoring stable government under control of the white men of Alabama.

Mr. President, Senator BANKHEAD believed in the gospel of work and was himself an indefatigable worker. He entered the field of politics when a very young man. He was well trained for service in the Senate of the United States when selected by the people of Alabama to represent them in this body. He had served in both branches of the Alabama Legislature and before his election to a seat in this Chamber had been honored and in return had honored his constituents with 20 years of faithful service in the lower House of Congress. In his long journey up the road of years he was in a hand's reach of the seventy-ninth mile post when the death angel called him away. It must have been comforting to him to feel as he was passing off the stage of action that the record he had left behind was one of valuable service to his country.

In view of what has been said by those who have preceded me, I shall refer to only two great measures with which he was so intimately and signally associated. He was the prime mover in the matter of arousing the American people to the importance and necessity of entering upon a program of general road building in the United States, and he richly deserved the title of "father of the good-roads plan of America."

Mr. President, his achievement in opening the Warrior River to navigation and his constructive work on rivers and harbors in the State have linked his name for all time with waterway improvement in Alabama. His great achievements were due to his untiring energy, his great ability, and large experience, acquired through more than 30 years of legislative activities in the two branches of Congress.

Mr. President, Senator BANKHEAD left behind him a record of constructive work and practical achievement rarely equaled by any public servant of his day. All in all he was a remarkable character and had become an important and powerful factor in the affairs of his State and Nation. When the sad news of his death reached the people of Alabama there was sadness in every household, and when the beautiful casket that bore his mortal remains back to his home in Alabama arrived at Jasper people from all over the State had already assembled there to pay to him they esteemed so highly the tribute of their love. The floral offerings, which were exquisitely beautiful, of large variety, and in great abundance, were tender tokens and testimonials of a fond people's sorrow and love.

Mr. President, Senator BANKHEAD was a Christian patriot and he was a wise and useful statesman. He was a tender and devoted husband, a fond and affectionate father. When he succeeded Senator Morgan in this body, in speaking of the deceased Senator's home life he gave a splendid description of himself when he said: "Senator Morgan's affectionate solicitude for the happiness of his household was beautiful in its tenderness."

Mr. President, his devoted, bright, cheerful, and lovely wife was the queen of his heart and home. She was the inspiriting power and good angel that supported him through all the trials and vicissitudes of his long and useful career.

In the death of Senator BANKHEAD Alabama has lost one of her most distinguished and best-beloved citizens and the State and Nation have lost a big, brave, able, and faithful representative in the Senate of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions submitted by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] at the beginning of these exercises are unanimously adopted.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 10, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 9, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, possess us, we beseech Thee, with Thy spirit to guide us through whatever entangling alliances may arise in this new-born day, that we may quit ourselves like men charged with great responsibilities and prove ourselves worthy of Thy love and Fatherly care in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPECIAL ORDER—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. By special order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that no quorum is present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-seven Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is entitled to one hour in which to address the House.

THE JAPANESE PROBLEM FROM A HISTORICAL VIEWPOINT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask respectfully that I be allowed to conclude my remarks before answering any questions. The subject that I have chosen for my remarks is a very important one, in my opinion, and I would like to explain the situation from the American viewpoint as a Representative of the State of California, and I feel confident that if I be allowed to conclude my remarks without interruption I shall be better able to answer questions that my colleagues in the House may desire to ask.

Less than 70 years ago Commodore M. C. Perry, under instructions from President Millard Fillmore, made a treaty with the Shogun of Japan, opening some of the ports of that Empire to American ships. Since then Dai Nippon has had a marvelous history. No one who has kept track of the progress of events connected with Japanese affairs can fail to realize what a wonderful people the Nipponese are. To look upon them as inferior to the white man is rightly considered an insult to their civilization, to their intelligence, to their pride by all classes in the Empire.

Unfortunately, many public officials in Japan, as well as their political agitators and demagogues, have tried to make the world believe that the opposition to the entrance of Japanese laborers into the United States mainland is based upon racial prejudice. We of the Pacific coast deny that this is the case. No objection has ever been made to the admission into this country of Japanese professional men, of Japanese financiers, or Japanese religious teachers or leaders, or bona fide Japanese merchants, or Japanese students, or Japanese travelers. If there were racial hatred behind the movement for the exclusion of Japanese laborers, objection would also be made to the classes I have just named. However, the sole objection is to the laboring class. Whether the undesirables be farm laborers, skilled mechanics, or unskilled coolies, I contend that the objection is purely an economic one. In closing our doors to these laborers we simply follow in the footsteps of Japan herself. It is a well-known fact that no Chinese or Korean laborer is allowed to enter any Japanese territory, for the reason that the laborers of China and Korea work for a smaller wage than the Japanese laborers. This is not generally known in the United States, and I deem it my duty, as a Representative from the State of California, to advise all of my countrymen regarding the true condition of affairs as to the immigration question which has caused, and is now causing, so much newspaper controversy according to published accounts in our American press concerning the attitude of so many publicists, politicians, political agitators, and public officials in the Empire of Japan. Yes, my colleagues, Japan herself is doing to the laborers of China and Korea what she claims is racial hate or prejudice when done by us to Japanese laborers.

Another source of irritation is the so-called alien land question. As a matter of fact, Congress itself many years ago passed a law forbidding aliens to own or acquire land in the District of Columbia, which is the very seat of our Federal Government. Many of our States have adopted similar laws. Japan herself does not allow an alien to own an inch of land in Japan. In 1910, however, the Imperial Diet, or Parliament, of the Empire passed a law removing the restrictions. But the lawmaking body affixed a condition to the effect that the Emperor was to promulgate the law after having prepared and proclaimed certain rules, regulations, and conditions under which the realty could be transferred by deed to a foreigner. In other words, the law was not to go into effect until the Mikado had acted affirmatively in the premises. That was nearly 11 years ago, but to this very day the Emperor has not seen fit to put the law into effect—and no alien to-day is allowed to acquire an inch of land in the Japanese Empire.

I believe all teachers, students, and professors of international law agree that every nation has the absolute right to regulate as it deems best all immigration into its borders and also the possession of any realty within its area. [Applause.] Undoubtedly the students and professors of international law in Japan are thoroughly familiar with the numerous decisions upon these points. It is therefore most unfortunate that a constant agitation regarding these matters is maintained by our neighbor across the Pacific; because the final effect of such propaganda and agitation undoubtedly is to instill a pronounced hatred of America and Americans among the masses in Japan. This is a decidedly unfortunate condition of affairs. Indeed, I say it is a most serious condition—a condition that may result, unfortunately, in grave difficulties between the two heretofore friendly nations.

True, Japan contends that her law is aimed at all foreigners, whereas the laws adopted by the State of California refer only to those foreigners who are prohibited by the laws of the United States from securing the privilege of citizenship in this country.

The student of history will find that Japanese immigration to California and the Pacific coast really did not begin until 1891 or 1892. The number of Japanese who had gone to the west coast of America up to that time was so few that they might be referred to as a negligible quantity. At that time a great deal of foreign money had been invested in California in the purchase of mines and mining properties; foreigners had purchased large tracts of land known as ranches for the breeding of cattle and horses and the raising of wheat, fruit, and purposes of similar character. The land question had not become acute in any way because of these investments. The population of California at that period was less than half what it is to-day. The matter was given little attention by the legislature of the State until comparatively recent times. The fact that the laws recently enacted were applied to foreigners who can not become citizens of the United States is dwelt upon with especial emphasis by the people of Japan as an indication of racial hatred of the Japanese in California. The matter, however, is practically in the same category as the question of immigration and settlement. I shall later refer to the attitude taken by Secretary Gresham in negotiating with the Japanese Government on those matters in connection with the treaty of 1894, when Japan, after having insisted on free immigration and settlement for her citizens to and on the mainland of the United States, withdrew her claims and accepted the American position on that proposition. In my opinion, the same rule that was applied to immigration applies equally to the ownership of land under international law and custom.

When we consider the history of the island Empire since 1853, the time of Perry's visit, the students of world events realize how frequently mischief has been done in Japan by unrestricted agitation and seemingly inspired propaganda.

Soon after the Shogun had concluded his treaty with Perry the other nations of the world sought to make similar treaties. These were finally negotiated and entered into by the officials of Japan. Under the terms of these treaties the right of extraterritoriality was accorded each country that entered into a compact. In other words, if the citizen of the country with which the treaty had been negotiated committed any offense against a citizen of Japan or against Japanese law, he was tried not in a Japanese court but in a consular court of the country of which he was a citizen. The Japanese people—proud, patriotic, and sensitive—justly regarded this right of extraterritoriality as a reflection upon the integrity, the honesty, and the ability of the judges and the courts of Japan. Most of these treaties had been negotiated in the period preceding 1871. From that time forward, however, there was a determined agitation in Japan to have the treaties with the occidental nations modified. I am happy to state that as early as 1884 our Government, the Government of the United States of America, announced its readiness to accept the change suggested by the Japanese foreign office. We were probably the first nation to meet the wishes of the Government of Japan in that respect. However, all the maritime nations did not view the matter as did our own Government. The agitation for the change persisted in Japan. In 1889 Count Okuma, who at that time was the Japanese foreign minister, finding that all European nations would not accept the demands of the Japanese people on the question of extraterritoriality, accepted a compromise, under whose terms the consular officer of the Government of which the foreigner was a citizen was to sit on the bench with the Japanese judge trying the case; and the two officers—that is, the Japanese judge and the consul of the foreign country—were to hear the matter jointly and decide according to the evidence produced at the trial. When this compromise plan was announced the Japanese press and public denounced it in bitter and acrimonious terms. The foreign minister became the target for a torrent of violent abuse. The upshot of the matter was that when Okuma came out of the building where the cabinet officers met he was confronted and greeted by an antagonistic mob, one of whom threw a bomb at him with the undoubted intention of assassinating the minister. The missile struck him on his right leg. The leg was completely shattered and had to be amputated. So this brilliant Japanese statesman and scholar became a victim of the very forces which, according to present-day newspapers, are being stirred up by the agitators, demagogues, and reckless politicians of Japan to an intense feeling of animosity against the people of the United States on account of the attitude of California on the immigration and land questions.

Count Okuma, be it remembered, at the present time is one of their foremost statesmen. He is one of their ablest leaders. He is also the president of the Japanese Peace Society. One would hardly expect, therefore, to find that a man of his wonderful ability and the head of the association of peace-loving Japanese threatening that if the Government of the United States should dare to restrict Japanese immigration to the mainland of our country by statute law instead of arranging for such restriction by the voluntary action of Japan, the latter rather than "suffer such prejudice to her prestige must resort to force." Surely, the head of the Peace Society of Japan could not have been correctly quoted in the newspaper publications which reported him as favoring, under certain circumstances, "resort to force." Surely, the head of the Peace Society of Japan does not advocate the taking up of arms against the United States as indicated in the newspaper articles. Surely, the head of the Peace Society of Japan will do everything he possibly can do to prevent a conflict between the two nations. Surely, the head of the Peace Society of Japan, after his own personal experience with a Japanese mob, does not believe that any good can be accomplished by arousing the passions and the hatred of an excitable, emotional, patriotic, race-proud people, who visited their displeasure upon the very person of this veteran statesman of Japan. In our own history I do not recall that any American cabinet officer has ever been attacked physically by any mob or even by any individual on account of the views expressed or uttered, or the official action taken by the cabinet officer while in the proper discharge of the duties of his position.

I have often been led to believe in reading Japanese history and following political events in the island Empire that there are many more political agitators and demagogues on the other side of the Pacific than we can possibly find in our own country. I may be in error, but at least I have gained that impression from the books and periodicals I have read on the subject. So that I really have a profound sympathy for the members of the Japanese cabinet. I realize fully the graveness of their responsibilities.

Why, I was in Tokyo in 1901. Just at the time of my visit a remarkable criminal trial was taking place there. Hoshi Toru, the former minister of communications, had been deliberately assassinated. He was well known in the United States, having been the head of the legation of his country at our National Capital. He had been recently recalled and had been appointed to the post of minister of communications in the Ito cabinet of 1900. One day a teacher by the name of Iba Sotaro walked into an office in Tokyo, where Hoshi was conversing with the mayor and several of the members of the municipal assembly of that city, and killed him in cold blood. The prisoner was promptly put on trial for his life. As I stated, I happened to be in the Japanese capital at the time. Some of my friends there informed me that the prisoner made a remarkable statement in his own defense. Of course, I can only give the purport of his language as narrated to me, but I remember it very vividly. He said in effect:

Yes; I killed Hoshi. I am ready to die for it. I am a teacher. It is my duty to instill into the minds of the children of Japan a love of their Emperor, a love of their country, a love of their institutions. Hoshi was a notoriously corrupt official; he was an unscrupulous and crooked official. How could I teach the children a love of their Emperor, a love of their country, a love of their institutions with such a criminal at the head of the educational society of Tokyo? And so I felt called upon to kill him. I called at his office. He was seated at his desk with his back to me. I did not want future generations to say that I had murdered him in cold blood, so I shouted "Hoshi!" With that he turned and faced me. Then I exclaimed, "Traitor, Hoshi!" and ran my sword through his heart. And now I am ready to die.

In fact, a letter which was found on the person of the assassin when he was arrested gives practically the same reasons for the commission of the deed. It is an interesting, human document, and discloses the frame of mind of a high-strung, patriotic, but intensely emotional citizen of Japan. I therefore read it in its entirety for the information of the House:

I was not acquainted with Mr. Hoshi Toru, and I had no ill feeling toward him. Once I held the position of chairman of the educational committee of the Yotsuya district, and I was appointed one of the promoters of the Tokyo City Education Society, when I met Mr. Hoshi for the first time. He was president of the society, but his conduct was remarkable for its depravity. As I was unwilling to have any connection with him on the sacred matter of education, I decided to leave the society. Since that time I have paid no attention to his action. But this old thief Hoshi has been disorganizing the municipal administration of Tokyo, and has been damaging the morality of the people of the capital. He occupied an honorable office, which should have made him responsible for the care of the municipal officials and for their faithful discharge of their duties. Despite this fact he took a leading part in the abominable bribery affair, which is positively disapproved by the sovereign and the people. His accomplices in this nefarious business were found guilty, but the shameless fellow has not mended his ways, but continued the gratification of his greed. I believe that there can be nothing more poisonous than his action in demoralizing the student class of our country. My ancestors taught the art of fencing. I disclaim any deep knowledge; I have also taught my students the art of fencing and of literature with all sincerity, and I also aimed at the progress of agriculture and of industry. I have never been connected with any political association, as I was connected with the Tokyo Agricultural School for six years, with the Nippon Savings Bank for four years, with the Yedogawa Paper Mill for three years, with the literary society for four years, and with the Yotsuya Bank for the last year. I have been a promoter of all these institutions, and have been president of all. Thus, as I had no connection with any political parties, I had no personal ill feeling toward Mr. Hoshi.

The reason for my killing this old thief, disregarding the future of my wife and children, irrespective of public opinion, at the expense of my own life, is that I could not bear to see this fellow doing evil deeds in the capacity of president of the City Education Society, and also discouraging and demoralizing the municipal administration of Tokyo, which can not fail to cause anxiety to my august sovereign.

It is needless to say that there was great excitement in Tokyo during the trial. The defendant was found guilty, but instead of the death sentence being pronounced upon him he was given three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. I merely cite this instance to show how mercurial, how volatile, how excitable our friends on the other side of the Pacific are. Due to this fact, bitter personal attacks have been made at times upon prominent statesmen, and occasionally one would fall at the hands of an assassin. Thus Okumbo was killed by an enraged citizen of Japan, while Viscount Mori succumbed to the attack of an embittered Shinto follower in 1889. Count Itagaki was stabbed by a hot-headed young Japanese, and similar attacks were made upon Kokoi, Omura, and Hirosawa. Naturally attacks of this character must affect the action of the men in power and authority in the island Empire. For that reason I have constantly asserted that I have a deep sympathy for the officials of that country. There is no gainsaying the fact that the people of Japan are intensely patriotic. They love their Emperor, their country, and their institutions with a devotion that might well be emulated by the peoples of all nations. Still, I can not help believing that with a population of that kind to work upon, the efforts of the demagogues, the agitators, and the unscrupulous politicians of Japan to arouse the passions, the hatred, and the prejudices of the masses is an exceedingly dangerous proposition.

Happily, we in America are not worked into a frenzy of excitement by purely political happenings. Take the case of our acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands. As we recall, when this country entered the Spanish-American War it became necessary to send American troops to Manila Bay. Our Army transports and man-of-war vessels stopped at Honolulu on their way to the Philippines. The representative of the Spanish Government in Honolulu made protest to the then Government of the Republic of Hawaii against the entrance and stay of our vessels in the neutral port of Honolulu for a period extending beyond 24 hours. The Hawaiian Republic promptly claimed that it was not neutral, but was in very fact the ally of the United States; and soon thereafter Congress, acting in accordance with the precedent established by the acquisition of Texas, passed a resolution annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the territory of the United States. It is a notable circumstance that Japan is the only country in the world that filed a formal protest against our acquisition of those islands. And even in these times the Japanese vernacular press frequently refers to what they call our unauthorized seizure of the islands.

Did the American people become unduly excited because of this seemingly unfriendly action of Japan? Not at all. Our Government took up the Japanese protest in an orderly way. The people of the United States went about their business as usual. Eventually the matter was explained to the satisfaction of the Japanese Government, and so far as that Government is concerned it has been a closed incident ever since. To show that the people of the United States did not become enraged or excited over this matter, it is but necessary to recall that in 1904, when Japan struck Russia simultaneously at Port Arthur and at Chemulpo, and then declared war on Russia, the sympathies of a large proportion of the people of the United States were with the Japanese. The bankers and financiers of America bought the bonds of the island Empire and thus rendered the Government and people of that country financial assistance that was invaluable. The people of Japan, as well as the politicians of that country, seemingly were grateful for the moral and financial support thus rendered by the people of the United States.

I might add that under the peace treaty of Versailles the Government of Japan was given the German islands in the Pacific, north of the Equator. The President of the United States was at the head of the American Peace Commission that signed the treaty. He acquiesced, as did the people of the United States, in the transfer to Japan of the Marshall group, the Caroline group, the Pellew Islands, and all the islands of the Marianne or Ladrone group, with the exception of the island of Guam, which had been transferred to our Government under the treaty of peace with Spain at the close of the Spanish-American War. These islands, to be sure, had belonged to Germany. They, in a measure, bar the way to our ships going to the Philippines. They bring the territory of Japan many miles nearer the Territory of Hawaii; and yet one has heard no real complaint on the part of American citizens upon the subject of these territorial acquisitions by Japan.

Our own officers and soldiers learned to appreciate the valor, the courage, and the wonderful military skill and ability of the Japanese military forces during the incidents connected with the Boxer uprising in China in 1899 and 1900. So that during the Russo-Japanese War the citizens, as well as the politicians of the United States, had every reason to believe that we were still the so-called "traditional friend of Japan." But we had rather a rude awakening. Col. Roosevelt, in his autobiography, refers to the incidents. Japan had won wonderful victories during the year that the war was in progress; splendid victories on land as well as brilliant victories at sea. But the loss of Japanese man power was terrific; the cost of the war to Japan and undoubtedly to Russia was enormous. It was an open secret that the war could not continue for any great length of time because of the cost in men and in treasure to the island Empire; and so the Japanese Government approached the American President with a request that he endeavor to bring about the conclusion of peace between the two nations. When Roosevelt approached Russia he was met at the outset with the statement that Russia would pay no indemnity. He tried to reason with the Russians and to induce them to meet the wishes of Japan upon that proposition. Count Witte's frequent and terse statement that Russia would pay "not one kopek" became historic. And Roosevelt wisely told the officials of Japan that the world's esteem for the Japanese would be materially lessened if Japan insisted on carrying on the war, with its terrific loss of life and blood, as well as property and treasure, for the sake of forcing the payment of an indemnity. By reason of his diplomacy, activity, and arguments he induced the two belligerents to meet in an effort to establish peace. The history of the negotiations at Portsmouth, N. H., are known to the world. I spoke to the former President personally regarding the entire matter.

Whether the Japanese officials were entirely open and aboveboard with their own countrymen, I will not attempt to say. I do know that when the terms of peace were promulgated and it developed that no indemnity had been paid by Russia to Japan, the wrath of the people was vented openly upon Americans in the streets of Tokio. Mr. E. H. Harriman, the well-known railroad president of the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific Companies, as well as the members of his party, were openly assaulted by the mob in the capital of Japan. And I regret to say that from the day the treaty was published in Japan the seeming former good feeling of the people of Japan for the people of the United States has passed away and apparently no longer exists.

Unfortunately, it seems evident that everything that is done by the people of the Pacific Coast States in regard to the protection of their rights and interests is magnified and misinterpreted by some of the politicians and practically all of the agitators of Japan.

It is needless at this time to go into the details of the agitation that took place on the other side of the Pacific in connection with the matter of attendance of Japanese students in the public schools of San Francisco. As a matter of fact, there was never any objection in San Francisco to the admission of Japanese to the grammar schools, the high schools, or to the State university at Berkeley. The sole objection was with reference to admission to the primary schools. It was found that Japanese youths, 18, 19, and 20 years of age, unable to speak or write English, would be put into the classes where our little boys and girls, 6 and 7 years of age, were taught. It was against that custom that the action of the Board of Education of San Francisco was directed. The occidentals of advanced age, who did not speak or write English, generally attended the adult foreign classes of the night schools of San Francisco. The Japanese, however, chose to attend the primary classes of the day school with the very young children. The action of the school board gave rise to acrimonious newspaper utterances and bitter attacks against Californians in the Empire across the Pacific. The matter was eventually straightened out, however, and nothing further has had to be done in regard to that subject.

But the immigration question had become a source of embarrassment to the national administration. It might be interesting at this time to state that in 1894, when Japan was negotiating for a new treaty with the United States Government, looking to the abrogation of the then existing treaty, with its provisions on extraterritoriality, she coupled with that request an entirely new proposition about unrestricted settlement in the United States of Japanese immigrants. Secretary of State Gresham constantly maintained that our Government had decided views on Asiatic immigration and sustained our position in that respect continuously during the negotiation. Finally the Japanese Government yielded entirely to the views of Secretary Gresham, thus fully recognizing the right of our country to differentiate between the classes of immigrants that might be admitted to our shores. I simply mention these facts to show that Japan in the past had recognized the attitude of our Government in the matter of the exclusion of Japanese laborers. Finally, in 1907, President Roosevelt undertook to settle the differences between our country and Japan by what is known in our history as the gentlemen's agreement. Briefly stated, the purpose of that agreement is to prevent Japanese laborers from coming from our insular possessions to the mainland of the United States, and to limit materially the total number of Japanese laborers who might enter our ports. The Japanese Government, on its part, agreed to give no passports to Japanese laborers, except the wives, parents, or children of those already here, to come to the mainland of the United States. As no Japanese of any class can leave his country without an official passport from his Government, it was hoped this agreement would solve the immigration problem. I can say frankly that at the time that agreement was negotiated it was believed that it would help finally to settle the differences between the two countries on the subject of immigration of Japanese laborers. Unfortunately the Americans were not familiar with the social and religious customs of Japan or they probably would have made additional provisions in that agreement.

The Japanese people are largely members of the Shinto faith. Among other things, Shintoism is the belief in the worship of one's ancestors.

For the first two years after the gentlemen's agreement had gone into effect, the number of Japanese landing in the ports of the United States decreased materially. In 1909 only 1,500, in round numbers, entered this country. But soon thereafter the number again began to increase enormously. One of the reasons was this: A married couple in Japan who have no son to carry on the family name can adopt an adult male, and he accordingly becomes the adopted son of the couple. Under the gentlemen's agreement, a couple in Japan could and did frequently adopt an adult son who was a laborer in California. Under the agreement, as soon as the adoption proceedings had been formally consummated under Japanese custom, the adopted son had the right to send for his parents and bring them into the United States. This the son invariably did.

When the parents arrived in our country, they also had the right to send for their other children; sometimes these would consist of quite a family of girls or minor boys, and they were in most cases all brought to this country. One can readily see how the custom might be worked into an endless chain of constantly increasing immigration. Naturally, the Californians felt that this was a violation at least of the spirit of the law, and it gave rise to a great deal of apprehension as to the efficacy of the gentlemen's agreement in the accomplishment of the avowed purposes.

Another source of dissatisfaction was what is known as the picture bride incident. Under Japanese social and religious customs a man can select his wife by photograph. A number of pictures would be sent to Japanese bachelors in the United States; these were plain Japanese laborers. When the picture bride was selected by the prospective groom the marriage of the girl to the laborer in California was solemnized in Japan, a proxy groomsman officiating for the purpose. Immediately after the ceremony the bride would take passage for California, and would, for the first time in her life, meet her husband, who invariably was at the dock in San Francisco on the arrival of the steamer bearing his spouse. Through this means the number of women immigrants increased by leaps and bounds.

When the gentlemen's agreement was negotiated there was no thought in the mind of President Roosevelt, or any American, that this system would be invoked to bring thousands of Japanese female laborers to the United States. Again, there seemed to be an apparent effort by means of the picture brides to evade the true spirit of the agreement. All of this has resulted in constant misunderstanding and has been the cause of considerable trouble in the matter of the immigration of the Japanese laboring classes to the United States.

The Japanese Government recently, by reason of the attitude of the Californians on the subject of picture brides, decided to prevent a continuation of the custom. I am sure that Japan in making this change realized the injury that was being done her cause by allowing the practice to continue; and, with all due respect for the sentiment of Japan, I frankly state that it would have been better if she had never allowed the practice to obtain at any time after the gentlemen's agreement was negotiated.

One of the difficulties of the whole situation is the fact that the attitude of the people on the Pacific coast is misrepresented by the demagogues of Japan. I can not repeat too strongly the statement that the people of the West have the greatest respect, the greatest appreciation, the greatest admiration for the Nipponese. Nobody considers them in any way inferior to the white man. But their habits of thought, their customs, their traditions are different from ours. Japanese publicists, agitators, and politicians seem to insist that our objection, as I have stated before, is racial. These habits and customs to which I have referred are not practiced by the Shozuki, or higher-class Japanese in the United States. They are practiced entirely by the laboring class, and we in California consider that these customs and habits make the Japanese laborers a non-assimilable element in our Western States.

I want to say that only this morning I received in my mail a pamphlet issued by Prof. Yoshi Saburo Kuno, assistant professor of oriental languages at the University of California. A sentence which caught my eye on opening the book shows how accurate the Californians are in their estimate of the Japanese in that State. This is what the learned professor says:

> All Japanese in the United States, including native sons and daughters, being, from the standpoint of Japan, her subjects, are obliged to report births, marriages, and deaths, besides movements of the family, to the Japanese Government.

So that from the moment he lands in the United States every Japanese is constantly in touch with his home Government and is compelled under their laws and customs to furnish this information. It bears out exactly what the people of California have always contended in the matter of nonassimilability.

But in all the agitation on this subject on the Pacific coast there has never been any talk of war. We in America hope, with Premier Hara, that war between the two nations is unthinkable.

I am free to admit that we do not understand in this country the intricacies of Japanese politics. We know that the Japanese have shown their prowess in two great wars—the war with China in 1894 and that with Russia in 1904. In addition, Japan performed wonderful military and naval services in the cause of the Allies in the recent World War in 1914.

With the aspirations of the militarists of Japan, with the ambitions of many of her resourceful leaders for the extension of her territory, I am not concerned at this time, and I do not intend to discuss them at any length at present.

I do want, however, to call to the attention of my countrymen a condition that existed in Japan in March, 1919. An attack was made near Tientsin on some American soldiers. The newspaper accounts cabled to America indicated that the latter in a drunken row got into altercations with Japanese soldiers and a fight ensued. It has been reliably stated, however, that the American soldiers were not drunk and had not been drunk when the disturbance arose. It has even been said that the Japanese soldiers had their officers advising them as to their course of procedure which resulted in the riot. The story leaked out, however, to the effect that it was pure propaganda work, undertaken in order to impress the Chinese people with the fact that Americans would not only not come to their defense in case of difficulties, but the Japanese would show the Chinese people that the United States Government would not even come to the defense of its own troops if the latter got into trouble. It is to be regretted that the use of propaganda work is frequently resorted to in the island Empire.

When the story leaked out the American consul general immediately went to the Japanese police station near Tientsin, where, it was contended, the American soldiers had been brought, and demanded that these soldiers, who were said to be in the building, be delivered over to the representative of this country. The Japanese officers denied any knowledge of the whereabouts of our soldiers. Just at that moment a terrific groan was heard coming from an adjoining room. The American consul general opened the door, and there, lying on the floor, horribly wounded, beaten, and bruised, were two American soldiers. The story of the assault caused deep indignation on the part of the American soldiers at Tientsin, However, the Japanese officers promptly offered their apologies to our local officers for the incident. The next day an American soldier in walking along a street in Tientsin saw a Japanese soldier near the police station in that city. He immediately walked up to the Japanese and slapped his face. Our American officers then apologized to the Japanese officers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. KAHN. I can easily conclude within 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the extension of the gentleman's time 15 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. I thank the gentleman and the House. I merely cite this incident to show how a spirit of resentment can be engendered by an aggressive, unprovoked attack upon the nationals of a friendly country. The consul general of the United States, I am told, informed his Government of what had happened and an investigation was ordered; four or five weeks later the Japanese ambassador at Washington called at our State Department and offered an apology for what had been done by the Japanese troops. The matter is in a fair way of being amicably settled in a few days and will undoubtedly soon become a closed incident.

And I want to say that the newspapers this morning declare that the Japanese ambassador went to our State Department yesterday and offered the regrets of Japan for the incident, and that our State Department offered apologies for what the American soldier had done. So that it is evidently a closed incident.

The American people have never become excited over the affair. You hear no threat of war on the part of American statesmen, politicians, or even demagogues. I know I utter the earnest hope and the wish of every patriotic American that peace between the two countries may continue perpetually, but I say, in all candor and in all frankness, that if the statesmen, the publicists, the politicians, the agitators, and the demagogues of Japan really want war with the United States they will have to be the ones to bring it on and not the Americans. [Applause.] We are a peace-loving people. We want peace. We hope always to avoid war. We are not looking for trouble. But the world has only recently learned that we are not too proud to fight; nor are we afraid to fight when we are forced into war. [Applause.]

Personally, I favor military preparedness. I favor universal military training, because I see in that plan the greatest safeguard for my country. I have no fear that there will be war between Japan and the United States in my lifetime, nor even in the lifetime of my sons. And I am thoroughly satisfied that if my country remains measurably prepared there will be no difficulty between the two nations at any time. Publicists and authors, however, tell us that Japan is making every effort to unite the yellow races; that Japan, under such a program, hopes and expects to be the leader of such a race amalgamation; that she is striving in every way to acquire and maintain the hegemony of the yellow nations.

Mr. Henry Chung, a native of Korea and citizen of the Far East, who has been in the United States for some years, published his book, "The Oriental Policy of the United States," near the end of 1919. In his preface he makes this clear and straightforward assertion:

> Consolidation of Asia under Japanese domination is the vision of the Japanese statesmen; and toward the attainment of this national goal there is unity of purpose among Japanese leaders. With this in view, Korea was annexed, Manchuria was absorbed, inner Mongolia and Fukien Province are being overwhelmed, and last but not least, Japan has obtained from the powers at the peace conference the official recognition of her paramount interests in Shantung. At the present rate of Japanese aggression China can not last very long.

We have read in articles in various publications that the present generation of Chinese are absolutely opposed to the Japanese. Nay, more, they have a hatred of the Japanese. We are told that the growing generation of Chinese is thoroughly antagonistic to the hegemony of Japan.

And I received from one of the Members of the House only day before yesterday a copy of the speech of Marquis Okuma to the delegation that visited Japan in the early part of this year, or rather during the summer. I imagine this speech was given to every member of the delegation and to the laymen who accompanied the delegation. This is what the Marquis said about China at that time:

> The Chinese are a nation of hedonists through and through, who live for the joy of the moment and go on piling debts on loans when the nation is on the brink of bankruptcy. What do they spend these borrowed moneys on? Political rehabilitation is always their excuse, but all goes into the private pockets of Government officials. Wait till the end of time, and they will never become a self-governing people.

That is what one of the great statesmen of Japan believes of the ability of the Chinese, and it carries out completely what the publicists of the Orient tell us is the endeavor of Japan to secure the hegemony of the yellow race.

It is openly stated that Japan, in order to accomplish her purpose, will resort to any expediency she finds necessary. It is even contended at the present time that, despite the agreement entered into by the nations of the world at The Hague in the early part of 1914, to the effect that they will endeavor to wipe out the opium habit in China, Japan has been sending large quantities of morphine, which is nothing more nor less than the narcotic principle of opium, to Shantung and other Chinese Provinces in which she has a strong influence. Of course, the continued use of this drug will help to deaden the patriotic energies of the users thereof. We are informed that the Chinese officials have protested and are protesting vigorously against this attempt to override The Hague agreement on the subject of narcotics. If the stories we hear are true, I presume that when peace is fully restored in the world the other nations will undoubtedly again try to protect the welfare of the Chinese by preventing the importation of morphine from Japan or its possessions.

Responsible publicists do not hesitate to state that even to-day Japan is trying to secure control of the school system of China. What does that mean? Simply this: That Japanese teachers will endeavor to instill in the minds of the very young Chinese a hatred of the white man.

There are 6,000,000 children born every year in China. If that hatred of the white man can find an abiding place in the hearts of the young Chinese, then the Caucasians will have to look out. It will probably be seventy-five or a hundred years before the spirit of hatred can be thoroughly instilled. What are the whites going to do about it? The Japanese constantly point their finger at the United States and its people as being antagonistic to the Japanese because of racial prejudice. I have tried to point out the fallaciousness of that statement. Let me remind my colleagues that similar legislation to that enacted in California and the Western States has also been enacted by the Union of South Africa, by Australia, by New Zealand, and by Canada. These are all British dominions or Provinces or colonies. The officials and the people of these British possessions are just as determined to keep out Japanese immigrants of the laboring class as are the people of the west coast of the United States. There is no doubt but these possessions of Great Britain will develop in population and in wealth very considerably in the years to come. Are the Japanese trying to bring about the world-old conflict between the white races and the yellow and brown races? I sincerely hope not. But it is a question which the statesmen of all liberty loving, democratic nations and peoples will do well to study and bear constantly in mind. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. KAHN. I will if I have time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman from California give us approximately the number of Japanese now on the Pacific coast?

Mr. KAHN. I think there are about 175,000. The census reports indicate that there are about 78,000 in California, although the officials in California contend that there are fully 100,000 there.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is the Government of Japan protesting against the action of the British colonies in excluding the Japs from their territory?

Mr. KAHN. We do not hear very much of the protests if they are making any. We do hear about the protests with regard to the United States of America.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Are the laws of Australia and the other British Provinces similar to those of California?

Mr. KAHN. I understand they are.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We hear of no protests being made.

Mr. KAHN. They are not allowed to enter those British possessions any more than they are allowed to enter the west coast of our country.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is it a fact that the Japanese predominate in numbers in the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. KAHN. They do.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the gentleman find that the Japanese in California are reporting their births, deaths, and other information to the Japanese Government, as alluded to in the pamphlet by Prof. Yoshi Saburo Kuno, to which the gentleman alluded in his speech?

Mr. KAHN. Of course I do not know; but I do know that the Japanese are an intensely patriotic people; that they love their country with a devotion that might well be emulated by the people of other nations; and if their Government asks them to make these reports you can be positively assured that they are making them.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. JUUL. Has the gentleman made any arrangement for distributing copies of his speech among the Members of the House?

Mr. KAHN. I hope to have it printed in pamphlet form, and I will gladly give copies to all Members who desire them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 601.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 14461, being a bill "To provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes." That there shall be not to exceed four hours of general debate, the time to be controlled, one-half by the gentleman from Washington, Mr. JOHNSON, one-half by any member of the minority of the committee opposing the bill, or if there be no member of the minority of the committee opposing the bill, then by any member of the committee opposing the bill. That after general debate the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule. That upon the completion of such consideration the committee shall automatically rise and report the bill to the House with all amendments thereto, if any, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see if we can not make some agreement as to time on the rule.

Mr. GARRETT. I imagine that we can. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have had requests for considerable time on the rule besides what little time I will use myself. I suggest 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say that I have requests for 13 minutes outside of such time as I may use myself—5 minutes by a gentleman opposed to the rule and the bill, 5 minutes by a gentleman in favor of the rule and the bill, and 3 minutes by a gentleman who desires to discuss another subject during that brief time.

I am in favor of the rule, but I make the suggestion that the gentleman yield some of his time to those opposed as I shall do on this side.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee as well as the gentleman from Kansas are in favor of the rule, I think it would be manifestly unfair that they should control all the time in favor of the rule. I am opposed to the rule, but I have no chance or opportunity to inquire of the membership as to how many there are who, like myself, are opposed to the rule. I think if additional time is granted it should be equally divided. If, however, the gentleman assures me that other gentlemen desire to use time against the rule, I will gladly yield a certain amount of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the time of 30 minutes on a side is agreed to, I assure the gentleman that I will yield some of it to those opposed.

Mr. GARRETT. And I am willing to yield one-half of my time to those opposed to the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think I shall be able to yield some of my time to those opposed to the rule.

Mr. SABATH. Then, Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable to me.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on the rule be fixed at one hour—one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, is it the gentleman's intention to pass the bill to-night?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; there will be four hours' general debate on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is a happy coincident that this rule follows the interesting and very timely speech of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. This rule brings before the House for consideration a question of the very greatest importance. Whatever is done upon great questions of this kind should be done in the interest of the Government and the people of the United States of America. Every action that is taken here should be with a view of the general welfare of our own people—those who are here. We can ill afford at a time when the reconstruction of the entire world is in progress to undertake to do more than our share of the world's work. We have our own reconstruction problems, as they have their own in other countries of the world. It is not for me to recount the unhappy conditions that exist in many parts of the United States, but they are here; unhappy conditions exist in every country in the world, conditions from which many people would like to escape.

But we must face at this time, in this country, and others must face elsewhere the conditions that are the natural result of the Great War through which the world has gone. Every nation and every people must suffer its proportion of the consequences of that Great War. We are concerned in this country about our standards of citizenship, about our standards of living, about our standards of wages, about the general welfare of our people. We are undertaking this extraordinary legislation in the interest of the people of the United States.

We must limit the flood of immigration that may come to this country, because it is the best place to live at this time, or any other, because of its better conditions of employment and wages, because of its better opportunities for acquiring homes, because of its better opportunities for children to grow up under conditions that hold out hopeful futures.

We must reserve what is here for the people of the United States who are here now. [Applause.] A period of two years' limitation on immigration during the reconstruction of the world it seems to me is most timely.

There are to-day, it is stated, in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 men without employment in the United States. Shall we add to these millions that are unemployed the thousands of immigrants that are on the way, the hundreds of thousands making preparations to come and the millions who are anxious to escape conditions in the Old World? It is said that there are to-day preparations being made in the Old World for from fifteen to eighteen million immigrants into the United States who would come within the next two years if they could.

We can not assimilate large numbers of immigrants during this reconstruction period. We can not give them employment, we can not therefore permit them to enter without injuring the welfare of our country, without injuring the standards of our living, without injuring the employment of those who are here, without lowering our scale of wages.

This we can not afford to do. In this period of reconstruction we shall not only have to limit immigration, but we shall have to limit by proper taxation the importation of a flood of the products of labor employed elsewhere in the world, in order to maintain our standards of living and our scale of wages in the United States. This will come at a later date, but it must come. So surely as we open our gates or keep them open to the flood of immigration that is anxious to come to the United States, just so surely will our standards of living, our scale of wages be reduced. And just so surely as a flood of immigration will bring down the scale of wages at this time, so will a flood of product importations now ready to be dumped into the United States, if not properly taxed for the privilege of coming into our market, reduce our standard of living and our scale of wages.

We have to-day in this country the highest standard of living in the world and the highest scale of wages in the world. We have the best opportunities in the world, and for these reasons there are those from all countries who are anxious to come here to participate in the benefits to be found here. We must immediately take the steps that are necessary to maintain our standards of living and wages for the American people, and to maintain the opportunities that are here for the ambitious youth of our country. The only way that it can be done is by proper legislation excluding for a period the immigration that is ready to come in and by properly taxing the importations of such goods as may come into the country in competition with those produced here by the laborers of America.

We have been able to serve the world and mankind because of the exceptional standards that we have established here. We have been able to do much for humanity that no other people could do. Our high standard of living and wages have made us an intensely productive nation. When the world needed great production, when the world needed the largest amount of the best commodities that could be produced by highly skilled labor, the world found them in the United States. We had the resources, the men, the material, and the machinery, and the money. We had everything that was essential when the war came on to enable us to aid in its successful prosecution. We had all these things and more in the United States because of the standards that we have maintained in this country for more than half a century. We must not permit sentimentality, we must not permit any sort of propaganda to drive us to a position of weakness. We must reconstruct for the welfare of the United States, and in doing so we must preserve everything that is here that is essential for the welfare and for the future of our own people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended addressing the House for a few minutes yet, at least, but in view of the fact that I stated in the preliminary remarks when we were about to agree on time that I was with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] on this rule, and in view of a portion of the remarks just made by the gentleman from Kansas, I think I would better say a word or two right now. I am with the gentleman from Kansas on the rule for the consideration of this immigration bill and I am with him in favor of the bill, but so far as the prevention of importation of goods to which he made reference I shall have to see the bill in the next Congress before I am willing to say how I shall vote upon it. [Laughter.]

I agree that the matter that this bill is to bring before the House is a very important matter. I came into this body in favor of stringent immigration restriction. I may have changed my mind on a number of public questions since I have been here, but this is one upon which I have not changed my mind. On the contrary, I believe that the conditions of the present but emphasize the correctness of conviction of those who through these long years have favored stringent restriction of the number and close scrutiny of the character of those who may come into the United States. There may be some details of the bill upon which I may feel justified in voting for an amendment; but, so far as I understand the principle of the bill, I am prepared and glad to give it my hearty and earnest support. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], to be used as he may see proper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] states that we have at this time upward of 2,000,000 people unemployed in this country and that the conditions are such that immediate consideration of this measure is demanded. I am satisfied he will be obliged to admit that up to 60 days ago there was no such thing as unemployment in our country. On the contrary, there was a general shortage of labor everywhere. Of course, Mr. Speaker, conditions have changed in the last 60 days and especially since the election. Later on, in my remarks on the bill, I hope that I will have the opportunity to point out the reasons for the changed conditions. Nevertheless, I can not understand where the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] receive their information and what justification they have for their statement as to the 2,000,000 unemployed in our country.

Mr. Speaker, for years I have observed, and no doubt the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] must have, that invariably a few days or few weeks before an immigration bill would be considered that certain gentlemen and certain organizations would give out statements and newspapers would print articles about the existing unemployment and the great surplus of labor in America. That is an old propaganda on the part of those who are in favor, who have been in favor, and who will continue to be in favor of restrictive legislation, it matters not how important immigration may be to our Nation. I do not know from whom the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] or the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] received the information upon which they base their opinion that there is a need for immediate action upon this legislation. Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to speak at this time on the provisions of the bill and, to my mind, this unnecessary and uncalled for legislation. What I do desire is to call the attention of the House to the most unusual, unprecedented manner in which this bill is being brought in this House. At 10.30 o'clock on Monday morning, before the third session of this Congress convened, a meeting of the Committee on Immigration was called for the purpose of considering a bill which had not been introduced and was reported to the House.

The Committee on Rules, notwithstanding the fact that I called their attention to this action of the Immigration Committee, which I considered dangerous, reported out a special rule making in order the bill that had not been introduced in the House. I am satisfied that it matters not what I may say or how dangerous the precedent is that is being established by this move, the majority of the Members will nevertheless vote for the rule; but I do know that in the days that are to come the majority of you will regret that this precedent is being established. If it were not a measure of great importance I would not take up the time of this House to call your attention to it. The arguments that have been made by the gentleman from Kansas and those that will be made by the gentleman from Washington were made on the floor of this House 2 years ago, 3 years ago, 5 years ago, 10 years ago, and to my personal knowledge 14 years ago, and from what the record of this House shows 100 years ago. The same fears were entertained then that are now being entertained by the gentleman from Kansas, but notwithstanding these threats and fears in the years gone by the country continued to prosper. The gentleman himself admitted that this country is the most prosperous and the richest country of them all. He states that the standard of living is better than anywhere else. That is true. He says that the standard of wages is higher than in any other country. I agree with him, but I ask him who helped to bring that about, who helped to bring about the prosperity of the Nation, who aided——

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SABATH. Who aided and assisted in this great production during the World War which the gentleman stated we were in position to bring about because we had the men and the materials?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. SABATH. In a moment. It was the very immigrants whom you are going to prevent entering our doors in the future. I will now yield to my colleague.

Mr. MASON. I do not wish to interrupt my colleague, but if that is a statement of fact, and I have no doubt the gentleman is correct, is it not subject to a point of order that we can not consider properly a bill that is reported before it is introduced?

Mr. SABATH. I am of the opinion that it is. But my colleague knows I do not lay great stress upon technicalities. I do not desire to take up unnecessarily the time of the House, notwithstanding I felt it was my duty to call attention to the practice or the precedent which is being established by this rule. Oh, the chances are I could have delayed this matter for a day or two, but what would I gain for this great cause in view of the prejudiced minds in this House? However, it was not my intention to take up so much time upon the proposition embodied in the bill. All I did desire within these few moments was to speak upon the rule and why I believe in fairness and justice to the House and in protection of the Members of the House and for the reasons I have given that the rule should not be adopted, and that the Rules Committee should in the future realize and recognize that they should not bring in a rule on any bill that has not been properly referred to a committee as the rules of this House provide.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman from Illinois know that the bill was regularly introduced, regularly acted upon by the Committee on Immigration, regularly reported before the Committee on Rules before the Committee on Rules took any action upon it at all?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Kansas remembers that I appeared before the Rules Committee, that I showed him a copy of the so-called committee print without any number, a bill which was being considered by the committee at 10.30 December 6, and he knows as well as I do that the House did not convene until 12 o'clock noon, so how could that bill have been properly referred to the committee at 10.30 on that day when the House did not convene until 12 o'clock?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And is it not true that the Committee on Rules acted upon the resolution that is now before the House on the following day, December 7?

Mr. SABATH. On the following day on the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And after the bill had been reported out of the Committee on Immigration?

Mr. SABATH. What I charge is that the Immigration Committee considered and reported out the bill which this resolution is making in order before the bill has been introduced in this House; in fact, before this the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress convened.

Mr. GARRETT and Mr. GRIFFIN rose.

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GRIFFIN. May I ask the gentleman, was there a meeting of the Immigration Committee after the bill was introduced, and did that Immigration Committee pass upon the bill?

Mr. SABATH. No; there was no meeting of the committee after the bill was introduced. The only meeting of the committee that was had was the meeting on Monday morning at 10.30 o'clock and we adjourned at 12 o'clock to be present when the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress was convened.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Well, did the Immigration Committee at that meeting take any action upon the bill?

Mr. SABATH. It did; but I contend the committee had no jurisdiction, because the committee had not received the bill from the House inasmuch as the House was not yet in session.

Mr. GRIFFIN. And it was not referred to them and could not have been referred to them?

Mr. SABATH. No. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. This question that the gentleman raises, while technical, is important, and the gentleman is right in that I do not think the Committee on Rules ought to act upon a bill under ordinary circumstances, or the House ought to act upon a bill, that has not been regularly acted upon by a committee, but it was my understanding—and I violate no confidence, I think, because this was stated in open hearing of the Committee on Rules—that while the consideration of this measure began in the morning before Congress had convened, the committee was sitting at that time under authority given it at the last session of Congress. The gentleman makes no question about the regularity of that meeting, I understand, because the power to sit during the recess was conferred upon the Committee on Immigration?

Mr. SABATH. There is no question about that.

Mr. GARRETT. So there is no question about that. Now, they met at 10.30 on Monday morning to consider this particular bill, or to consider what was contained in what was known as the confidential print; it had no number. Now, it was further my understanding that subsequent to the beginning of the session and the introduction of the bill that it was formally reported from that committee, although the gentleman may not have been present at that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee is correct and covers the situation.

Mr. SABATH. Well, the committee might have had a meeting, but I was not present, nor was I informed that any meeting was held in the afternoon. Nevertheless, I feel that the chairman of the committee did believe that he had jurisdiction because of the fact that the committee was authorized to have hearings, but I maintain he did not have authority to consider a bill and report a bill out of the committee which had not been introduced in the House. There was nothing before them at that time, and therefore the bill could not have been in the committee properly. It is for the future I am arguing. Mr. Speaker, I fully realize that it matters not how irregular the action was, the resolution will be adopted, but I am placing the House upon record, so that we will see what the future may bring——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. And what effect it will have on the future. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman wants to be fair in his statement, I presume. The bill before the committee all summer and introduced last summer was 12320, of which the present bill is an elimination. The original bill was H. R. 12320, and considered and hearings had during the summer, and the present bill is an abridgment of that particular bill.

Mr. SABATH. You introduced several bills last summer. We must have had at least 10 different bills on which hearings have been held. It might be an abridgment of the bill and an improvement upon the bill, but it was not introduced at the time, it was not referred by this House to our committee, and therefore the committee had no jurisdiction. What is there to prevent any committee in the future from reporting a bill that has not been introduced in the House and bringing it upon this floor at 12 o'clock and introduce it and secure a special rule at the same time, call it up, and pass it without giving the membership of this House a chance or opportunity to familiarize themselves with the content of the bill? Mr. Speaker, it is a dangerous precedent and it should not be sanctioned and such practice approved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. SABATH. I reserve the four minutes.

UMI

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I rise for the purpose of reserving a point of order on the bill and on the discussion of the bill and of the rule, and I want to be heard.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that after the resolution has begun to be considered under an agreement the reservation comes too late.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The gentleman surely thinks that it is a point of order for him to answer my point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order the reservation is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The matter has not come up yet for consideration.

Mr. BLANTON. The Speaker will remember that last session that particular point was decided by Mr. Speaker GILLETT when a resolution was brought in here concerning debate on a rule with respect to an investigating committee. I attempted to make a point of order at that time, and the Speaker ruled that the resolution having come up for debate under agreement as to time, the time for making reservation and points of order was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct so far as this resolution is concerned.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to know what action——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has asked for no action.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I ask to reserve a point of order on the discussion of the bill when the bill is called up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, the precedent attempted to be established by this procedure is one of the most dangerous and one which a calm and deliberate body such as the House of Representatives should endeavor in every way to avoid. This bill was never introduced in this House before it was acted upon by this committee. The committee met on Monday morning at about 10.30 o'clock, and the so-called confidential print of this bill, which appeared in the newspapers all over the country two or three days before, was presented to the Members somewhat modified. It had not been introduced in this House and it had not been referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization at that time. The bill was read through in a hurry, and the so-called bill—because it had never been introduced or referred—was reported here with a majority report. On Tuesday at 12 o'clock the Committee on Rules came in here and attempted to pass a rule to consider such a measure without the minority views or those representing those views having an opportunity to express their views.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from New York will be accurate, at least, in his statement as to what the Committee on Rules attempted to do, because the Committee on Rules attempted to do nothing of the kind and presented no rule until this morning. I announced on Tuesday that I would call up the rule on Thursday.

Mr. SIEGEL. The gentleman does not deny that he had the rule in his pocket. The RECORD of Tuesday tells the story of the hard time I had to obtain the privilege and right which was mine as the ranking Republican member on this committee to have time in which to file minority views. I obtained that right despite the spectacle of three Members at one time attempting to stop me from getting it.

The House is to take action and it will set a precedent to-day of what it intends to do and as to what it thinks of that method of attempted legislation. I do not think one can find a single precedent in the history of Congress when anything similar has been tried or done.

Now, my distinguished friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] stated a few moments ago that some one had said 15,000,000 immigrants would come over here in a year or two. The very absurdity of the statement should appeal to anybody who can take a pencil and paper and try to do a little figuring. There are just 75 ships that bring passengers running between the United States and Europe and Asia. They can make average round trips of 12 a year. If they were to run for 10 years without stopping a single day for repairs, they could not bring 15,000,000 passengers over to America. Yet in the present hysteria which has been created in the newspapers by propaganda spread broadcast over here and other places throughout the United States, people are led to believe the statement that has been made even though it is evidenced that it can not be true. I am asking for cool and calm deliberation and consideration of proposed legislation. We all know something of arithmetic. We all know that the statement is incorrect and inaccurate. Yet we are led away by reading the newspaper reports along those lines. No one takes a pencil and paper to do his own figuring. We take the road of least resistance if it will only save us doing any mental work.

I am opposed to this bill; I am opposed to this rule. I believe it is an unfair method of trying to obtain legislation. I believe it is legislation which the good of the country requires should be defeated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair. This bill is set down for discussion this afternoon under a rule which the Rules Committee has brought in. Now, it has been developed during the debate on the rule that the bill itself was not introduced until we met on Monday, December 6, and it appears from the discussion that the Committee on Immigration, to which, according to the RECORD, that bill had been referred by the Speaker on Monday afternoon, had considered it in the morning and had directed it to be reported out. Now, the RECORD, on page 8, states that the bill H. R. 14461 was introduced by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington—

to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes—and was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], in answer to a question, says that there was no meeting of the Committee on Immigration after the introduction of this bill to pass upon it. In that event the question arises as to whether the bill is subject to a point of order, and I reserved such a point of order. Now, my parliamentary inquiry is this: Do I lose the right to make that point of order if the discussion on the rule is permitted to proceed and a vote is taken on the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the point of order would be affected by allowing the discussion to proceed if the discussion would be subject to a point of order. The Chair expresses no opinion on that. It is past. The Chair would think now, however, that the discussion would not prevent the gentleman from making a point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. But, Mr. Speaker, has not the discussion already prevented the question of whether it is subject to a point of order from now being raised, and should not that question have been raised at the time the rule was presented?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No, Mr. Speaker; because the bill has not been considered as yet. The point of order is properly addressed, as I think, to the bill when the bill comes up for consideration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the point of order is made during the consideration of the rule. It is quite within the privilege of the Committee on Rules and of the House afterwards to bring in and adopt a rule providing for the consideration of a bill that has not yet been introduced. A bill does not have to be reported or even introduced. The Committee on Rules can bring in a rule and the House can adopt a rule for the consideration of a bill that is yet to be introduced if it chooses to, so that no point of order would lie against the consideration of the rule. That is the only point of order that can be made at this time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. My inquiry, Mr. Speaker, was addressed to the raising of the point of order upon the consideration of the bill. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the point of order might not lie at this time, and that is why I addressed the inquiry to the Speaker.

The point, Mr. Speaker, is this: Whether or not a Member of this House loses his right by permitting his point of order to lie dormant during the consideration of the rule. I propose to make a point of order against the bill when it comes up for discussion, and I addressed the inquiry to the Speaker as to whether I lose the right to enforce my point of order at that time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair answered the gentleman by saying that he thought the gentleman could not lose any right by further discussion.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The point of order is not addressed to the action of the Rules Committee. I want to make that clear.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will permit me, I think the time to make a point of order on the rule would be at the time of the reading of the rule. Evidently the only point to which a point of order would lie would be the rule. A point of order would have to be made on the conclusion of its reading. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has correctly stated the rule. The committee can report such a rule, and immediately after the adoption of the rule the House can proceed to the consideration of the bill. The philosophy of it is this: If the bill is in committee, the working of the rule is such that it acts automatically to discharge the committee from the consideration of the bill and brings the bill before the House. The House may adopt a special rule to consider the bill. That has been done in this instance. This is by the adoption of a special rule, which sets aside all rules to the contrary, and under it the House may, if a majority desire, consider the text of a bill that has never been reported by a committee, or even considered by one.

Mr. SABATH. And it makes this bill in order. I can not see how any objection can lie against the bill, because the resolution makes it in order.

Mr. WINGO. If a point of order is made against the bill it will have to be considered at the conclusion of the reading of the bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I ask the gentleman what protection the House has when the objection to a bill is not revealed or disclosed until the argument on the rule comes up?

Mr. WINGO. That is the object of the consideration of the rule, the House deciding if it wishes immediate consideration, the presumption being that all facts will be disclosed. The object of the rule is to remove all parliamentary objections to immediate consideration. That is the object of the rule, to bring the House to an immediate consideration, and if the House wishes to dispense with the further consideration of a bill by the committee and go to an immediate consideration of the bill in the House, it certainly has the parliamentary right to do it by a majority vote. That is the object of these special rules.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The gentleman has not answered my question. What is the predicament of the House when an objection to the bill is not disclosed until the argument comes up on the rule? Has the House no recourse whatever?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. It can vote the rule down, if it wishes the bill to follow the usual course of being introduced, considered by a committee, and reported out in the manner provided by the rules of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bill itself shows it was reported without being introduced.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The report shows that it was referred to the Committee on Immigration. That is on page 8 of the RECORD. It was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. That is shown by the record of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You have to make a point of order on the record, not on argument.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am much obliged to the gentleman for the suggestion.

Mr. GARRETT. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARRETT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I shall not attempt to make a speech in the two minutes allotted to me. I want to say that I am heartily in favor of this rule and very much in favor of the bill prohibiting all immigration, which the rule directs shall be immediately considered. I think that the greatest service which this House can render to the country is to pass, and pass speedily, legislation restricting immigration.

In the year 1919 I introduced a bill to suspend all immigration for 10 years, and last June I made a speech on the floor of the House in support of that bill. I can add nothing to what I said on that occasion, for I fully expressed my views then.

The bill that we are now considering suspends immigration for 2 years. I wish it were for 10 years instead, but if we can not get 10 years I am certainly in favor of the 2 years.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. No; I have only two minutes. I do not think either the Committee on Immigration or the Committee on Rules is subject to any censure whatever for the dispatch which both those committees have shown in this matter. I think the welfare of the country demanded speedy action, and I want to commend both committees. As far as this rule is concerned, and as far as the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] is concerned, I want to say to the gentleman that he has his remedy.

As I understand the rule, it simply provides that upon its adoption it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill; and as our beloved friend, Uncle JOE CANNON, said some years ago, a majority of this House can always do anything it pleases; and when this rule is adopted, when the motion is made that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to consider this bill, the gentleman can raise the question of consideration, and if a majority want to consider the bill they can do it. If a majority do not want to consider it, they can refuse to do so. I want to commend both the Committee on Rules and the Committee on Immigration. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, the question as to the rule being in order is practically disposed of. The only question—and the House ought to know it—is whether this matter has been fully considered by the Committee on Immigration.

I want to call attention to the fact that on January 20, 1919, a bill was reported to this House suspending immigration for four years. No one filed an adverse report upon that bill save and except the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. They wanted the period of the suspension of immigration to be two years instead of four years. The gentlemen who are now making the contest, who were then on the committee, filed no minority views against that bill. There are some changes in the exemptions, but the suspension is there.

I want to call your attention further to the fact that for the last year and a half there have been pending before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization at least seven bills. Hearings have been had upon them, covering these various subjects, and during the recess of Congress this committee made inquiries from Boston to the Pacific Ocean, in the various localities, and of the agricultural interests and others, relative to the suspension of immigration. When they came back here they were convinced that the bill that had been reported for over a year and a half should be enacted into law with the modifications which they have proposed. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], chairman of the committee, had a confidential print of the bill made, and practically every member of the committee was there on Monday, December 6, and favored reporting out this bill which suspends immigration for two years. The reasons are fully and amply set forth in this report, and the matter ought to be disposed of. The distinguished gentlemen objecting had their objections before us. The reasons for the suspension are growing stronger every day, and the House could do no better act than to pass this rule and pass the bill, with certain amendments which I will present to the House, at the earliest possible moment after proper discussion.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the gentleman suggesting to the House that there is a surplus of labor in the agricultural sections of the country right now?

Mr. RAKER. If my dear friend would read the report he would find that 90 per cent of those who have come to this country in the last year and a half are dependents, and the reports from our consular agents show that they will be undesirable citizens.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. RAKER. They do not go to the farming country. They go in for small trade. They come here to live on their neighbors and their friends. That is the fact. Many of them are diseased and we have not enough agents and officials at the ports of entry to make the necessary examinations.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I should like to yield to both gentlemen, but I can not.

Mr. GARRETT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in support of this rule.

Unfortunately the records of this Government show that many people who have come to our land since the signing of the armistice are people who do not believe in government and who are against law and order. No man should be permitted to stay in this country who is against government and who is against law and order.

UMI

The subject paramount in the minds of the American people in expressing their sentiments on election day last month was that we must not longer permit men to come into or stay in this country who are against government and against law and order. If they placed upon our friends on the Republican side of the aisle any responsibility and any burden whatever it was the burden and the responsibility of seeing to it that there shall be placed in office as the Assistant Secretary of Labor next March a man who will not stand for such people remaining in the United States. [Applause.]

This rule will keep out of this country just such people. It keeps anarchists out of this country, and I am for it.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I can not. I have only three minutes. If the gentleman will get me time or yield me from his time, I will yield to him. If I understood the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], I am with him so far as the question of importation is concerned. If his idea with respect to future importation is to see to it that the producers of this country, the farmers and the ranchmen, who feed and clothe the 105,000,000 people of the United States are not placed on a level with the Chinese and Japanese coolies who send so many million pounds of vegetable-oil substitutes each year to compete with the products of our farms, I am with him on that subject, and we are unanimous with regard to the same. [Applause.]

Time has proven that free raw material is not a fundamental of true democracy. It has been a fatal policy and constitutes one of our gravest mistakes. It has almost bankrupted some of our southern producers who by law have been forced to purchase everything they have to buy in a protected market and then sell all of their raised products in a free one, where the whole world, dissimilar as it is, competes on an equal footing. The illusive, seductive doctrine of permitting raw materials from every foreign country of the world to enter the United States absolutely free of duty has taken away from our home producers their home market and is largely responsible for our southern planters now being forced to sell their cotton, which means their living for a whole year, for less than they paid out to have it picked and ginned; for the Chamber of Commerce in Ranger, Tex., now offering some of the splendid farms of Eastland County rent free to any farmers who will agree to cultivate them next year; for our warehouses now bulging out with both the spring and fall clips of domestic wool which can not now be sold for its cost of production; for the crippling of our great peanut industry; for stagnating our important stock-raising and dairy interests; and for swiftly depopulating our farms and ranches. Our farmers and stockmen of the United States, sturdy producers who yearly feed and clothe our 105,000,000 people, are now with their backs to the wall facing a most serious crisis.

In Mexico, South America, Australia, Europe, Asia, and Africa there exists an entirely different state of conditions, a different standard of living, a different standard of working hours, a different standard of wages, a different standard of necessities, morals, intelligence, hopes, ambitions, and aspirations. Mexican peons are content to work for a miserable existence. Chinese and Japanese laborers are perfectly satisfied to work from 10 to 14 hours each day for less than 20 cents' pay, to live on rice, to go almost naked, and to let the future take care of itself. Must our intelligent, ambitious, deserving men and women on the farms and ranches of the United States be longer placed on the same level by being forced to compete directly with the peons and slaves of the universe? I am one loyal Democrat who is not in favor of it.

I have had Hon. Thomas W. Page, chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, to assemble for me the following authentic statistics concerning recent importations. During the last fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, the following raw materials were imported from foreign countries into the United States absolutely free of any duty, to wit:

Cotton	pounds	345,314,126
Corn	bushels	10,229,249
Wheat	do	4,744,712
Wheat flour	barrels	157,896
Wool	pounds	427,578,038

It does not require an expert to realize just how much the above free competitive imports have discriminated against our farmers and stockmen, and their consequent losses thus occasioned, besides the great loss in revenue to the Government. We raise annually about 75,000,000 head of cattle, while South American countries, with only a little more than a third of our population, raise over 80,000,000 head of cattle yearly. Due to their tropical climate, cheap and luxuriant grass, cheap labor, ample water, and little feeding, our cost of production is about five times as great as theirs per pound.

The time has come when we must take products of American farms and ranches, and all competitive substitutes, off of the free list and let our American market afford a living wage and return to our producers, and when we must so arrange our tariff schedules on such products and substitutes as will equalize our cost of production with that of foreign countries. To a certain extent this principle was recognized and followed in the tariff act of October 3, 1913, in placing a duty on certain products largely raised by cheap labor in foreign countries. And during the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the following dutiable products were imported from foreign countries into the United States and duty paid upon same, to wit:

Rice, uncleaned, 22,437,197 pounds, duty five-eighths cent.
Rice flour, 1,265,198 pounds, duty one-fourth cent.
Rice, cleaned, 156,217,566 pounds, duty 1 cent.
Beet sugar, 1,219,834 pounds.
Cane sugar, 7,533,200,338 pounds.
Molasses, 154,670,200 gallons.
Peanuts, shelled, 120,344,425 pounds, duty three-fourths cent.
Peanuts, not shelled, 12,067,998 pounds, duty three-eighths cent.
Butterine and cocoa butter, 41,500 pounds.
Olive oil, edible, 6,812,596 gallons, duty 30 cents.
Linseed and flaxseed oil, 4,550,391 gallons, duty 10 cents.
Peanut oil, 22,064,363 gallons, duty 6 cents.
Rapeseed oil, 1,229,526 gallons, duty 6 cents.
Other dutiable oils, 1,432,695 gallons.
Certain wheat, 35,052 bushels, duty 10 cents.
Certain wheat flour, 1,160 barrels.

If it is democratic and American to place a duty upon rice, peanuts, and cane products, then why not upon our corn, wheat, cotton, wool, hides, live stock, and far-eastern vegetable oils and substitutes that daily compete with our farm and ranch products? And why beg the question any longer? Why not place a proper and adequate duty upon all such items to do some good?

The millions of city consumers who inhabit New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Washington, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, and our other large cities, while demanding and getting their $6, $8, $10, $15, $20, and $25 for six to eight hours' work each day, are constantly demanding that everything they eat and wear be furnished to them at the lowest minimum. They never give a serious thought to the subject of a living wage to the producer who feeds and clothes them. And I am afraid that it has been the clamoring of these millions of city consumers, whose votes are very much desired, which has caused free raw materials to be written into Democratic platforms. Much too long have we Democrats permitted rest-needing politicians to entwine into our platforms and policies some city-vote-catching slogan to the detriment of our producers. With blinking eyes we Democrats have sat by and let our brother Republicans pass their measures to place a duty upon pearl buttons, chemical glass, surgical instruments, tungsten, magnesite, and the numerous other products their rich millionaire friends are interested in, thus placing unneeded millions into the pockets of a few wealthy millionaires, and we have let our worthy producers appeal to us in vain.

The proper solution of this question more vitally concerns the consuming millions in cities than anyone else. Suppose our producers were to get tired and quit. There would be starvation in cities. When the manufacturer can not make a profit he shuts down and prevents loss. But after the producer prepares and plants his ground in the spring and arranges for the season's growth of his flocks and herds there is no shutting down for him without losing his whole year's income. He must combat drought, floods, disease, grasshoppers, boll weevil, rust, depredations, plots of gamblers, and the score of other enemies that seem to combine for his destruction. Just now there is ample demand for our products abroad, but want of funds and credit prevents a sale. At an enormous expense we have built a large merchant marine, so essential in bringing the markets of the world to our producers, and we must not let it stand for naught or slip out of our hands. We must find a safe way to assist worthy purchasers to obtain necessary credit. We must see to it that our producers are not forced off of their farms and ranches.

This problem will soon be before Congress for solution. It must be solved properly. We must get out of ruts and meet the present.

I repeat, I am with the gentleman from Kansas on this subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] got me correctly. [Applause.] I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the economic argument offered by the chairman of the committee I want to emphasize the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] who just left the floor. His last observation is a sound protective tariff argument and it is an additional proof that even Texas is coming around all right. I think there are two outstanding facts in this character of legislation. One is to deal with the undesirable alien, and the other is to deal with the Americanization of the American. If the Americanization of the American is to be applied to the naturalized citizen who is no longer an alien, well and good, and if it is to be applied to the American who has never been naturalized but native born, it is also good. However, this leigslation before us now does not deal with that question of Americanization. It does deal with the question of undesirable aliens who are coming in increasing numbers, if we are to credit reports from various sources.

The man who is already here, or the woman who is here, that falls under the category of an undesirable alien, whether he be an alien enemy or not, can only be dealt with either by the Americanization process or by the process of deportation. The first is mainly educative, while the latter is statutory. I mean to say that if it is a question of Americanization it is hardly a question of legislation, but if it is deportation it is a matter of legislation.

We have attempted in the past Congress to deal with the latter, that particular phase—to get rid of the undesirable alien. I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Texas has said. The law of deportation is not being sympathetically enforced. Anybody who was in the room of the Committee on Rules when the hearings on deportation took place, especially when the Assistant Secretary of Labor appeared, as well as when the Attorney General appeared on this very question, must have been convinced that we were in a very unfortunate situation by having a man charged with the enforcement of this law with positively no sympathy whatever with such legislation, whose chief concern seems to be to find a way to avoid its requirements. That is the most charitable thing you can say. I see no chance whatever of getting rid of the undesirable alien now within our midst, notwithstanding ample and specific law that is now upon the statute books, with the present attitude of the Assistant Secretary of Labor. It seems to me since there has been no step taken by the executive department, notwithstanding the urgency of committees of Congress, to make more effective the enforcement of law, and there is no hope beyond waiting until some one else is placed in the position of Assistant Secretary of Labor to enforce the law, which will not be short of three months. This legislation has nothing whatever to do with that problem. This legislation is to prevent further complications of that condition. This Congress, whether it is helpless on deportation or not, and it appears that it is in a sense helpless, can prevent further complications by preventing an increase of these undesirables, and this group, my friends, is bound to be mixed in with the vast mass of foreigners pressing our shores.

We have it from the report of the Surgeon General, who has been in Europe and who has made some reports from there as to the stirring of all the Old World to get out of Europe. We have it from the report of the special agents who have been in Europe to study this problem, and, gentlemen of this House on both sides—for both sides of the middle aisle are as much in sympathy with effective work here as anyone else—we must not overlook the persistent, universal unrest in Europe that is found in every Government of the Old World, for this immigration is not limited to any particular section, it is all over Europe. They want to get from under the burden of the war-torn conditions of their countries. We have it from those agents in Europe reporting to us; we have it from the New York Industrial Association through its report that excludable aliens are being admitted in such large numbers that within a few years the penal institutions and asylums for defectives in New York State will be overrun. Our cosmopolitan philanthropy is being overworked. The idealistic and sentimental cry that we must make America the home of all the oppressed of earth invites the unhindered influx of the odds and ends of the earth now pouring through our gates.

We have a most striking statement that came this last month on this subject. It is official, and it ought to carry with it weight that should not in any way be minimized by any particular personal or temperamental consideration. I refer to the findings of the grand jury of Kings County, of New York. Let me read a statement from that grand jury, as published in the New York Times:

The presentment of the Kings County grand jury, signed by William Shaddock, foreman, and J. Van V. Smith, secretary, follows:

"The experience of the grand jury for November for the county of Kings (which we are assured does not greatly differ from that of other recent grand juries) is such as to have caused us to give most earnest thought as to the origin of much of the crime with which we have had to deal.

"A study of the record of our proceedings shows that all of the homicides and most of the graver, most desperate, and heinous crimes were committed by foreigners, who palpably have no understanding of the genesis or genius of American institutions. They not only have not been assimilated, but seemingly are unlikely under present conditions ever to be assimilable.

"The facts as to many of these crimes show the presence in this city of foreign colonies whose existence is a perpetual menace to the lives and property of our law-abiding and law-loving citizens. From the testimony of witnesses, some of whom were participants in these heinous crimes, it has been clearly revealed that interracial hatred, with their attendant feuds and vendettas, have been transplanted to this country. These feuds have been aggravated and perpetuated by the increase and extension of these foreign colonies.

COLONIES AN INCREASING MENACE.

"The formation and growth of these foreign colonies in our midst have subjected our institutions to a great strain. Unless their growth is prevented by the exclusion of countless thousands of like elements which are constantly arriving at the port of New York, these colonies will be a constantly increasing menace and may threaten the submersion of the American elements in our population.

"The securing of evidence and the taking of testimony as to most of the grave crimes has become next to impossible in the language of our country. Every additional immigrant of this type but adds to the difficulty of protecting the lives and property of the law-abiding section of the community, of those who are native birth or were readily assimilable. The cost of administering our courts and of maintaining a constantly increasing police force in order to cope with these law-defying elements is an ever-increasing burden to this community.

"In the face of these conditions our people may well pause and inquire whether it will be possible to keep the wellsprings of our institutions pure if they are to continue to be subjected to the infusions of such elements, elements which are not merely unassimilable but largely hostile to the fundamental principles of liberty. Our institutions were subjected to a great strain during the war by reason of the divided allegiance of certain foreign elements. This prevented the Nation from functioning unitedly in its efforts to preserve democracy.

"Unless steps are quickly taken to prevent the admission of those millions which wish to come, although hostile to our institutions, we are liable to be submerged by elements who have no devotion to the great ideals of human liberty, have no regard for justice, nor respect for the sacredness of human life. America would then cease to be a beacon light to lead the nations to the complete establishment of democracy.

"The stream of our national life can not rise higher than its source. To permit any further pollution of this stream is to jeopardize our national existence. To allow any further admixture of races in our midst is to intensify both our foreign as well as our domestic problems. It will foster disunion instead of promoting union. Instead of continuing as a nation of high ideals, we shall degenerate into a mere medley of races, a hodgepodge of nationalities.

"We therefore earnestly request the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as will prohibit the immigration into the country of all who can not read and write English, and who do not possess an intelligent understanding of the fundamental ideas of human liberty.

"We further request that comprehensive measures be taken for the education of every adult of foreign birth at least in the rudiments of simpler education such as will enable them to understand our form of government.

"WILLIAM SHADDOCK, Foreman.
"J. VAN V. SMITH, Secretary."

This statement is most significant in the light of Commissioner Wallis's figures. He reported 548,069 aliens arrived at the port of New York in the last 11 months. Of that number only 2,703 were sent back as unworthy. He also stated that during that time only 637 radicals and other undesirables had been deported.

The grand jury findings amplify the fact that all through certain centers of our congested population will be found European colonies, where no language is spoken outside of the language spoken in their own country, a fact which leads this grand jury to recommend that Congress pass a law prohibiting the entrance of immigrants who can not speak or read the English language, as a protection to the country and our institutions. For my own part I should think it would be a drastic requirement, and I would hesitate to go that far; but, my friends, I recognize the arguments on the other side of the question. I recognize the temperamental and the sentimental arguments. They are strong arguments. I recognize the economic argument, and in a sense that contention is pretty strong. But let me say that the economic argument on the part of the employers of unskilled labor which we hear—that we must have this immigration because American labor will not do the necessary unskilled work—I want to say that the very people who have persistently fought immigration limitations on that ground have been seriously paying the penalty for their unwisdom in the last few years. That very element pouring into our country offer the most fertile soil of un-American propaganda, led by the Fosters and the various anti-Government propagandists which have openly started the contention for sovietizing American industries.

That argument, though with some force, does not appeal to me as much as other arguments, but this is true. If I vote——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Ohio two minutes more.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, if I vote to put up the bars in the form of protection against the products of European labor, I must also vote to prevent European labor from coming here. [Applause.] To do one and not do the other is not consistent. While I respect the argument on the other side of this issue, yet the big thing here is what was mentioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]—the antigovernment movement that has been coming to our country, brought by men who know not of our institutions, who have no sympathy with our institutions—and it is with that that we must deal. We can not do less than put up the bars against a further influx of this undesirable group from Europe, and when we do that then we will make more effective the deportation act and it will assist us in getting rid of those already here. I want to emphasize in my last remarks that, after all, the big thing in America is not business. The big thing is the maintenance of the fundamental institutions of America.

Our present statutes are sufficient to guard against dangerous elements were they effectively enforced, which they are not. Our deportation statutes are sufficient to rid our country of alien enemies were they effectively enforced, which they are not. Antigovernment agitators who have reached our shores since the war ended have been arrested for incendiary speeches in public places.

Our laws are drafted to permit a desirable immigrant but to exclude the undesirable. I hesitate to vote for total exclusion, even for a limited time. I readily admit the value of a kind of immigration, and would willingly invite it were it possible to avoid the danger of importation of un-Americanism. Whatever be the value of immigration, we can not allow further admission of elements antagonistic to American ideals, principles, and institutions. Rather than destroy the social and political integrity of our country and its institutions by the surreptitious seeping through of the poisonous nostrums of Old World antigovernment dogmas, I am ready to vote complete exclusion of all immigration for at least such time as is necessary to deal with these elements already within our midst. Unless we can make sure that a more rigid enforcement of the present laws is respected by all officers, both on foreign as well as our own shores, we have no choice except to put up the bars against all immigration for a time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I concur most heartily in the views of the last speaker that something should be done to prevent the incoming of immigrants of disreputable or undesirable character, but I submit that this proposed measure is nothing less than an exhibition of panic. It is absurd for this House in its alarm to attempt to put up the barriers and exclude everybody. It is true that a great deal of anarchy and socialism and crimes of various kinds are to be found among certain types of immigrants. They are highly emotional; they go from one extreme to another. They swing like a pendulum. They love much and they hate deeply. Their emotionalism was displayed in the last election when they came very nearly turning everybody out who bore the Democratic imprint in New York City. They voted for HARDING three to one, these same immigrants. Jews, Germans, Irish, and Italians all voted, or many did in sufficient numbers in any event, to give you this sweeping victory. Is it not rather an ironical exhibition of gratitude that the very first practical piece of legislation you undertake in this House is to exclude their friends and their relatives from admission to our shores? I am very glad that you are showing your true colors, because in my speeches during the campaign I warned my naturalized fellow citizens that it would not be wise to place very much trust in the Republican Party. I warned them what would happen, and now they are going to reap the reward of their folly and misplaced confidence.

This bill will no doubt be passed. It has the apparent support of your organization in this House, and there is no doubt, judging from the way it was railroaded into this House by the Committee on Rules, that it is going to pass.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. The gentleman will have to pardon me, as I have only a moment. As to the tremendous figures quoted respecting idleness in the United States, personally I do not believe there are 2,000,000 men out of work in the United States. But if that be so, Mr. Speaker, is not that the very reason why you should not pass a panicky measure against immigration? Immigrants will not come to this country if there is no employment to be found. They are not wealthy men and women. They come here to find work, and if the work is not here, if they find that 2,000,000 of our own people are without employment, is there any probability that they will come along in very large numbers? So that the very argument upon which you rely falls to the ground. I can see no excuse for it except as an exhibition of panic and intolerance.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order to read a telegram which I received from Hon. W. T. Sanders, chairman of a meeting held at Athens, Ala., last Tuesday.

The telegram is as follows:

ATHENS, ALA., December 7, 1920.

Hon. E. B. ALMON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

At a large and representative meeting of our business men I have been requested to wire and urge you to use your strongest efforts for some measure of immediate relief of the farming interests of this section. The situation is really desperate. Unless the farmers can dispose of their remaining crop at a price approximating cost debts can not be paid, merchants can not meet their obligations, and, worst of all, practically no crop can be made in this section for the coming year. Can not the powers of the War Finance Corporation be invoked for immediate relief? Something must be done to preserve the spirit and morale of a whole people.

W. T. SANDERS,
Chairman of Meeting.

Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a resolution providing for the reestablishment of the War Finance Corporation and asking that the Federal Reserve Board permit member banks to extend liberal credit to farmers on the security of agricultural products, which resolution I hope will receive prompt and favorable consideration at the hands of the committee to which it will be referred, and that it be promptly passed in order that some relief may be granted along this line. The conditions referred to in this telegram not only apply to the South, where the cotton is not selling for one-half of what it costs to produce it, but no doubt the same conditions prevail in the cattle-raising and grain-growing districts of the Western States and other agricultural districts in the country. I trust that Congress will take some action at the earliest possible date which will result in immediate relief. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 151, noes 9.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R.

14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken on that, can not we have an agreement with respect to the division of time?

Mr. RAKER. Will not the gentleman agree, under the rule, that half of the time on that side in favor of the bill be used by those also on this side of the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, to save time I will state that we have an agreement to the effect that the time be quartered; that is, that one-quarter be handled by myself on this side in favor of the measure, one-quarter by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] in opposition——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise for information to ask if the rule does not provide for four hours' of general debate?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. CANNON. And when one is recognized he can yield to anybody he desires to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That solves the proposition right there.

Mr. CANNON. Then, let us have the general debate commence.

Mr. SABATH. The rule provides that there shall be four hours' of general debate, the time to be controlled, one-half by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] and one-half by any member of the minority of the committee opposing the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object if there is any request pending or if there is any to be made. We have adopted a rule and we ought to abide by it.

The SPEAKER. Before the resolution is adopted——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. RAKER. So that we may understand each other——

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is demanded. The regular order is the vote on the motion of the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14461, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14461, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as used in this act—

The term "United States" means the United States and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof except the Isthmian Canal Zone; but if any alien, or any alien seaman, leaves the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempts to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens, or to all alien seamen, respectively;

The term "immigration act" means the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States"; and the term "immigration laws" includes such act and all laws, conventions, and treaties of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens; and

The word "alien" includes any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed nor citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this act, from 60 days after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of 14 months next after its passage, the immigration of aliens to the United States is prohibited, and during such time it shall not be lawful for any alien to come from any foreign port or place, or, having so come, to remain within the United States.

SEC. 3. (a) Section 2 shall not apply to otherwise admissible aliens lawfully resident in the United States, nor to otherwise admissible aliens of the following status or occupations, when complying with the requirements of this section and with all other provisions of the immigration laws:

(1) Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees;

(2) Travelers or temporary sojourners for pleasure, business, or curiosity, who may enter the United States during the time of suspension of immigration for a period not exceeding six months each, which period may be extended in individual cases by the Secretary of State;

(3) Bona fide students who may enter the United States solely for the purpose of study at educational institutions particularly designated by them; and upon graduation, completion, or discontinuance of studies they shall not be entitled to remain in the United States.

(b) An alien belonging to one of the classes or persons enumerated in subdivision (a) shall be permitted to enter the United States only upon presentation of a valid passport or other official document in the nature of a passport (hereinafter referred to as a passport) satisfactorily establishing his identity, nationality, and to which of the classes so enumerated he belongs, together with a signed and certified photograph of the bearer attached. A wife, or a female child under 21 years of age, or a male child under 16 years of age, may be included in the passport of a husband or parent, but a photograph of each must be attached to the passport. Each male child 16 years of age or over must carry a separate passport.

(c) Each such passport must be viséed by an American consulate, or a diplomatic mission if specially authorized, in the country from which the holder starts on his trip to the United States, and if such country is not the country to which he owes allegiance the passport must also be viséed by a diplomatic or consular officer therein of his own country. In all cases the passport must also be viséed by an American consulate, or the diplomatic mission if specially authorized in the country from which the alien embarks for the United States, or if he comes by land, the country by which he enters the United States.

(d) Each alien coming within the provisions of this section, except a duly accredited Government official, must furnish to the American diplomatic or consular officer who visées the passport in the foreign country from which he starts on his trip to the United States, and to the American authorities at the port of entry or elsewhere in the United States, a written declaration setting forth: (1) The date and place of the bearer's birth; (2) the nationality and race of his father and mother; (3) the place of the bearer's last foreign residence and the other places, if any, where he has resided within the past five years; (4) if he has ever been in this country, the dates and objects of his visits and the places and addresses where he resided or sojourned; (5) the date set for his departure for the United States, the port of embarkation, and the name of the ship on which he is to sail, if he goes by water; (6) names and addresses of persons acquainted with the applicant in the country from which he starts and in the United States, if any; (7) the expected duration and object of his proposed visit to this country, the documentary or other proofs of such objects submitted, and the place or places in the United States where he expects to sojourn or reside; (8) that the bearer knows and understands the provisions of the immigration laws, excluding certain classes of aliens from the United States, and is certain that he does not fall within any of such classes; (9) that the bearer understands that if, on arrival at a port of the United States, he is found to be a member of a class excluded by the immigration laws, he will be deported if practicable, or, if for any reason deportation should be found to be impracticable, will be held in detention in an immigration station or other place of confinement, and that he is, with full understanding thereof, assuming all risks involved in a possible return trip in consequence of being rejected under such law.

(e) A wife or minor child who does not expect to reside with the husband or father in the United States must carry a separate declaration.

(f) Each declaration must be affirmed or sworn to before a consular officer, or a diplomatic officer of the United States if specially authorized, and signed in triplicate, and a photograph of the declarant must be attached to each copy with an impression of the official seal. The declaration must be made at least two weeks before the date of intended departure, except in cases of extraordinary emergency. One copy of the declaration must be filed in the embassy, legation, or consulate by which the passport is first viséed, one copy forwarded immediately to the Commissioner of Immigration or inspector in charge at the port of entry by which the declarant expects to enter the United States, and one copy fastened to the passport of the declarant in such a way that it may be removed upon his departure from the United States. The copy last mentioned must be presented with the passport to the official at the port of entry into this country who examines passports, and to the immigration official who inspects the holder, and to such other officials in the United States as may be authorized to inspect such documents.

SEC. 4. (a) A citizen of the United States 21 years of age or over, who is a resident of the United States, may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, apply to him for permission to bring into the United States or send for an otherwise admissible parent, grandparent, unmarried son under 21 years of age, unmarried or widowed daughter, grandson under 16 years of age whose father is dead, or unmarried or widowed granddaughter whose father is dead; and any alien who has declared, in the manner provided by law, his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and who is a resident of the United States, may make like application in reference to an otherwise admissible husband or wife, unmarried son under 21 years of age, or unmarried or widowed daughter.

(b) If the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that the entry into the United States of such relative would not be in violation of the immigration laws and that such relative is likely to prove a desirable resident of the United States, he may issue a permit to the applicant, under such regulations as he may prescribe, which shall authorize the immigration officers at the port of entry to examine such relative upon arrival at such port. Thereafter the right of such relative to admission shall be as provided by the immigration laws, except that it shall not be subject to the act entitled "An act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States, contrary to the public safety, approved May 22, 1918," or to the provisions of any proclamation, order, rule, or regulation made thereunder, and except that the literacy test may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, be waived in the case of such relative.

SEC. 5. Nothing in section 2 shall be held to prevent the importation of skilled labor under the conditions prescribed in the fourth proviso to section 3 of the immigration act, nor to the importation of persons employed as domestic servants.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be held to repeal the provisions of the joint resolution approved October 19, 1918, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or who have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces," or any amendment thereto.

SEC. 7. During the period of suspension provided for in section 2 otherwise admissible aliens who have resided continuously in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico for at least one year, and who are not persons of the classes hereinbefore exempted, may be temporarily admitted, for a period not exceeding six months, from such countries, under such rules governing entry, inspection, temporary stay, and departure as may be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor.

SEC. 8. Any alien who at any time after entering the United States is found to have been at the time of entry not entitled under this act to enter the United States, or to have remained therein for a longer time than permitted under section 3 or section 7, shall be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided for in sections 19 and 20 of the immigration act.

SEC. 9. The provisions of sections 18 and 20 of the immigration act, assessing a penalty for failure or refusal to accept, to detain, or guard safely, to return, and to transport to foreign destination aliens excluded or expelled from the United States, or to pay maintenance and deportation expenses of aliens, or for making any charge for the return of excluded or expelled aliens, or for taking any security for the payment of such charge, or for taking any consideration from aliens to be returned in case of landing, or for bringing to the United States any deported aliens within a year from date of deportation without the consent of the Secretary of Labor, shall apply to and be enforced in connection with the provisions of this act relating to the exclusion or expulsion of aliens.

SEC. 10. Willfully to give false evidence or swear to any false statement in connection with the enforcement of this act shall constitute perjury as such offense is defined in section 16 of the immigration act; and the provisions of sections 16 and 17 of the immigration act, prescribing methods of procuring evidence concerning aliens, and defining offenses and prescribing punishments therefor, shall apply to and be enforced in connection with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. Any person who substitutes any name for the name written in any document herein required, or any photograph for the photograph attached to any such document, or forges or in any manner alters any such document, or falsely personates any person named in any such document, or issues or utters any forged or fraudulent document, or presents to an immigrant inspector or other Government official any forged or fraudulent document, and any person other than the one to whom there has been duly issued any document prescribed by this act who presents to an immigrant inspector or other Government official any such document, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned for a term of not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 12. The Commissioner General of Immigration shall, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, issue such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be deemed necessary and appropriate to place this act in full force and operation, except that regulations for the viséing of passports under section 3 shall be made by the Secretary of State. Such regulations shall include special rules for the application of this act to the cases of aliens coming to the United States from or through contiguous foreign territory, and to the cases of aliens entering across the land boundaries for temporary stay or at frequent intervals; also special rules to insure that the provisions of this act, of the immigration act, or of any law, convention, or treaty relating to immigration shall not be violated by aliens arriving at ports of the United States employed on vessels as seamen, and that at the same time, the enforcement of such laws shall not interfere with the operation of the act approved March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea."

SEC. 13. This act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the general government thereof, unless and until it is superseded by an act passed by the Philippine Legislature and approved by the President of the United States to regulate in the Philippine Islands the subjects covered hereby, as authorized in the act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," approved August 29, 1916.

SEC. 14. The provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized to control half of the time, or two hours.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be notified when I have consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. What was the request?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I desire to be notified when I have consumed 20 minutes. I desire, if my colleagues will be generous, that I may be permitted to speak for that length of time without being interrupted.

Mr. RAKER. So as not to interrupt the gentleman and that we may understand as to the division of time, I understand the gentleman will yield me an hour, to be divided among my colleagues?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will make up his list—I am going to hang to the time as the rule provided—I will look at the gentleman's list as to the distribution of time.

Mr. RAKER. All right; that is satisfactory.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, many Members have been through these immigration debates in years past and know they become sharp and acrimonious. All phases of the matter of immigration and regulation of immigration are subject to much debate and much honest difference. Immigration hearings, particularly of late, cover everything from the cost of food up to the question of maintaining our form of government. The committee has held many hearings. This bill is an abridgment of a bill introduced last February, which was H. R. 12320. The report presented by the committee now contains the views of two Members of the minority, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. It is but fair to say for them that they have not acted as obstructionists. They are sincere in their objections. However, I notice in the minority views a statement to the effect that certain statements in the report on the bill are offensive. I hope that they will not be looked at in that sense. That charge can only refer to the statements concerning the examination of steerage passengers on two ships and to the possible statements made in the appendix, which carries the reports of the consular agents of the United States, paraphrased in the offices of the State Department and set forth in the report which accompanies H. R. 14461 exactly as sent to the chairman of the Immigration Committee. If they convey statements which are presumed to be facts, it is hardly my duty to soften them. The chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization becomes used to being called names. I would like to say at the outset, although I have been called so, I am not an alien hater at all. I come from a district that has 27 per cent of foreign born. I have no religious or racial feeling in this matter. I have not in the debate in the committee and hearings in the committee permitted matters of a racial or a religious tone to enter, and I sincerely hope that they will not come into this debate. I dislike to be personal, but I received only to-day a copy of a letter written to a western newspaper by Joseph Jacob, of Aberdeen, Wash., who acts sometimes as rabbi or minister, in which he replies to something the editor has said about me. Mr. Jacob writes to the editor:

> For your information permit me to say that Congressman JOHNSON is not, as you say editorially, a foreign-born citizen.

Mind you, Joseph Jacob is defending me, and says I am not a foreign-born citizen. My friends, it would make no difference if I were. He goes on to say:

> Mr. JOHNSON represents the district in which Aberdeen is situated, and from personal knowledge of Mr. JOHNSON'S past record I do not believe he is showing any more discrimination in his position as chairman of the Immigration Committee than Congressman KAHN, of California, would show if placed in the same position.

My friends, I have not received a greater compliment in a long time.

Mr. Jacob then says in his letter to the editor:

> The difference between you and Mr. JOHNSON is that you look at things from a purely sentimental standpoint while he must look at the immigration question from the standpoint of what is for the best of the greatest number of the American people alone.

And that is the way, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we must all approach this question. It is beyond the matter of sentiment, personal feeling, personal desire, and beyond racial differences. What is best for the United States is the question.

The problem arises from the numbers suddenly coming to the United States. The problem is made immediately pressing from the fact that nearly all of central Europe seems to be on the move. People there hurt themselves and hurt their countries in their panic to get away—to escape, to throw off the burden.

Right now they think their chance is here. It is not, in my opinion. We will help them most by stopping their migration. They can not all live if they stay there; they can not all live—certainly not in comfort—if they come here, and neither can we. Our best reports are that countless thousands are moving this way, selling everything, being robbed right and left, and actually fighting to secure the high-priced steerage tickets which steamship companies offer them. Further reports are that even if the people of the United States in their great desire to be humane and generous should let down every bar, permit every person to come from those countries who might be able to get on a ship within the next two or three years, that during that time thousands must die there of starvation unless they go to work there and work hard. You can not bring them all. You can not save them all. They can not till the fields while on the move. Starvation exists elsewhere in the world. In China deaths from famine are occurring by thousands. This very month there are appeals in our papers everywhere for contributions to save people in whole districts of China. We can not bring them here to save them; neither can we bring the people of central Europe.

Here we have the United States, with 105,000,000 of people, according to this census, and according to the census of 10 years ago 13,000,000 of us were unnaturalized. Steamships are bringing a new immigration, flooding Ellis Island, jamming in as it has never been jammed before. Only last night all available space on Ellis Island was crowded with people, many sleeping on cement floors, while on vessels out in the stream awaiting a chance to get in to that island were several thousand immigrants.

If we do not suspend immigration, we must build some more Ellis Island structures or open barracks, or divert immigration from the port of New York to Philadelphia, to Savannah, and other Atlantic ports, and at once. That is one phase of the problem.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take time to discuss any of the arguments heretofore presented, except to indorse those which were made during the debate on the rule. Europe needs every able-bodied man. Europe must raise food. Europe has debts to pay, governments to maintain. What should be construction there will be destruction here. If the desire to flee to America continues there, none of those countries will be helped.

Let me tell you how control by passport visé has worked since extreme war precautions were relaxed and since steamships have become available. You will remember that during the war we enacted legislation for the establishment of a passport system for persons going from and coming to the United States, the passport of those coming here to be from their country, viséed by our consular officers. Technically we are still at war, and that system prevails. Believing we would come to the end of the war period, Congress passed an act extending that passport provision, as far as it applied to aliens, until March 4 next. The war period will end. The passport-extension law will expire. That law is all we have now to hold out any part of the great alien population who would move in on us; all, I say, except the literacy test and certain physical requirements.

Now, many thought that the passport-visé plan would work as a great bar; but not so. It shuts out some revolutionists; there it stops. Briefly, I can say to you that the State Department does not find it can deny visés and passports beyond the rights of the Department of Labor, the latter's rights being described in the immigration laws. The State Department finds itself now in the matter of refusing visés restricted to the clauses of our immigration laws which deal with the deportations of anarchists and similar classes.

The State Department carries in its regulations the entire act which we passed in the last day of the last session, and all aliens who are anarchists or who advocate or advise the overthrow of government are reached by refusing to visé, if our consuls can find any information on which to warrant the refusal. Beyond that what happens? The total visés granted for three quarters, ending March 31, June 30, and September 30, at 17 principal consular offices were 274,962.

The total refusals of visés at those 17 offices were 2,443.

The refusals at Athens, Greece, were 34 out of 14,644 granted; at Belfast, Ireland, 4 refused and 4,950 granted; at Dublin, 147 out of 7,522; at Glasgow, 1 refused out of 6,460; at Bucharest, Roumania, none out of 6,171; at Warsaw, Poland, none out of 24,107; at Palermo, Italy, 210 out of 34,563; at Catania, Italy, none out of 21,570; Naples, Italy, 577 out of 79,654 granted; Prague, Czechoslovakia, 85 out of 13,752; Oporto, Portugal, 12 refused and 7,993 granted.

Let me say that this emigration to the United States in the last few months from Spain and Portugal is something new. It had been many years before we had any from those countries. One of my colleagues was on a ship last week in New York Harbor which was bringing about 2,200 Spaniards, all men.

And then, in Belgrade, Jugo-Slavia, there were 238 visés refused and 7,025 granted; Rotterdam, Holland, 349 refused out of 5,819; Vigo, Spain, 33 out of 3,471; Vienna, Italy, 159 out of 815; Goteborg, Sweden, 28 out of 3,656; Rome, Italy, 566 out of 32,790.

Now, as to the money received. Remember that since July 1 we have charged a dollar for the registration and $9 for the visé. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the total sum received was $472,936 for passport visés.

For the quarter ending September 30, the last received, it was $775,472. The larger fee proved to be no bar. Estimated on the business of one year up to June 30, it was calculated that the sum to be received for the year ending June 30, 1921, would be $3,101,889, but estimated on the basis of the last quarter it would be $8,744,413. The influx is on.

I am of the opinion we will do well to look at present at the immigration stampede from the viewpoint of an editorial published in the Saturday Evening Post, October 23, 1920, one paragraph of which says:

> We are cashing in on our immigration policy—our carelessness as to whom and how many we let in, and our indifference as to where they go and what they do, once they are in. We have a tremendous job on our hands to Americanize those who are here—a generation or two of hard work ahead of us. Then what of these new hordes? Is there really any good reason for us to bring them in to help us exploit our rapidly diminishing resources, to pump out our oil reserves faster, so that we can buy more automobiles to burn more gas? To cut down the last forest to make more lumber to house more undigestible citizens? To speed up to get out more ore to smelt so that we can build more ships to bring over more men to work in the steel mills? Why not develop what is left of our country slowly, sanely, safely, and solidly?

I wish that all could read the article by Kenneth L. Roberts, entitled "The goal of central Europeans," in the Saturday Evening Post for November 6, 1920.

To those who say there is a genuine need for more labor—common labor and farm labor—let me say that the present influx bears little indication of desire, inclination, experience or fitness to meet that need. During the year ended June 30, 1920, there came to the United States 430,000 aliens of whom but 2.8 per cent—12,190—were farmers; and but 3.5 per cent—15,257—were farm laborers. Bring in two or three million such aliens if you will and farmers and other employers will still be crying for help.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the new immigration is not of the kind or quality to meet the real needs of our country. We are being made a dumping ground. We are receiving the dependents, the human wreckage of the war; not the strength and virility that once came to hew our forests, to break our virgin soil, to delve in our mines, and to toil in our factories. And worst of all they are coming in such numbers and at a time when we are unable adequately to take care of them.

Commissioner Copeland of the New York Health Service reports on December 4, 1920, as follows:

> The question of immigration is one of serious moment to the city. The great influx of aliens to our port results in the settling in the city of a considerable number of these immigrants. Our housing facilities are now seriously overcrowded and no provision is being made to take care of our normal increase, without considering these foreign hordes.

The same situation obtains everywhere. Every large city in the country is overcrowded. A congressional commission at this moment is endeavoring to point a way toward relief, but so far without success.

If the end of the immigrant flood were in sight the situation would be far less serious. But all reports agree that we have seen only the beginning. The report which the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has submitted contains a digest of statements made by our consular officers abroad. I urge Members of the House to read it. You will note that people of every land are trying to find ways and means to escape their war-made miseries; that they are unfit for life in America, for the strain of competition in this country, or for life in the ghettos of our great cities, whither most of them will tend.

Dr. Rupert Blue, former Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, reports from Paris, December 3—only last Thursday—after an inspection trip, that emigration from Europe for the next few years will be limited only by the availability of shipping. Dr. Blue further says:

> If emigration is permitted soon from Germany, Hungary, and Austria, the number of potential emigrants can not be calculated.

Every citizen of the United States who has been abroad recently returns with the same statement. Ole Hanson, former mayor of Seattle, returned November 21 from a trip made for the purpose of studying the situation. Our committee asked him to come before it. He telegraphed in reply:

> Get data as to passports issued from Danzig, Prague, Warsaw, Vienna, Naples. Cable our consuls for information. Call heads of steamship companies. Your committee does not need me to convince its members of the danger to the United States. If it does, for God's sake get a new committee.

A letter dated November 14, 1920, has just been received from a prominent American journalist who has been visiting all the nations of Europe. It says:

> For heaven's sake do what you can to get some legislation which will prevent all the refugees from all Europe from pouring into America. The conditions are simply fierce in all ports of importance. Consuls are helpless. They frequently get orders to visé the passports of individuals who are clearly undesirable. There are at least half a million prospective emigrants from Poland alone. Many of them have passports already viséd. I wish you could see the crowds in front of American consulates. There isn't a single honest-to-God worker in any of them. They are all bound for the cities and will undoubtedly add to the trials and tribulations of our country. There are all sorts of Bolsheviki in the prospective emigrants. Passport sharks are reaping a fortune. Forgers and tricksters are fixing out all sorts of folks with papers. Applicants who can't get by in one place are shipped to another. Our consuls, so far as I know, are doing a noble job in holding off the gang, but they must have help and legislation which will strengthen their hands.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is designed to suspend immigration for two years, less two months considered necessary to take care of those who have started. It is hoped that during two years the committee or a select committee or a joint committee can find time to revise and rebuild from the ground up the immigration laws of the United States, which are somewhat hard to understand from the fact that they have been amended, and amended, and amended, to meet conditions as they have arisen during past years in the United States.

This bill admits travelers for business, pleasure, or curiosity for a space of six months' duration, renewable by application to the Secretary of State. That provision is in lieu of the present line of exemptions in the present law, which runs all the way from nurses to civil engineers, but does not exempt other engineers. These exemptions have been made by arbitrarily voting up and down in the committee in past years. This measure provides visés for all those who come in here as travelers for business, pleasure, or curiosity. It lets in actual students for a designated period of study at designated institutions. This bill also admits the direct blood line of relatives of citizens of the United States on the certificate of the Secretary of Labor and waives the literacy test for those relatives.

The reason for that is this: The present law says that a father or grandfather, 55 years old or older, shall be admitted if illiterate, and children under 16. The literacy test applies to others, but when a relative arrives under such conditions the relative in this country usually finds a way to give bond to secure his admission on probation. Our new plan, then, is that those of our citizens having in the old country fathers, mothers, grandfathers, and grandmothers, or children or half-orphan grandchildren may by securing a permit in the Department of Labor here send for those relatives with a reasonable certainty that once they start for America they may come through. We want to do away with delay at Ellis Island. Of course, those who come in will come practically on the guarantee of the relative who brings them in as to his ability to support them, to provide for them in case of sickness, or insanity, or the like. All will come subject to all of the other provisions of the present law.

This bill undertakes to do a proper thing by letting those here who have first papers or who will take out first papers send for wives or husbands and dependent children of either wife or husband, a proper exemption in any attempt to suspend immigration for any length of time.

This bill permits the going and coming of citizens of Canada, New Foundland, Cuba, and Mexico, as under the present law, with the addition of a six months' stoppage, which I think if we have not already provided for in the bill can be arranged by a clause providing for a renewal. The bill undertakes to add provisions to the immigration laws, but does not break down the laws in any detail. Some little question has been raised about the conditions and provisions of this bill with respect to a gentleman's agreement which is attached to our treaty with Japan. My opinion is, my friends, that it does not interfere with it at all. It is provided that those who are here and 21 years old, citizens, either naturalized or born here, may send for certain relatives. The Japanese here have that privilege now under the present laws in certain cases, and in other cases we have estimated that the number who would reach the age of 21 years in the next two years, either here or in Hawaii, would be very small.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. We have now what is known as the Chinese exclusion act. That remains in force, does it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This does not change that in any respect whatever. The last section safeguards Chinese exclusion.

Mr. ROWE. Does this bill permit the entry of household servants?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will answer that question and also explain the skilled-labor clause. A Member reading the bill hastily might think that this bill specifically lets in skilled labor. The clause carries only the present law, to the effect that if skilled labor can not be found in the United States—as, for example, a diamond cutter—he may be brought here. The law also provides that Americans going abroad may contract to bring back with them a nurse or a cook, and the provision in this bill in regard to servants is to continue that exemption.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understand there is a provision under which you can bring in laborers from Canada and Newfoundland and Cuba and Mexico for six months?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; subject to the literacy test. We do not undertake to change present law on that. If the Secretary of Labor had the right in years past to lift the head tax, he has still the right now.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is it the gentleman's construction that he has that right?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; I do not think he has, and I do not think he ever had that right.

Mr. HUDSPETH. He claims to have the right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington has consumed 22 minutes and now yields 15 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE].

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I want to call it to the attention of the committee that this bill is for a temporary suspension of immigration. There is a misapprehension which seems to be shared by a good many people on the outside that this is a start on a permanent policy to keep nearly everybody out. The members of the committee do not so understand it. They do think, however, that a temporary suspension of immigration is necessary now, admittedly, as an expedient made necessary by the present conditions. It is necessary in order to put our own house in order, and it is necessary in order to work out a plan covering the whole subject. Most of us have our own ideas as to what those plans should be. It is the most contentious subject in the world. It will involve more difference of views, perhaps, more difference of viewpoints advocated in the hearings before the committee, than any other subject in the world. Personally I hope the time may come when we can have adequate inspection on the other side, when we can be assured that when a newcomer comes here he will be started on his course of becoming a useful citizen of the United States and not be subject to harpies and pirates of all kinds, both of his own nationality and other nationalities; that he will be started right and be kept in the right path. To that end I myself would advocate some system of registration, by which we should know, until the newcomer becomes a citizen of the United States, who he is, and by which we may know where he is, and if after a certain time, not unreasonably long, he should not become a citizen of the United States, and should be unable or unwilling to qualify for citizenship, he should go back.

But those are plans for the future. They may not be shared by many other Members of the House. The point that is pressing upon us now is to guard what is our own, what belongs to us and our children. We should be glad if we could give freely to all the rest of the world; but if we should try to give too much, we might lose not only the power to give but the substance of the thing which we would like to give, and consequently we simply must hold back for the present. [Applause.]

This is our country. If we talk about "rights" of foreigners to come here, except as conferred by treaty, I should answer, using an old expression, "There ain't no such animal." It must be an attribute of sovereignty for us to be able to say absolutely, and without its being subject to anybody's review except that of our own conscience and treaties that we have uttered, who shall come here and on what terms and conditions he shall come. If we wanted to be so unreasonable we could say that no redheaded man should come here, and in that event no one who has red hair would have a legal right to come here in violation of such a rule. The question must be addressed to our own consciences and our own interests. So I say it is a question for us to determine, but in determining it we can refer also in our minds to what is fair to the foreigner; and among other things we want to cut down the number of unemployed which now, notwithstanding what the gentlemen of the opposition may say, is increasing, and the increase of which is largely composed of aliens. We want to cut down the amount of overcrowding, or at least not to increase it, and every member of the committee and every Member of this Congress who has visited the congested districts in our large cities knows of the overcrowding there, and knows how injurious it is not only to the people of that immediate locality but to the whole remainder of the community.

Just a few days ago—to be specific, the Friday before Congress convened—I visited a ship in New York Harbor. It was the Providence, out of Palermo, 14 days at sea, and 3 days in the harbor. There were 1,931 steerage passengers on that vessel. The conditions were horrible. The people were crowded, lining up for their meals, if you could say "lining up," because they were in a solid mass in a space no larger than that from the rail to the front row of seats here. It was almost impossible for anybody to get through.

We went downstairs to the sleeping quarters. The room that we got into happened to be the women's sleeping quarters, but we were not intruding upon anyone's privacy, because there is no privacy in the steerage of such a vessel. There might possibly have been room to turn around in front of the double-tiered bunks if the space had not been full of squirming children almost too weak and miserable to squall. And the stench of the whole place was enough to fairly stifle your breath. You felt that you were being crushed under an enormous weight, merely from the odor of that place. Thank God the smell of onions to a slight extent neutralized that from the indescribably filthy latrines, but the floor was frightfully dirty. And yet women were sitting there and trying to feed their children.

That vessel had been in that harbor three days, and would be there two days more, and the reason why it was there at that time was because it was not possible to take those immigrants at the island, and there were four other vessels in the harbor in the same condition, and at the island there were 2,020 people who were being temporarily detained, because they were rejected and had to go back, or because they could not yet comply with our regulations in time to let them be released immediately.

I asked the commissioner to send me a memorandum of the detained rejected cases on board the Providence, and I got his statement this morning.

The total number of steerage passengers was 1,931.

Held for special inquiry, 267.

Temporarily detained, 364. Of course a great many of those will be admitted later.

Sent to hospitals, 47.

Stowaways, 9.

Total, 687.

Here are some interesting figures:

Number having no money, 319.

Number having less than $5, 196.

Number having less than $10, 198.

Number having less than $20, 425.

Or a total of 1,138 who had less than $20, or more than half of the total number of steerage passengers on that vessel.

Incidentally let me call your attention to the fact that our present immigration laws do not require any specific amount to be in possession of the incomer. He is supposed to have enough so that he will not become a public charge. In Canada he has to have $50 on his person when he gets there, and I have read in the newspapers that by an order in council in Canada that amount has just been increased to $250.

Now, one of the beneficial results from a temporary suspension of immigration will be that it will avoid the misguiding and mistreatment of new arrivals. Commissioner Wallis, at Ellis Island, tells me that the other day they had 34 taxicab drivers under surveillance for supposed imposition upon newly arrived immigrants, and they cited one case where, a man being advised that the fare to a certain place in town would be 40 cents, he produced three $10 gold pieces and asked if that would be enough.

Incidentally, I want to pause here to pay to Commissioner Wallis a very small part of the tribute of gratitude which he has abundantly earned both from the American people and from those who we hope may later become Americans. If they qualify themselves for that privilege, their first hours at Ellis Island will have given them a little insight into the combined justice and humanity which we want the world to think is a part of our Republic. By contrast to one of his predecessors who spent most of his time in writing books about "uplifting" and in helping those of the immigrants who were unfriendly to our system, Mr. Wallis does the actual uplifting and is primarily interested in the immigrants who are likely to become the same kind of 100 per cent American that he is himself. He believes, as I do, that many of them can become that kind of American, even without the generations of American ancestry which he himself has behind him. He knows, as we all do, that some of them will never become American and will strive to destroy all that the word means to us.

Last December the chairman of this committee and other members of the committee went down New York Harbor to see safely on board the Buford 249 people who were deported to Europe under the provision of our law. Among those was a very bright boy by the name of Bukhanob. He was 17 years old, and for two years he had been a teacher of anarchy among the foreign-born children in New York. We hope that by this temporary suspension of immigration we will avoid the possibility of the children and young people coming fresh from Europe, with their minds open to any impression that they may receive here, especially from their own countrymen, falling into the hands of boy or men teachers like Bukhanob. We want to start to build our fence on the other side to keep out such teachers of destruction.

A few years ago we had an industrial war in my own State. We had a tent colony composed partly of people who were moved out of houses owned by the company because they were on strike, but largely filled with the male members of their families, and these were in armed rebellion against the authority of the State and were firing upon the State troops. There were 19 different languages spoken in that little tent colony. Among the men killed in conflict with the troops of the State there were many upon whose bodies were found papers showing that they had recently come from the Balkans, who had been soldiers in the wars of eastern Europe, doubtless imported for the purpose of taking part in those industrial disturbances.

How much more time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. VAILE. Gentlemen of the committee, in those four minutes I will not try to make an argument. I want just briefly to recall to your minds a picture with which you have already familiarized yourselves in a thousand different ways. The other day I saw a lady in New York. She is a very dependable sort of a lady. She is broad of shoulder and deep of chest. She stands there holding in her hand, you might say, a night light. In her left hand is a tablet. You might well compare her to a nurse. She has the strong back of nurses that I have seen in my own home. She is the nurse for the ideals of liberty, progress, and constitutional government for our people. [Applause.]

Several hundred years ago my ancestors bumped up against Plymouth Rock. The family have mostly moved West, but I have two relatives, two old ladies, who still live in Massachusetts on a farm which has been in the family for over 200 years. They have a foreman, a very capable man, by the name of Ginsidio. Most of the people in the neighborhood have similar names. There are lots of people in my town with similar names, and mostly they are good people and good neighbors.

You go through Indiana and Ohio and you see where enormous forests have been cut down by the white man developing the country, very wastefully, to be sure. We might well take lessons from other countries where they do not allow such waste. But our middle country is now full of cities with schools and churches and factories, enormous industries which developed the natural resources of the country at a time when it was still permitted to develop them.

Go on across through Iowa and Nebraska, where they are farming thousands of acres with tractors. A little farther on in my country our American pioneers discovered the golden heart of the mountains and brought water to irrigate vast areas, brought it sometimes clear across a watershed by vast engineering works; go across the desert and let me take you out to San Francisco Bay, where some members of the committee were last summer, and you will see the genius of the men of our race in reclaiming the islands in that great delta of the San Joaquin. Some islands contain 6,000 acres. They are being reclaimed by great dredges costing half a million dollars apiece, which scoop up 2 cubic yards of earth in a minute and a fraction, making of it a dike along the sides of the islands. That is all done by the men of our race, and while they have been doing it they have everywhere established American institutions and American homes. Step inside those islands and you will see there a very industrious, remarkable, wonderful people, putting little newspaper umbrellas over each tender plant. You there have a picture of our race devoted to certain ideas, accustomed to a certain mode of progress, working those ideas out on a tremendous scale. Other races come in who are intensive workers. We admire them. We applaud their thrift and industry, and we could well afford to take some lessons from them. But that does not mean that we should give them our country.

Now, go on up the coast and you will see a great white peak arising apparently out of the sea. The Indians have a name for that peak; they call it Tacoma, the great nourishing breast. Between the noble nurse with her calm brow, her night light, and her tablet, standing at our eastern door, and that great nourishing breast is the cradle of liberty under the law of equal rights guaranteed by representative government. That cradle, the hope of the world, is the God-blessed United States of America. It is our sacred trust to protect it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the flood of immigration into this country from practically every nation of Europe presents a problem demanding the thoughtful and earnest consideration of every American citizen. With the multitude of great issues crowding here for solution, a proper settlement of the immigration question is rated as a matter of the first importance for the consideration of this Congress and some kind of effective action without further delay is deemed imperative.

For more than two years the question of limiting or suspending immigration has been widely discussed, bills have been introduced, hearings held before the Committee on Immigration, and various measures reported to the House, but no definite action has resulted except the extension of the provisions of the wartime passport regulations.

For the first year and one-half after the close of the World War public sentiment very properly demanded the apprehension and deportation of certain classes of aliens then in this country. These may be classified substantially as follows:

1. Enemy aliens who had been actively against our Government in the prosecution of the war and who had aided and assisted its enemies.

2. Those aliens who were advocating and teaching the overthrow of the Government of the United States and those who were members of organizations teaching and advocating the overthrow of this Government by force or violence.

3. Those aliens who having taken out their first citizenship papers avoided the draft by claiming exemption on account of their alienage and thereby refusing to defend the flag under whose protection they had come, remaining at home and taking the jobs of genuine Americans who were fighting for their freedom.

As to the first two classes Congress discharged its duty by providing the necessary legislation. Adequate laws were enacted providing for the apprehension and deportation of such aliens, but these laws were administered in such a way that the intent of Congress was avoided rather than executed. Consequently, while a goodly number has been deported, there still remain in this country thousands who have advocated and still teach and advocate the destruction of our form of government. The organizations and associations teaching the overthrow by force or violence of the established Government of this country are still intact with increasing membership. They are opposed to the fundamental principles upon which our institutions rest. In my judgment their ranks will be materially augmented if the present indiscriminate influx from foreign countries continues.

This phase of the question still demands continued vigilance and vigorous action. It opens up a fine field for demonstration work for those who really believe in the doctrine of America first. It also furnishes sufficient reasons for early action by Congress in a comprehensive way upon the whole immigration and naturalization question. These destructive and revolutionary organizations, such as the I. W. W., the Union of Russian Workers, the Communist Party, the International Left Wing Socialists, and other like and allied associations, 90 per cent of whose membership is alien, have been and are now putting forth, secretly and otherwise, the most insidious propaganda and teaching the most dangerous doctrines ever known to the people of this country. They are also in a combined effort to increase their numbers and recruit their ranks from European countries where such doctrines are common, and perhaps to some extent excusable, because of conditions existing there, but there is no justification or basis for such theories in this country.

The average American citizen rarely takes the time to consider, or has the opportunity to investigate, the real force and meaning of the teachings to which I have referred and by which it is sought to undermine and destroy the structure of his Government. The plan and process by which these teachings, doctrines, and propaganda are finally to be put into operation are as follows:

1. The capture of all products and means and sources of production.

2. The blowing up of all barracks.

3. The murder of law-enforcing officials.

4. The burning of all public records identifying private ownership of property.

5. The destruction of all boundary lines and fences indicating and identifying private property.

6. The destruction of all instruments of indebtedness.

Now, it is very plain that any man or organization that believes in or teaches such doctrines or advocates such processes of carrying them into effect is opposed to the institution of the State as we understand it, and is planning the overturn of the Government of the United States.

Among the basic principles upon which our Government was founded and upon which it rests are the guaranties of personal and property rights. The American citizen is made secure in the ownership and enjoyment of his property, honestly acquired, whether that ownership embraces a mansion or the humblest cottage in the land. It matters not whether his possessions be great or small, behind his title with all the rights and privileges emanating therefrom stands the force and power of his Government. This is the force that makes his title good and his enjoyment secure. To put into operation the revolutionary theories outlined, all these rights and guaranties must be destroyed, and this can be only by the wrecking of the Government and destruction of the Constitution.

This doctrine is so revolting to the average citizen of this country that when once brought specifically to his attention with its appalling effects it meets with instant condemnation—the American workingman has condemned it and the old-time American socialist has repudiated it. Yet the propaganda continues, and if current reports are true, secret votes have been taken by these organizations here to determine whether or not the United States should join Russia by setting up soviet rule in America.

Measured by our standards a soviet or bolshevist government is founded on lawlessness and exists in violation of those principles and conditions that make orderly civilization possible.

A recent statement of the municipal civil-service commissioner of the city of New York as appearing in the New York Times of November 20, 1920, is as follows:

> Clandestine societies have been organized to seek to mold the plastic minds of children in the hope that destructive ideals will be implanted so that when every effort of this generation has failed to cause any revolution in this country another generation will be schooled to become active in the same cause. Two Yorkville societies have gone to the point of hiring buses to take school children up and down Fifth Avenue pointing out mansions and churches coveted by these propagandists for public use under soviet rule. He declared that every effort was made on these trips to fill the minds of the children with the thought that with the coming of the communist or soviet revolution these places would be set aside for their pleasure and enjoyment, and that it was only necessary to join the movement to overturn the American Government to have joys never known by them before. Boy orators on bolshevism have been trained to make soap-box speeches on school grounds, and there attempt to sway the minds of young hearers toward revolution instead of toward emulation of historic figures in the annals of this country.

When I say that aliens who come to this country and segregate themselves in organizations to forward any such propaganda as this are a menace to America, I am sure that I voice the sentiment of every true American, whether of native or foreign birth or parentage, and also of every immigrant who has come here with the honest purpose of becoming an American citizen. When a foreigner comes to this country he is not supposed to bring any new ideas about how this Government should be conducted, and it is not his province on landing to point out what in his estimation constitute the errors of its founders or to unfurl any new flags.

Something must be done to protect America and to preserve its institutions; to retain it as a land of equal opportunity with its guaranties of personal and property rights, free speech, free press, and religious liberty. Such action on our part should not and would not be actuated by feelings of antagonism toward any country in the world or its inhabitants. It could not be construed as any lack of interest or sympathy with impoverished, distressed, or oppressed peoples anywhere. The action is demanded on the grounds of national security and protection. I quote from a recent report of the grand jury of Kings County, New York:

> Unless steps are quickly taken to prevent the admission of these millions which wish to come, although hostile to our institutions, we are liable to be submerged by elements who have no devotion to the great ideals of human liberty, have no regard for justice, nor respect for the sacredness of human life. America would then cease to be a beacon light to lead the nations to the complete establishment of democracy.
> The stream of our national life can not rise higher than its source. To permit any further pollution of this stream is to jeopardize our national existence. To allow any further admixture of races in our midst is to intensify both our foreign as well as our domestic problems. It will foster disunion instead of promoting union. Instead of continuing as a Nation of high ideals, we shall degenerate into a mere medley of races, a hodgepodge of nationalities.
> We therefore earnestly request the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as will prohibit the immigration into the country of all who can not read and write English, and who do not possess an intelligent understanding of the fundamental ideas of human liberty.

It is imperative that we should now make possible an opportunity of investigating conditions at home; to take stock of what we have in the way of unassimilated foreign elements and also in relation to those who can not be assimilated or adjusted to American ideals and made fit subjects for American citizenship. In order to do this it is necessary to suspend immigration, with very few exceptions, for some definite period. Two years, being the life of the incoming Congress, appears reasonable in view of the fact that it gives opportunity for comprehensive legislation. This bill provides such a suspension and contains exceptions whereby relatives of American citizens in foreign countries may come to the United States. This is in recognition of the immigrant who has become an American citizen.

Immigrants are landing at Ellis Island at the rate of from three to five thousand per day. To this point comes about 87 per cent of our immigrants. According to the lowest estimates, from a million and one-half to two million will be admitted in the next 12 months. The volume is limited only by transportation facilities and steamship capacity.

All available space has been contracted for months ahead, and it is stated upon the best authority that the steamship companies operating between New York and European points could contract their full capacity at this time for 10 years ahead.

It is estimated that there are now ready to come as soon as conditions permit, from Austria and Germany, 10,000,000; from Italy, 5,000,000; from Russia, 10,000,000; from Poland, 1,000,000 (recently 311,000 applications for passports were made in one day by Poles); from Spain and other countries, 5,000,000. No one has expected much immigration from Spain, yet on November 29, 1920, 2,063 Spanish immigrants were on Ellis Island. It is useless for anyone to endeavor to minimize the danger and complications arising from this unprecedented influx of immigrants. It simply amounts to unrestricted and indiscriminate dumping into this country of people of every character and description from all the nations of Europe. Demoralized, discontented, and restless Europe simply seeks to move over to America.

It is impossible to assimilate and Americanize this conglomerate mass in such huge proportions. Unfortunately, a sentiment has grown up in Europe that to receive with open arms and provide for her teeming and distressed population is the duty of America. Hence many of them come here demanding rather than requesting. A large percentage of this immigration has no thought of coming into American citizenship, has no idea or estimate as to the character of our institutions. The controlling motive and object sought is to escape burdens and avoid the deplorable conditions existing in their own countries.

Unless the tide is checked and some greater restrictions placed upon immigration the flow from overpopulated and economically impoverished countries will continue until there is no longer any inducement in the United States as against the home country. That is to say, until our density of population and economic condition approximates that of the country whose standard is lowest.

The security of our institutions, the preservation of our ideals, the protection and welfare of our people—all Americans, whether native born or naturalized—demand that we should avoid assuming a burden that must eventually force such conditions in this country. The American standard of living for every class, calling, business, or occupation is to-day the highest in all the world. The Congress should act promptly and effectively for the maintenance and continuation of this standard.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in my remarks this morning I referred to the importations of farm products. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating some figures that I have lately received from the United States Tariff Commission on farm-products importation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks that I made earlier in the day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. RAKER. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from New York. Under the rule, as I understand, I have control of two hours against the bill. I yield one hour of the two to the gentleman from New York, believing that he will have the right to yield some of that time to gentlemen on the other side who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair would call my attention to the fact when I have occupied 20 minutes. Mr. Chairman, the great trouble is not with the present immigration law. The more we tinker with it, instead of endeavoring to have the law administered properly as it is, the more certain we are to fail to remedy any abuses which exist.

I take it that every man in this House does not want a single person to enter the United States who, after coming here to remain permanently, is not going to become an American citizen. When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] referred to the necessity of Americanizing those who are Americans by nativity or adoption, I think he touched the crux of the whole question. I believe he is in error, however, regarding crimes in New York, as the New York Times of to-day's date gives the figures for the last six years as follows:

Crimes reported—11 months.

	1920	1919	1918	1917	1916	1915
Murder	190	234	223	236	186	222
Felonious assault	2,587	2,537	2,334	2,591	3,466	3,233
Assault and robbery	1,007	1,133	849	864	886	849
Burglary	6,830	7,398	7,412	9,450	9,893	11,611
Total	10,614	11,292	10,838	13,141	14,431	15,885

This shows quite a decrease. Per 100,000, during 1919, the homicide rate was as follows:

Memphis, Tenn	55.9
Savannah, Ga	42.0
Atlanta, Ga	40.8
Charleston, S. C	30.8
Nashville, Tenn	24.7
New Orleans, La	23.3
St. Louis, Mo	16.5
Washington, D. C	14.8
Louisville, Ky	14.1
San Francisco, Calif	12.0
Chicago, Ill	11.6
Cleveland, Ohio	11.1
Seattle, Wash	10.7
Los Angeles, Calif	9.5
Indianapolis, Ind	9.1
Pittsburgh, Pa	8.9
Baltimore, Md	8.0
Cincinnati, Ohio	7.5
Newark, N. J	6.4
Philadelphia, Pa	6.2
Hartford, Conn	6.0
Boston, Mass	5.7
Providence, R. I	5.6
Minneapolis, Minn	5.4
New York, N. Y	5.0
Buffalo, N. Y	5.0
Spokane, Wash	4.8
Rochester, N. Y	4.5
Reading, Pa	4.4
Dayton, Ohio	2.7
Milwaukee, Wis	2.5

I have given these statistics because they demonstrate beyond description that crime is no less in cities where most of the population is native born. If we take Washington we can see at a glance that such is the fact. Washington has 435,000 residents, yet 53,000 were arrested last year.

I have repeatedly called the attention of the House to the fact that the only way to handle the immigration and naturalization problem is to administer the law and provide sufficient machinery to do it. I was up along the Canadian border 10 days ago and I found 76 points of entry into the United States, and although under our law two doctors are supposed to examine every person, we only had 23 doctors along the whole border to attend to that great work. At Quebec there was coming into the United States 700 immigrants from Italy and other places, yet there was only 1 doctor there to perform the task of examination.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Certainly.

Mr. SABATH. Is not that due to the fact that the House has refused to appropriate a sufficient amount of money for that purpose?

Mr. SIEGEL. I know that is responsible for it. I admit that up to date we have apparently been interested more in seeing how much money we could obtain as a head tax than to remedy abuses. We have collected $11,000,000 during the last nine years, but we have failed to appropriate a sufficient amount to pay inspectors a living wage and to provide sufficient doctors to carry out the law.

I have been over to Ellis Island any number of times. I have noticed these conditions. A year ago last November I urged the passage of a resolution by which the Committee on Immigration could look things over. I think the House will bear witness to the fact that I have repeatedly urged proper appropriations, going before our Committee on Appropriations, and I have urged sufficient naturalization machinery. I repeat now that you never will be able to say that you have performed your full duty until you provide sufficient naturalization machinery in the shape of clerks and judges deeply interested in that important work. Eight hundred thousand dollars above all of the appropriations into the Treasury of the United States is the profit we have received from naturalizing aliens.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. RAKER. Speaking of naturalization, if this bill goes through, as it will, that will give time for the committee to go into all these questions of naturalization, so that the evils now existing might be remedied.

Mr. SIEGEL. I have heard that for five years and a half since I have been on the committee. We have put it off during the entire time, not because we have been neglectful but practically powerless. The reason why is that we do not have the power to make appropriations. If our committee had the power to make appropriations, we would have acted long ago and provided a contented and sufficient administration force, not only for the immigration but of the naturalization laws as well.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to enter into a long discussion of the question of immigration in general. Even under this drastic bill you recognize that you can not have complete suspension of immigration, and yet what are you trying to do? You are saying to the Secretary of Labor, "You must determine in each particular instance who is to come into the United States." A man may have become a citizen of the United States. Some judges admit men to citizenship while their wives are yet on the other side, and yet through error or otherwise no provision has been made in this bill by which a man could send for his wife. No provision is in the bill, although a man be a citizen, under which he can send for a younger brother or sister who happens to be on the other side. The war came along and many men who were here, and aliens, fought for Uncle Sam. They donned the uniform and they were allowed to become citizens under our laws. Under this bill such men can not send for younger brothers or sisters, no matter what the urgent reason for it or what the age of the brother or sister might be. I might at this time call the attention of the House to the fact that 213,000 men, aliens, who could have claimed exemption, entered the Army. We made them citizens, yet you say they can not send for a brother or a sister under any conditions.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN. Is the gentleman contemplating offering any amendment along that line?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; I expect to offer amendments along that line. A declarant is still further circumscribed under this bill, no matter how loyal he might have been. There are courts that still take the view that as long as you are simply a declarant you will not be admitted to citizenship while your wife and children are on the other side. The man might want to send for his wife and children and at the same time bring her widowed mother along, who is perhaps 60 or 65 years old. He can not do it under this bill. The mother-in-law might have taken care of the children and death may have removed the mother, but no exception is made.

I was at Ellis Island a few weeks ago with one of my colleagues, Mr. GOULD, and we saw an old woman 78 years of age, a grandmother, bringing over three tots, 3, 6, and 9 years of age, whose mother and father had been killed in Poland, and who had no relatives here of direct blood. This old lady's sister, who is pretty well to do, living in Cincinnati, was sending for them. If this bill had been on the statute books that could not have been done. We saw them at Ellis Island waiting in what is called the railroad room, and many people were touched by the scene. A friend of a United States Senator, who was along with us, a colonel, was very much impressed by the pitiful sight. Yet under this bill, if it had been a law, you could not have brought them in. Under this bill you would not have allowed and you will not be able to allow Mrs. McSwiney to come in from Ireland, to remain in this country permanently, because she has no one here who is a relative.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Can not Mrs. McSwiney stay here for six months under this bill?

Mr. SIEGEL. If she wanted to, but if she wanted to stay here permanently, if this bill goes into effect, she could not do it, because she has no father or mother here.

Mr. SWOPE. How does the gentleman know?

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, I know that to be a fact. I have a letter which was sent to me by a newspaper man on the Baltimore American, who has a little niece in Ireland. He is a good citizen and held in high esteem. In the letters he described conditions in Belfast. Under this bill he could not bring this neice from Ireland to the United States. The conditions there are such that she desires to get away from them, and she appeals to him to help her to come over here. If this bill should go into effect this girl, under 21 years of age, would not be able to come over.

It can be readily seen how, with the best of intentions, gross, inhuman injustice will be done by the bill. You have proceeded further. You are giving the Secretary of Labor power to determine, even though the applicant here is a citizen, whether any of these relatives shall come over, namely, a wife, a grandson, or any of these others alluded to, except brothers and sisters. You know that the Secretary of Labor will not pass upon the application, but that some clerk up at the Department of Labor will be passing on that proposition, which will have to affect the very future of numerous families.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I notice in the gentleman's minority views that he claims that the Secretary of Labor had discretion as to who should be admitted and who should not.

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman means by that only those that come under the excepted class?

Mr. SIEGEL. That is correct.

Mr. RAKER. Even though it be a wife or a married daughter or a widowed daughter, a parent or a grandparent, if they be Bolsheviki through and through and would not make good citizens, does not the gentleman think some official ought to have discretion to say whether or not they should come in?

Mr. SIEGEL. Does that constitute a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. The answer to that is as follows: You have already on the statute books a law to keep them out. At the present time you are relying upon your consuls on the other side to obtain that information. If they can not get the information how is the Secretary of Labor in Washington going to get the information with his office in Washington?

That is a question you can not answer and no other man can possibly answer. It is going to be a clerk up there who is going to administer it. I will say this to you also. In your excepted class, I believe through an error, you fail to provide that a clergyman duly ordained or a minister duly ordained or a rabbi duly ordained should be permitted to come in to reside here permanently. I believe it is simply an omission, and I am quite sure the committee will be satisfied to add that as one of their provisions. I think there is no question about that. A few moments ago there were three ministers talking to me over the telephone asking me about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They wanted to come in as students. They are privileged to stay in six months.

Mr. SIEGEL. I am referring to those duly ordained priests, for instance, coming here, or rabbis coming here, or ministers coming here, permanently to remain here. Under the provisions of this bill, they could not. It is evidently an omission. I do not think it was done purposely. I am simply pointing out some of the provisions which have been left out of the bill which would never have been overlooked in the event there had not been so much haste. Now, I was on board the New Amsterdam, and with all due respect to the majority report, I think my friends on the committee will have to agree that the children they met there and spoke to were very intelligent boys and girls. I will only cite one example. We asked an 11-year old tot what was going on in Vienna, and his answer was that they were dying of starvation. That was an answer of an 11-year old youngster. It is regrettable, as I said before, that allusion was made to those coming in this particular ship. Anything wrong among those children? Not a bit of it. They are not boys of the type of "Tommy" coming over here and shipped away on the Buford. Tommy was not of the class to which reference was made of those coming on the New Amsterdam or New Rochelle. Tommy belonged to a different faith altogether. Tommy had learned all about anarchy, I regret to say, as one of his uncles claimed he learned it from some of the books obtained in the public library printed in the Russian language. He had come from Poland, and he remarked that he had learned it in that fashion. It is no wonder. His uncle had come from Russia or Poland and his uncle did not belong to the particular church to which he was attached, and his uncle had led him on. Yet we all know that his place of birth is not responsible for his views.

Those children we saw on the New Amsterdam were like the children that this committee saw in the public schools in my congressional district. How delighted and happy the members of the committee were at the time that they met those children. When my friend from California [Mr. RAKER] took those girls and told them what grand, beautiful, and ideal children they were he was telling truthfully how he felt about them. Yet in this report allusion is made to the fact that they are not assimilable. There are the two things to remember, one, when you met those children and in their presence made them think they were good Americans and sang their praises in the public schools, and, the other, it was the fathers and brothers of those children who helped to make up the 465,000 men which the State of New York gave to the Army and Navy. It was those children's brothers and relatives who made up the Lost Battalion of

New York that the country admired for bravery and heroism, and no report of this committee or any other committee can take that away from them; it is written indelibly in the pages of history.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. What the gentleman says in regard to the visit to New York and the seeing of the young men and young women is correct; that they were the best class of young men and young women who will make good citizens and of which we are proud. But we have got a case of congestion and dyspepsia that we want to work off of this country. This country is overloaded at the present time, and it can not even provide homes and places for those who are——

Mr. SABATH. That is a rather long question.

Mr. SIEGEL. It is a rather long question, but I am going to answer it. If you had enforced the laws of the United States under your own Attorney General against combinations in building trades the increase of the price of material to three hundred and odd per cent we would not have been short of buildings in any city of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is my answer to the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Have not you a district attorney of the State of New York?

Mr. SIEGEL. We have a United States district attorney, and a very fine and able lawyer, but he said he could not proceed until he got orders from your own Attorney General. That combination is not a State combination. It is a combination that reaches all the way to Chicago and Seattle. [Applause.] At last, when the United States Attorney General did not act, we acted. We are indicting them right and left, and those we are indicting are Americans, and not of one generation either, but of several generations back. At this very moment we are starting other prosecutions, and we are going to ship them to State prison if the Federal Government does not send them to Atlanta. We have taken up the burden and we will carry it through. I know all about it, because I helped bring about the present exposure in New York. Now, I want to say this also: There has been some talk here in regard to the increasing numbers coming here. I will admit it. There are those who have lived here and gone over to the other side for the purpose of bringing over these women and children who could not come here while the war was on. They went to bring their nearest and dearest. We have always believed in united families. That is the best type of citizenship. Now, why blow hot and blow cold and say at one time we would rather have the immigrant come with his family and children and then when he is here and is prevented from sending for them while the war is on turn around and cut him off from doing it. I do not know of a single newspaper editorial that you can find which supports this bill. Not a single New York paper editorially is in favor of this bill, because instead of Congress saying who is desirable to come into the United States, it is putting it up to the Secretary of Labor. He in turn will put it up to some clerk to determine it.

Some of these consuls abroad have been dined and wined by the people of the country to which they have been accredited, and they love to be persona grata with those with whom they have to come into contact—because I have seen them on the other side—and it is only natural for them to take sides against the poor and downtrodden individual who desires to go to America to make good. I speak from experience and from personal contact, because when I was abroad two years ago, when the war was on, I came in contact with some of the men and I know their viewpoint and their standpoint. Here only last Sunday the New York World carried a column dispatch from Paris showing how our consuls would not protect American citizens who had proceeded to Roumania with American passports.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. I will consume two minutes more.

I have been confirmed in my belief from boyhood up that the only manner you can Americanize America is to start with the acorns, the children in the public schools, and I am very happy to be able to say that in my part of the city of New York, taking in 27 different nationalities, that they certainly do know they have a Member in the House of Representatives who believes in helping all of them to grow up into good oaks, namely, citizens.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say as a member of the Committee on Immigration I can indorse what the gentleman says relative to the Americanization of schools in his section of the city. I found the Congressman held in the highest esteem by all. And while we were in one public school they put on a play which contained all the history of the country up to the last Great War, and it made a very fine impression upon the members of the committee. The gentleman from New York is correct in his statement as to what he is doing for Americanization in the public schools in his district.

Mr. SIEGEL. Let me say that I appreciate the gentleman's fine words of commendation for the public schools of New York. The teachers deserve that praise, I can assure you.

I am more than convinced that the future of this country depends on having the native as well as the foreign born children in our public schools realize that with citizenship comes the obligation to give the Nation something in return, not only in the hour of need but at all times. We should be able to say that each one could respond, Open my heart and you shall see graven upon it "America." For that reason, I say, it is not a question of suspended immigration at all. It is a question of naturalization and Americanization. This bill will not accomplish it. It is crude and ineffective.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed two additional minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. I will take one more minute.

Now, suspending immigration, so called, for two years is not going to cure the abuses which I have described. You are going to be able to come back again and say people do not become naturalized. Until you turn away from merely destructive criticism to constructive action by providing sufficient judges for naturalization, the responsibility will be with Congress. Congress should not give up at any time the power which belongs to it, but determine itself who should come into America and never delegate those powers. [Applause.]

Let us remember at all times and places the words of Wendell Phillips, that—

> There is no room for race or religious hatred in this blessed Republic.

With that in mind, let us legislate for the best interests of our country, never shutting our eyes, ears, and minds to the cry of suffering humanity, but trying to act justly and fairly at all times.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with the general purpose of this bill. There are now entirely too many aliens in the United States who have not or will not become Americanized and are therefore a menace to our institutions. It is time to call at least a temporary halt to immigration so that better means may be found to instruct those who are already here in the essentials of good citizenship. Those who will not accept the instruction should be deported. The people already occupying any country have the undisputed right to say whether people from other lands shall share its opportunities with them. It follows therefore that no foreigner has any rights in or to America except those that we choose to give him. If there is serious unemployment of labor in many trades and occupations, can there be any good reason why laborers from foreign lands should not be prevented from coming here to further glut the labor market? Does this generation of Americans hold in trust the natural resources of our common country for the benefit of their own children or chiefly in behalf of the descendants of aliens? Such questions may suggest racial and national selfishness, but it is only by giving thought to the future that we can assure a fair field of endeavor and an unspoiled country to the Americans who will follow after us.

The fact that this measure merely proposes to dam the flood of immigration for two years shows that further legislation must be enacted. Let us hope that this breathing spell will be ample in which to devise a plan which will not only rigidly limit the volume of immigration but also enable us to select the kind of immigrants who can be most readily assimilated. The disloyalty of many aliens during the war and the startling disclosure of ignorance of both our language and our institutions among the foreign born called in the selective draft have aroused the American people to the necessity for a closer scrutiny of those who would come from abroad to live permanently among us. The pending bill meets an insistent and well-founded demand for immediate action, and its prompt passage is therefore fully justified.

In only one particular do I disagree with the conclusions reached by the Committee on Immigration. In my opinion they have not clearly drawn the distinction between the temporary admission of seasonal agricultural laborers and those who desire to permanently remain in the United States and engage in every kind and character of occupation. Certainly it ought not to be difficult to see that one who remains in this country for a few months each year to assist in harvesting the crops should be given a different status than another who wants to stay here indefinitely and enjoy all the rights and privileges of an American citizen. In section 7 of the bill the committee recognized that an exception should be made in behalf of aliens from Canada, Newfoundland, Cuba, and Mexico, but the recognition granted is so limited in its scope that but few residents of those countries can take advantage of the privilege. The section reads as follows:

SEC. 7. During the period of suspension provided for in section 2 otherwise admissible aliens who have resided continuously in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico for at least one year, and who are not persons of the classes hereinbefore exempted, may be temporarily admitted, for a period not exceeding six months, from such countries, under such rules governing entry, inspection, temporary stay, and departure as may be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor.

It will be noted that only "otherwise admissible" aliens may enter. That means that each must pay the head tax and pass the illiteracy test and that the contract-labor clause of the immigration law will be enforced. The head tax is paid but once by a foreigner who comes here to stay. The Canadian or Mexican or Cuban must pay it each time he arrives, which is obviously an unfair burden to impose on a poor man seeking temporary employment. The illiteracy test is essential to determine the qualifications of a future citizen, but has nothing to do with the ability of a French-Canadian to dig potatoes during the summer in Maine or of a Mexican to pick cotton in the fall in Arizona. One will have a share in determining the course of our Government while the other neither seeks or can possibly have any influence upon our political life during his temporary sojourn. The prohibition of labor contracts makes it impossible for farmers' organizations to advance the funds necessary to recruit and transport such seasonal laborers from their homes and to insure their return when the harvest is over.

The citizens and subjects of the countries immediately adjacent to the United States have always been given a privileged status under our immigration laws. In the interest of better trade relations, if for no other reason, it is desirable that Americans shall freely enter and depart from neighboring countries, but we can not consistently ask that our citizens be granted this right and at the same time deny it to the Mexicans and Cubans and Canadians. To now impose the same drastic law upon our nearest neighbors as upon other aliens from the ends of the earth will not tend to promote the friendly intercourse which everyone knows is advantageous to all the countries concerned.

To prevent Canadian agricultural laborers from entering the United States during the harvest season can have no other result than a decreased production of potatoes in New England and of wheat in the Northwest. If the cotton growers of the Southwest can not obtain Mexican labor to assist in gathering their crops, there will be less cotton grown in that region. If as much farm labor as is actually needed be admitted and then returned to the countries from whence they came when the season is over, I fail to see where anything but a benefit is conferred upon the whole United States.

If section 7 were broadened so as to include otherwise inadmissible alien agricultural laborers, and thus obviate the payment of the head tax, eliminate the illiteracy test, and suspend the contract labor law, it would still be entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of Labor to determine whether the services of any laborers of this class were actually needed by the farmers of this country. If there was available an adequate supply of farm labor within the United States, it would be the duty of the Secretary, in keeping with the spirit of this act, to deny admission to those whose services are not needed. But if the need for their assistance for a limited period was demonstrated the Secretary of Labor could lift the bars and admit a sufficient number to supply the legitimate demand. The authority granted by section 7 is broad enough to authorize the Secretary to promulgate regulations which will insure that the aliens thus admitted shall receive the going rate of compensation for their work; that they shall be properly housed under decent and sanitary living conditions; and that they will all be promptly returned at the end of the harvest season.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Do you think that a laboring man from Mexico is better than a laboring man from any section of Europe?

Mr. HAYDEN. So far as the States of the Southwest are concerned, Mexico is the only source of supply for our agricultural labor. It is unreasonable to expect any European laborer to come here to work six months in the cotton or grain fields and then go home, but it is perfectly feasible for farm laborers from Canada and Mexico to do so, to the great relief of our farmers in the harvest season. Seasonal agricultural labor can not be imported from such a great distance as Europe.

The method which I am discussing is not an experiment, but is now in actual operation and has been since 1917. The Burnett Immigration Act went into effect on February 5 of that year, and under its terms neither illiterate nor contract laborers could be imported, and each alien must pay a head tax. On May 23, 1917, the Secretary of Labor waived these three requirements as affecting Mexican agricultural laborers, under authority granted him by the ninth provision to section 3 of the immigration act, which reads as follows:

Provided further, That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall issue rules and prescribe conditions, including exaction of such bonds as may be necessary, to control and regulate the admission and return of otherwise inadmissible aliens applying for temporary admission.

That he had a perfect legal right to issue such an order will not be denied by anyone who reads the extract from the law which I have just quoted. It therefore follows that the enactment of the pending bill as reported to the House will deprive the Secretary of Labor of the authority to temporarily admit "otherwise inadmissible" aliens, because section 7 provides that none but "otherwise admissible" aliens may be temporarily admitted.

Secretary Wilson issued the order of May 23, 1917, only after it had been demonstrated to him that there were crops of cotton and sugar beets which could not be gathered without the aid of Mexican laborers and that there was no other source from which this assistance could be obtained. Similar representations were made to him in 1918, 1919, and 1920, and in each instance he was convinced that the general welfare of the United States would be best served by granting the request. The production of Egyptian cotton in Arizona, a new industry in the United States, would have been impossible but for the timely action taken during these years by the Secretary of Labor. Mr. Wilson realized the importance of having available a supply of this cotton, which has a longer staple and greater tensile strength than any other cotton grown in the world.

The regulations issued by the Department of Labor respecting the admission of agricultural labor from Mexico contained numerous provisions to safeguard the situation. Each alien applying for admission was photographed and provided with an identification card and agreed that he was to be promptly deported if he engaged in any other than agricultural employment. The employers agreed to pay the current rate of wages for similar labor in which the aliens were engaged. I have no exact knowledge of conditions in other States, but the Secretary of Labor advises me that the Arizona Cotton Growers' Association, representing the farmers who employ Mexican laborers in my State, has kept its part of the agreement to the satisfaction of his department.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman any information as to how many of those people come in in the harvest season—how many are permitted under the present arrangement?

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand that last year there were about 10,000 agricultural laborers imported from Mexico. This year the number has somewhat increased, probably to 20,000. But the number is relatively small compared with the vast volume of general immigration.

Mr. WALSH. How many States do they go into?

Mr. HAYDEN. They go principally into Texas, Arizona, and southern California to work in the cotton fields. Mexicans have also been imported to assist in the handling of beet-sugar crops in Colorado, and I believe some have gone as far as Idaho.

Mr. WALSH. If it were determined that they might remain permanently, would it result in any great congestion in those States, do you think, if they could pass the other qualifications of the law?

Mr. HAYDEN. If they possessed the other qualifications of the immigration law, of course they would be entitled to remain. If they could pass the literacy test there would be no objection; but most Mexicans can not speak the English language and do not know how to read or write in Spanish.

Until the present drop in prices the production of long-staple cotton has been very profitable. Four cents a pound is the agreed price for picking, so that the Mexican laborers have been well paid. The money realized from the sale of cotton has greatly stimulated activity in building and other construction, so that there has been until recently a steady demand for American labor, both skilled and unskilled, at good wages. It is for this reason that I was told by a number of American workingmen in Arizona that they had no objection to the temporary admission of Mexican laborers, so long as these aliens were strictly confined to agricultural pursuits. They did, however, express a decided interest in the return to Mexico of the laborers heretofore imported when their services are no longer required.

The success of any plan which permits the admission of aliens to assist in harvesting crops depends solely upon their prompt return to their homes when the season is over, for otherwise there would be nothing but a wholesale evasion of the immigration act. Of course, no one can justify such a subterfuge, which would result in the permanent addition to our population of an element which the law declares to be undesirable. It is my understanding that there has been but comparatively few desertions among the Mexicans brought in to work in the cotton fields of the Southwest, and I am satisfied that practically all of these can be sought out and deported if the field force of the Immigration Service is sufficiently increased. Whatever complaint there may be can best be met by providing an adequate number of competent and well-paid Immigration Service employees, for it is a notorious fact that such is not the case to-day.

In conclusion let me impress upon the House that the effect of the adoption of section 7 of this bill, without amendment, will destroy the Egyptian long-staple cotton industry in the United States. The production of this high-grade cotton began in a small way about six years ago, and has developed until it is now the basic crop in the irrigated valleys of Arizona and southern California. During the war, when cotton could not be obtained from Egypt, our farmers were able to produce a much-needed supply for essential industries. If it is the desire of this Congress to again compel our manufacturers to be solely dependent upon Egypt, if Congress has no concern about the prosperity of the cotton growers of the Southwest, then close the door against the importation of seasonal agricultural laborers from Mexico and such results will surely follow.

As an American anxious to promote the best interests of my country, I would not suggest changing this bill in any particular unless I was satisfied that we could do so with entire safety. However, much as my State might be temporarily benefited in a material way, I would not ask that anything be done which would degrade the high character of her citizenship or lower the standard of living to which they are accustomed. I do believe that under proper restrictions it is possible to utilize the services of our Mexican neighbors during the harvest season without accomplishing any such evil result, and am sure that a way can be found to bring it about to the mutual advantage of all concerned. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JAMES of Michigan (at the request of Mr. KELLEY of Michigan), on account of serious illness.

To Mr. BOOHER (at the request of Mr. RUCKER), indefinitely, on account of sickness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks made this afternoon on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend the remarks he made this afternoon on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] wishes to submit a unanimous-consent request.

THE RULES.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to make a correction in an amendment that was made to a rule in the last session of the Congress.

It was desirable to amend the rule allowing the Speaker to appoint a Speaker pro tempore for the period of more than one day. The amendment was made, but by some inadvertence the proviso in the rule as it already exists was left out.

Section 7 of Rule I formerly read:

He—

shall have the right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment.

That limited the Speaker pro tempore to one day.

Provided, however, That in case of his illness he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding 10 days—

And so forth.

Now, the amendment as made provided that section 7 of Rule I be amended so as to read:

He shall have the right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond three legislative days.

And by some inadvertence the proviso was omitted.

I ask that the proviso be retained as now in the rule.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the fact that this is a matter of great importance, and there being so few present, and believing there will be no——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Let me say to the gentleman that I talked the matter over with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] just before he went to the committee room, and he asked me to say for him that he wanted it done.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas that the parliamentary clerk has just called the Chair's attention to the fact that the amendment which he desires to make was actually made on motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I was going to call attention to, that it was later rectified.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was my impression at the time, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who to-day had an examination of the matter made, said that it had not been rectified, and he called my attention to it and called the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to it, and it was then suggested, as the Speaker knows, that it be corrected at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] afterwards came in and had it corrected.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Journal fails to show that it was corrected.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD shows that it was corrected. Does the Journal fail to show it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Journal fails to show it.

Mr. BLANTON. Then let the RECORD be corrected nunc pro tunc, so as to show what actually occurred.

Mr. WALSH. You can not do that in a subsequent session of Congress.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I doubt if the Journal could me corrected nunc pro tunc at this time.

The SPEAKER. Not after it has been printed.

Mr. RAKER. I understand this is satisfactory to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; the gentleman from Tennessee in conference with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the Speaker and myself within the afternoon agreed that this amendment should be made, because the gentleman from Illinois stated that the Journal failed to show that the correction had been made, and this is for the purpose of making the correction, which was inadvertently omitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas moves that section 7 of Rule I be amended so as to read:

"He shall have the right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond three legislative days: Provided, however, That in case of his illness, he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding 10 days, with the approval of the House at the time the same is made; and in his absence and omission to make such appointment the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore to act during his absence."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the motion will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, December 10, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

174. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report covering the number and cost of publications issued and distributed by the Panama Canal during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Printing.

175. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of inspections of disbursements and transfers by officers of the Army, received in the office of the Inspector General during the past fiscal year; to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

176. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting item of suggested legislation amending the act for the establishment of marine schools and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1911; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

177. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting statement showing the pay and allowances for each grade of officers in the Navy, including retired officers, and for all enlisted men of the Navy during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

178. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting detailed statement of the manner in which the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture, 1920," has been expended; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.

179. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting statement of number of documents received and number of documents distributed by the Department of Labor during the fiscal year 1920; to the Committee on Printing.

180. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1920; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

181. A letter from the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting thirty-fourth annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

182. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriation for the Boston, Mass., immigrant station; Chicago, Ill., marine hospital; Mobile, Ala., marine hospital; New York, N. Y., assay office; Sitka, Alaska, customhouse; Toledo, Ohio, post office; Wyandotte, Mich., post office; Cape Charles, Va., quarantine station; hospital construction, Public Health Service; general expenses of public buildings; operating force for public buildings (H. Doc. No. 911); to the Committee on Appropriations.

183. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report of the aggregate number of publications issued by the department during the fiscal year 1920; to the Committee on Printing.

184. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of requested legislation to amend the laws relating to allowances for subsistence for officers and employees of the United States while traveling on duty outside of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. NOLAN, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11984, with Senate amendments) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1115), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MARTIN: A bill (H. R. 14848) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14849) to amend and reenact paragraph 193 of schedule G of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LAZARO: A bill (H. R. 14850) to declare Bayou Cocodrie nonnavigable from its source to its junction with Bayou Chicot; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14851) for the relief of occupants of lands included in the Bellevue grant, in St. Landry Parish, La.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. EVANS of Montana: A bill (H. R. 14852) to repeal certain war-time legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14853) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1920; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 14854) making an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 14855) to increase the utility of the postal savings system, to increase savings among the people, and to increase home ownership; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. TINCHER: A bill (H. R. 14856) to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 14857) granting to the city and county of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, a right of way over and across the Fort De Rusey Military Reservation for the purpose of extending its sewer system; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WATKINS: A bill (H. R. 14858) to make the Star-Spangled Banner the national anthem; to the Committee on the Library.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14859) to provide for the erection of an addition to the post-office building at Shreveport, La., and for alterations to the present building; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14860) to provide for a site and public building at Homer, La.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14861) to provide for a site and public building at Mansfield, La.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14862) making appropriation for the improvement of navigation in Sabine River, in Louisiana and Texas; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14863) making appropriation for the improvement of navigation in Red River, in Arkansas and Louisiana; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 14864) to add certain lands to Minidoka National Forest; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 10, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, by Thy gracious favor we come to this new day and address ourselves to the tasks that are before us. We ask that Thy presence may be with us, that where authority is exercised it may be with Thy consent, that where counsel is taken it may be in partnership with the Divine will, that where power is exercised it may be chastened and refined by Thy grace, so that in all of our work to establish this Nation in righteousness and peace we may have the constant blessing of the God of our fathers upon us. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, appeared in his seat to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 13264. An act to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 10311. An act to further amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, and amended by the act approved March 3, 1913, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying for the release of Xenophan Kalamatiano, an American citizen who has been held a prisoner by the soviet rulers of Russia for two years, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ingham County, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation whereby the United States will take her place among the leading nations of the world in the prompt adoption of an international agreement to make and maintain peace without recourse to war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Ingham County, Mich., opposing any effort that may be made to nullify national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolution in the nature of a petition adopted by the Oregon Mohair Goat Association, Sixes, Oreg., praying for the enactment of legislation for a tariff on mohair imported into the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry citizens, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit, for the purpose of canning and export from Alaska, fishing of salmon in the Yukon River, Alaska, its tributaries, and adjacent waters, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Aristonian Club, of Sauk Rapids, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress the tide of immigration that is flowing into the United States from foreign countries, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. KIRBY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 172), authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to sell a certain parcel of land known as Fort Jackson, at New Deptford, on the Savannah River, Ga., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 665) thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4572), granting to the city and county of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, a right of way over and across the Fort De Russy Military Reservation for the purpose of extending its sewer system, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 664) thereon.

CAPTURED WAR DEVICES AND TROPHIES.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the bill (S. 643) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia, and the amendments of the House thereto, I report with a recommendation that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House.

The Senate bill just reported from the Committee on Military Affairs heretofore passed the Senate. The House also passed the bill with certain amendments. When the bill came back to the Senate it, together with the House amendments, was again referred to the committee, which has instructed the chairman to ask for a conference. I therefore move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion is agreed to, and the Chair appoints Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 221) instructing the Secretary of the Treasury as to settlement of war loans; to the Committee on Finance.

THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have here a document entitled "Report Upon the Illegal Practices of the United States Department of Justice" made by a committee of lawyers on behalf of the National Popular Government League. I know nothing about the nature of this organization, but the committee comprises lawyers of eminence and learning and standing, among them being Roscoe Pound, dean of the law school of Harvard University, and Tyrrell Williams, acting dean of the law school of Washington University. The report recites usurpations and oppressions of the Department of Justice scarcely believable. I ask that the report be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and with it a memorandum describing the personnel of the committee, for such action as the Committee on the Judiciary may care to take with reference to the same.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not resist the request of the Senator from Montana, but I would like to say that this matter, as I am informed, has been considered by one or more committees of the House. I recall reading a portion of the reply by the Attorney General to these charges. I believe that the charges are without merit, and I think that the record of the hearings before the Committee on Rules, if not another committee of the House, conclusively demonstrates that fact.

The record shows that there are a large number of alien radicals and Bolshevists and seditionists and enemies to our Government who actively engaged in efforts to undermine our social and political structure. Their activities brought them within the provisions of existing law and called for their arrests and deportation. The Attorney General of the United States attempted to enforce the laws of Congress, and his acts in so doing brought upon his head the condemnation of these aliens and their sympathizers, and a number of persons, some of whom are the attorneys referred to by the Senator from Montana, and they engaged in an extensive propaganda to discredit a faithful, courageous, and able officer of the Government. These attorneys formulated the charges contained in the document just presented by the Senator from Montana.

I think that the Attorney General of the United States in the administration of his office has conducted himself with ability and with integrity and has honored the position which he occupies and has been an honor to the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think it is any answer at all to the charge that illegal things have been done to say that there are Bolshevists and anarchists in this country. If there are, they are entitled to whatever protection the law affords, even the most conscienceless and bloodthirsty murderer. They are all accorded certain rights under the law. It is no answer to charges of this character to say that the practices were directed against anarchists and Bolshevists.

Among other things, charges are made in this document that multitudes of the people against whom these proceedings were directed were not Bolshevists or anarchists, or anything of that nature, and accordingly an inquiry might very properly be directed to ascertain to what extent the imputation is justly directed against these people. But, even if the charges were found to be sound, I apprehend the Senator from Utah would not assert that they are not entitled to be tried in accordance with the law of the land, and if they have been guilty of any crime to be deported in accordance with the act of Congress, if they are here in violations of such act of Congress, as is asserted in this report. I understand that toward the close of the last session of Congress the matter was under consideration by some committee of the House, not the Judiciary Committee of the House, as I am told, nor any other committee, so far as I am able to ascertain, which could consider the alleged violations of the constitutional rights of the people who are properly in this country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one word. I regret that the Senator from Montana has not acquainted himself fully with the investigations carried on in the House. I regret, moreover, that he has not acquainted himself with the reply which was made to this and other charges by the Attorney General before a committee of the House. I think that if the Senator had been fully advised as to all the facts in the case he would not present the request which he has submitted this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report and accompanying document will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as requested.

JOINT DISARMAMENT OF NATIONS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I present a resolution in the nature of a petition, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read it.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Resolution passed unanimously at mass meeting of the Women's Peace Society, Milwaukee, Pabst Theater, December 4, 1920.

Whereas the torch of war, if left in madmen's hands within each nation, will lay in ashes our civilization; and

Whereas the workers of the world, sensing this disaster, are preparing, through their voting power and their "councils of action," to cut off at the sources the engines of destruction; and

Whereas the women of the world, now come into political and economic power, intend to support the workers in their fight against war: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Milwaukee Branch of the Women's Peace Society in mass meeting assembled, and in support of the workers in their position, as stated, That we do hereby petition the Members from Wisconsin of the United States Congress to use their utmost influence to have our country take the lead among the nations in achieving joint disarmament.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROPOSED EMBARGO ON WOOL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have received many telegrams in the form of petitions. I do not intend to offer them all this morning, but they are all along the same line and for the same purpose. The Western Range Stockmen's Association met at Salt Lake City on the 8th of this month and passed resolutions asking Congress to take immediate action in placing an embargo upon wool, woolen goods, and live stock, and stating the reasons for the request.

I simply make this statement by way of petition, hoping that not only the Ways and Means Committee of the House but the Finance Committee of the Senate will take some action at a very early date upon the question of an embargo upon these products.

I wish to say while upon my feet that unless something is done very soon, as far as the wool industry of the United States is concerned, the industry will perish. I do not make radical statements upon the floor of the Senate, and I do not consider it a radical statement that I make now. A most serious condition exists, and if the wool industry is to be preserved in the United States quick action must be taken in order that that may be accomplished.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator is advised that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate had the matter under consideration and considerable testimony was taken. I am not sure that that committee might not as well review the subject as the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the Committee on Finance day before yesterday was considering the question. Of course, the Committee on Finance thought, as far as an embargo was concerned which affected the revenues of the country, that that was the proper committee to consider the question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not desire to engage in any controversy concerning the appropriate committee. It is a matter of no consequence to me whether dealt with by one committee or the other, but considering that wool is now on the free list, I can not see that it necessarily falls within the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee. However, the testimony taken before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on yesterday can be transcribed for the use of the Finance Committee for what it is worth if they may desire to use it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, there is a duty upon manufactured woolen goods, I will say to the Senator, and that involves this same question. Of course, when you place an embargo on wool you must not fail to place an embargo upon woolen goods, because if that alone should be done very little favorable results would follow. But I will not take the time of the Senate to go into any further discussion of it at this time.

Mr. KENDRICK. In support of the statement made a moment ago by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] with reference to the urgent need of action in behalf of the mutton and wool industries of the West, I ask permission to read a copy of a telegram that has just been received here in regard to the shipment of a trainload of sheep from one of the shipping points in the State of Wyoming.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KENDRICK. The telegram is addressed to J. M. Wilson, care Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C., and is from one of the largest commission houses in the Union Stock Yards. It reads as follows:

UNION STOCK YARDS, ILL.,
December 9, 1920.

J. M. WILSON,
Care Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Nineteen hundred and eighty-six ewes sold to Wilson & Co. at 2.10 per hundredweight, average 93 pounds gross proceeds, including 23 dead sheep, $3,878.11; transportation expenses, including freight, switching, feed charges in transit, and war tax, $2,804.12; yardage, $159.84; fire insurance, 70 cents; commission, $240; attendants' charge, $20.

CLAY ROBINSON & Co.

$2,804.12	Total gross	$3,878.11
159.84	Total charges	3,224.66
.70
240.00	Net	2)653.45
20.00
3,224.66		32.67

The startling thing about this information is the summed-up figures of the cost and fixed charges of moving this shipment of sheep. The total gross proceeds were $3,878.11, the total charges were $3,224.66, and the net to the owner was $653.45.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. For how many sheep?

Mr. KENDRICK. For 1,986 sheep.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It would have been better for the owner to have brought them here and sold them for lamb chops.

Mr. KENDRICK. This information clearly shows that proportionately $5 of the gross receipts went to pay fixed charges and $1 went to the owner of the sheep as his part of the proceeds.

Mr. WARREN. Did my colleague state what the net proceeds per head were on those sheep?

Mr. KENDRICK. In answer to my colleague, I will say that I omitted to give the net receipts per head for this shipment of stock. They were a trifle over 32 cents per head.

Mr. WARREN. I understand, then, that the total net proceeds to the producer—the grower—was a trifle over 32 cents a head for those sheep, which cost him to raise not less than $6 to $8 each per head.

Mr. KENDRICK. It was 32 cents and a fraction per head.

Mr. WARREN. Was that on the Chicago market?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes.

Mr. KING. May I ask the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] if it is not a fact that there was no other market west of Wyoming to which these sheep could have been shipped where a better price could have been obtained?

Mr. KENDRICK. I assume that the owners selected the market that seemed to be the most inviting at the time they made the shipment. There are other markets west of the Missouri River, certainly; but, for what probably seemed to be very good reasons, the shipment was consigned to Chicago. There is not, as a rule, very much difference in the prices received at any of the various larger markets.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I understand the Senator correctly the producer of the sheep received for each sheep something less than we pay for one lamb chop.

Mr. KENDRICK. In answer to the Senator from North Dakota, I will say that 32 cents would undoubtedly be less than the price charged for a lamb chop.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I am paying something more than that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have not the letter with me, but I am in receipt of a letter from a merchant whose complaint is that, owing to the decline in prices, his inventory taken at present values would show a distinct and decided loss of something like 40 to 50 per cent of the cost price of his stock of goods. He is unable to make any sales that do not involve a distinct loss to him. I merely mention this as showing that we are all complaining of a universal condition. The difficulty is that just at present the retailer, the hotel proprietor, and others have not as yet been affected to any appreciable degree by these conditions. As the Literary Digest said a few days ago, "the price of wheat has come down all unbeknownst to bread." I am inclined to think that when we realize that we are going through the inevitable process of readjustment consequent upon that reaction which has been coming for a long time, we will hesitate before applying speedy and ill-considered remedies to a universal condition.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, surely the Senator does not mean to say that he thinks it is a natural condition now confronting the producers of meat, bread, and textiles when the price they are receiving is anywhere from 200 to 300 per cent below the cost of production; so that if they are forced to sell their commodities on the market at the present prices and assume that indebtedness—those who are able to assume it—it will be, under the present conditions, years and years before they will be able to liquidate.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not mean to say that the condition is a natural one in the sense that it is a normal condition, but it is natural in the sense that it is inevitable; it is history repeating itself, perhaps on a larger scale, because the causes bringing it about were larger. It is not unprecedented; it is not unparalelled. It was and has been inevitable; and we can not expect to reach the normal conditions that prevailed before the war except by going through the long, painful, and losing process of readjustment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will be good enough to give us the separate items of transportation and of the revenue tax, so that we may get an idea of what part of this expense is properly chargeable to transportation? According to the figures as I caught them, the sheep brought in Chicago more than a dollar a head, but the proceeds were eaten up largely by expenses. The Senator mentioned some of those expenses, but we did not get to the items of transportation and war tax.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, it will be quite possible to secure those figures in a little time, but it will take probably three or four days to get an itemized statement of the freight, switching, and feed charges, and other costs of shipment. If the Senator wishes it, I will make an effort to secure those figures.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had supposed the Senator had them there.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the trouble is that cattle and sheep have been shipped to the market faster than it is possible for the market to absorb. I wish to say in this connection that I know that some of the woolgrowers, taking their sheep from the summer range to the winter range, have told bankers in my State, "My sheep are now here; I do not want any expense attached to the foreclosing of the mortgage upon them; come and take them; they are yours; they are all I have, and I want no additional expense incurred in the transaction." That has not happened once, but to my knowledge it has happened a good many times. I say now, as I said before the committee the other day, that I am positive that half of the woolgrowers of the West are bankrupt. I do not know whether or not an embargo will save the other half. South American wools are selling to-day at 9 cents a pound. We to-day have in the United States over 800,000,000 pounds of wool. Not 5 per cent of the last clip of wool in the United States has been sold. It remains in the hands of the growers, or with the commission house of the growers. Many of the growers of the West drew 25 cents a pound upon their wool. The commission men are demanding of them that they return 10 cents a pound upon the wool that they consigned to them. It is impossible for them to comply.

I want to impress upon Senators the real situation. Perhaps you do not like an embargo. I do not either, but I know that it is the only way in which the industry, or part of it, can be maintained.

The situation with regard to live stock is quite different from that with regard to other commodities. Commodities generally can make a loss one year and produce the same crop from the ground the following year; but if you destroy an industry like this, if you allow the female stock that is now going by the trainloads into the markets to be sold for such prices as have just been named by the Senator from Wyoming, it will take 25 years to resuscitate the industry.

I could go on and tell you, Mr. President, of the importations that are taking place. The Cleveland Woolen Mills the other day bought a South American clip of wool that they have purchased for years and years past, 1,500,000 pounds, in round numbers. It cost them 20 cents a pound, with all expenses and commissions paid, delivered at the port of entry. What does that mean? It means to meet that price the woolgrower of the United States can not receive one-half of what it cost him to produce the wool.

There is enough wool in the United States to-day to furnish the American manufacturers with all the wool that they will require, even if the demand for woolen goods should increase 100 per cent from what it is to-day, for nearly two years if there is not a pound of wool produced or imported into the United States.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. Testimony was given before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry yesterday that there is just about a sufficient supply of wool in this country at this time to provide amply for the needs of the Nation for a period of two years, and we were also informed that there were enormous supplies in other countries that have been unable to transport their wools for the last three or four years; so that with the door left open for these other wools to come into the country the situation is absolutely hopeless for the woolgrower.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can say that whoever testified to that yesterday testified to an absolute fact. I do not have to have the testimony that was given yesterday before the Agricultural Committee; I know it. I know the amount of wool in the United States to-day, and where it is located, and I know the amount of wool that is consumed in ordinary times by the American manufacturers; and I say without a moment's hesitation that if there were not another pound of wool produced for the next two years, if there were not another pound of wool imported into the United States for the next two years, there is almost enough wool in this country to-day to supply the requirements of the American manufacturers.

I recognize the fact that there are a few mills in the United States that use a class of wool that is not produced in the United States; but they can be counted on the fingers of one hand, and they have at least enough stock on hand to run for eight months. That is the very finest of Australian wool, with a staple that is not less than 4 inches long. That wool is used in this country for the purpose of making a No. 70 or No. 80 thread, the finest thread that is spun by a woolen mill. On the other hand, there is a long, coarse wool, about 6 inches long, that is used for making the wool linings of men's coats.

I think there is in this country now enough of that class of wool to run at least a year, and all we ask is that an embargo be laid upon wool now so that the wool that is in this country may be used.

What will be the effect of it? It will raise the price of wool to what the manufacturer thinks the duty will be that may be placed upon wool at the next session of Congress, or whenever the new revenue law is enacted.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he does not think the effect of an embargo, in all probability, would be not to increase the price of wool to the consumer so much as it would be to fix some kind of a value on it, so that the product could be marketed? Judging from my discussion of the question with those who are financially ruined by the situation, the woolgrowers are willing to sell at almost any price, but the difficulty is not a question of price; it is a market of some kind, of any kind.

Mr. SMOOT. The truth of the case is that England outplayed us from the very beginning, following the signing of the armistice. England had an immense stock of wool on hand; of course, there was a great stock of wool in Australia and New Zealand, and shortly our market here was flooded with foreign wools and at prices always just under the prices of the American wools, and the price has been falling right down. There is no market to-day for the American wool. The wools of South America, as I say, are coming in here, and there was recorded the other day a sale of quarter-bloods at 9 cents a pound, and we can not compete with it. Why, last year, in order to get the wool taken from the back of the sheep it cost nearly 4 cents a pound to have it sheared.

Mr. President, this is the morning hour, and I shall not take any more time now; but when this question comes up for discussion in a proper way I hope we may have the attention of the Senate, for I want to call particular attention to just what the embargo means, and what the new proposition means that the manufacturers of the United States are making to the Congress as a substitute.

It is that a charge shall be made upon the importation of all goods into the United States, whether they enter free or whether they are dutiable, of the difference between the exchange value of American money and the foreign money of the country from which the goods were shipped. I will close by saying that if there is a difference of 30 per cent between the exchange value of the American dollar and the English pound, it would mean a 30 per cent charge upon the wools that are imported into the United States. The wool that entered the other day, 1,500,000 pounds, was sold to the Cleveland Woolen Mills at 20 cents a pound delivered at the port of entry, with all expenses paid. Thirty per cent of that is 6 cents a pound; or, in other words, that would make the wool cost to the importer 26 cents a pound. That will never save the industry in the United States; and therefore, when the time comes, I think the only way for us to do, if we are going to save the industry, is to impose an embargo for a limited time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. I was not in the Chamber at the time the Senator began. Has this wool come from other countries than Australia?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, South America is filled with wool, and——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator any figures as to the quantities?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the figures here, because I did not expect the discussion to come up this morning; but I can give the figures to the Senator in pounds from every country. The other day I introduced a bill placing an embargo on wool and woolen goods, and the next morning a representative of interests in Argentine Republic was in my office asking me whether I thought that bill was going to pass. He stated that the Argentine was filled with wool, and that they did not know where they could find a market for it unless they could place it in America, and I will say to the Senator that that is the case.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So the embarrassment has come more from the Argentine Republic than from Australia?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; from Australia particularly, and South Africa, and all of the South American countries.

Mr. WARREN. And New Zealand.

Mr. SMOOT. There is only a little from there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the question because I notice, by reference to some figures that I have in my pocket, that the imports of all classes from Australia are materially smaller this year than they were last year; and I was wondering, therefore, how it would be such a serious matter in the case of Australia.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that to-day there is not 30 per cent of the woolen machinery running in the United States. I mean, taking the country as a whole, there are only about 30 per cent of the looms in operation in the United States now.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Nebraska that the exact figures were given to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry yesterday by a representative of the Tariff Commission who was present and testified, so that the Senator can obtain accurate information from that source. The fact is that the importations from Australia are mounting up enormously.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that the importations are increasing every day, and I have no doubt but that from now on every pound of wool in Australia and South American countries that can be shipped will be shipped, with the hope of arriving here before any action is taken by Congress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The figures I have, to which I referred, are official figures, and they embrace all classes of imports. Last year, for the first 10 months, our total imports from Australia were $49,377,000, and this year for the first 10 months of the year they are less than $42,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska will remember that the Government of the United States at the close of the war had on hand some 600,000,000 pounds of wool that it has been putting on the market from time to time, which of course has added to the overload; and a large portion of that wool was bought originally in foreign countries. There is at the present time in the neighborhood of 40,000,000 pounds in the hands of the Government that is thrown on the market from time to time through sales effected by soliciting sealed bids, formerly open bids, and that of course has helped an overload, which has accumulated not only in foreign countries but here at home. The trouble here is not the low price of wool so much as it is that there is no market here for wool.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are quite a few delegations who have been importuning members of the Finance Committee for a meeting to consider the postponement of the December 15 installment of taxes, and also to devise a method of reducing those taxes. I had expected to ask permission, at the close of the routine morning business, to present some figures upon this proposition, so that those interested in the question could for themselves judge whether or not it would be possible for the Congress to grant them the relief they sought. Inasmuch as there are only four days to elapse between now and the 15th, and we do not seem to be approaching the end of the morning business, I am going to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to present, at this time, some of the figures showing the present financial status of the country, and the necessity for immediate cash to meet immediate needs.

While there has been no meeting and no action by the Committee on Finance, the members of that committee individually have been worked overtime in receiving delegations who, in presenting their urgent appeals for remedial action by the Congress, are reflecting the deplorable condition that is general throughout the country.

There are two features of the general situation where the demand is for immediate relief. The first of these, and most important, is our agricultural collapse; the second, the heavy inventory losses due to rapidly falling prices, for which relief is sought by (a) postponing the December 15 installment of the tax on 1919 profits and income, and (b) by allowing the inventory losses of 1920 to be offset against the profits of 1919, and, to that extent, reducing the amount of the December, 1920, installment. While no one can speak for the final action of the committee, or of the Senate or House, on these proposals, it is eminently proper and, to my mind, most urgent that the taxpayers directly interested and the country at large be informed at the earliest possible moment of the present financial situation of the country, to the end that they may exercise their own judgment as to the probability or possibility of securing the relief demanded. This is especially true as to the demand for the postponement of the last installment of taxes, which falls due December 15.

I wish, therefore, to present a most general statement of the conditions of the National Treasury, its immediate obligations, and its cash assets to meet them:

Amount of cash in Treasury Dec. 6, 1920	$160,018,235
Dec. 15 tax installment, estimated	650,000,000
Total	810,018,235

Turning now to our immediate liabilities:

Outstanding certificates maturing Dec. 15, 1920	700,000,000
Maturing Jan. 3–15, 1921	300,000,000
Maturing Dec. 15, 1920	140,000,000
Total	1,140,000,000

Thus, Mr. President, if every dollar of the December 15 installment is paid in full and the last cent in the Treasury, excluding the comparatively small amount that will be secured from general internal revenue sources and which will be far more than offset by the amount paid out for general governmental expenses, there would still be left by January 15 past-due obligations of $329,981,765.

But even that deficit is based on the assumption that the Treasury is milked dry—is left bankrupt. In making his calculations and estimates the Secretary of the Treasury places cash of $250,000,000 as the minimum of safety.

Therefore, to keep the Treasury on a safe basis we must add this sum, which brings the deficit or amount which must be raised in some manner to $579,981,765.

But even this gigantic deficit, which requires immediate liquidation, does not disclose the full truth. There must be added to this whatever sum is necessary to make good deficits growing out of governmental operation of railroads, estimated by the President in his annual message at $650,000,000, bringing the total deficit immediately confronting us to $1,229,981,765.

Mr. President, this is the situation, and it is the deficit that meets our immediate gaze. But it is not the end of our difficulties.

The Secretary, in his annual report, directs our vision along a vista including two fiscal years, or two and a half calendar years, from the 1st day of January next. He leaves us with a deficit on June 30, 1921, of $2,000,000,000, and on June 30, 1922, of nearly $1,500,000,000.

I ask to have printed the report for these two fiscal years:

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

[From report of Secretary of the Treasury for the year ended June 30, 1920.]

On page 273 and following is a summarized estimate of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1921, as follows:

Balance in Treasury June 30, 1920		$359,947,020.33
Estimated receipts:
Ordinary	$5,739,565,000
Public debt	60,193,375
Total	$5,799,758,375
Estimated expenditures:
Ordinary	4,851,298,931
Public debt (including $2,509,550,500 certificates of indebtedness outstanding maturing within year, but not including Pittman Act certificates)	3,063,443,584
Total	7,914,742,515
Excess of estimated expenditures over estimated receipts		2,114,984,140.00
Estimated deficit in general fund June 30, 1921		1,755,037,119.67
Estimated amount necessary for balance in general fund June 30, 1921		250,000,000.00
Estimated gross deficiency June 30, 1921		2,005,037,119.67

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Do the figures which the Senator has just stated contemplate any reimbursement to the railroads or contemplate the payment by our allies of any portion of the interest upon the $10,000,000,000 loaned them?

Mr. McCUMBER. No. However, in the statement which I have given, and which I stated was not taken into consideration in the Treasurer's estimate, was the sum of $650,000,000 to be paid to the railways, as shown by the message of the President of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague [Mr. KING] that these figures do not include any deficiency appropriations which may be made between now and June 30, 1921.

Mr. KING. I understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. We do not know what they will be.

Mr. SMOOT. Whatever sum they amount to will be added to this deficit.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish now to give the figures for the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, of course, in view of this enormous deficit plus the present condition of the country, it is apparent that this Congress ought to use the ax wherever possible and prune the appropriation bills, which will soon come before the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is one of my purposes in giving this early statement of the situation.

Fiscal year 1922.

Estimated deficit in general fund June 30, 1921 (as above)		$1,755,037,119.67
Estimated receipts:
Ordinary	$4,859,530,000
Public debt	60,200,000
Total	$4,919,730,000
Estimated expenditures:
Ordinary, exclusive of expenditures on account increased compensation of Government employees, of expenditures account additional compensation in Postal Service, and of expenditures on account of new construction in Navy	3,897,419,227
Public debt	465,854,865
Total	4,363,274,092
Excess of estimated receipts over estimated expenditures		565,455,908.00
Estimated deficit in the general fund June 30, 1922		1,198,581,211.67
Estimated amount necessary for balance in the general fund June 30, 1922		250,000,000.00
Estimated gross deficiency June 30, 1922		1,448,581,211.67

Now, Mr. President, the estimated receipts and disbursements for the year ending June 30, 1922, do not include deficits which must be taken care of during the coming year. The President estimated for the railroads $650,000,000. As nearly as I can learn, this deficit, when all claims are in, will be nearly double that amount, or about $1,125,000,000.

On October 31, 1920, there were still outstanding and unpaid tax certificate obligations of the Government due from December 15, 1920, to March 15, 1921, of $506,527,500. If we carry the tax certificates to September 15, 1921, the total will be $1,782,040,000. If we include the loan certificates which become due within the year, this total will amount to $2,629,432,950. I call attention to page 22 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Here is an important feature which we ought to take into consideration. About $4,250,000,000 of Victory notes mature May 20, 1923, $800,000,000 of war-savings certificates mature January 1, 1923, and $2,347,000,000 of loan and tax certificates mature within the year. Within a period therefore of about two and one-half years, ending May, 1923, there will become due and payable $7,500,000,000 of Government war obligations. I call attention to page 23 of the Secretary's report.

It is worthy of note that the Secretary bases his estimate of the deficit which will exist on June 30, 1922, on the assumption that our revenue for that fiscal year will be $4,859,530,000, or nearly $5,000,000,000. I do not wish to take a gloomy view of our industrial prospects, but if 1921 as a whole is not a most decided improvement over the last two months of 1920 this revenue will not be one-half of that sum.

Now, with these great deficits, both near and far, staring us in the face we are striving to find some way by which we can relieve the agricultural situation. We hope for some kind of relief through a revival of the activities of the War Finance Corporation. While wheat and wool are pouring into this country in unprecedented volume, driving down the prices of the American product to half the cost of producing it, we are about to ask this War Finance Corporation in some way to finance the bankrupt countries of Europe so we can export our wheat to them. If we were business men—possibly I ought not to say "and not statesmen"—we would follow our business instinct and we would at least close the intake to our tank while we were struggling to empty the tank through the spigot. But of that hereafter.

We are now considering the financial situation. What the farmer needs is money to live on until he can get a half living price for his crop. What the country bank needs is money to loan this farmer.

Mr. President, in my State 23 banks closed during the past three weeks. These banks were all, with one exception, I think, in a section of the country where there have been crop failures, whole or nearly whole, for three or four years.

During each of those years the banks of this section have had to extend credits over the former years until they themselves can secure no further credits from the reserve banks. Many other banks would have been closed except for assessments upon stockholders.

Where can we get the money? The testimony of Mr. Harding, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, taken before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, on the whole is to the effect that the reserve banks have extended their credit as far as they can safely do so; that if they were to further extend those credits and the present conditions should continue, it might endanger our whole banking system.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope my colleague will not get the impression that the 23 banks closed had been extended credit from the Federal Reserve Board, because that is not the true condition.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; they are State banks.

Mr. GRONNA. None of them belong to the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am speaking now of the general plan to get money to finance the situation in these agricultural sections. That must come from these Federal reserve banks.

Now, if these banks can not supply associate banks with money sufficient to tide over the agricultural depression, how can these same banks furnish the money to a foreign people to buy these farm products? For, after all, what these farmers must have, and what these country banks must have, is money, and the credit that is not backed by cash somewhere in the background is not a very reliable credit.

So it would seem to me that so far as the agricultural situation is concerned, the first, the real, the sensible thing to be done is to close the intake pipe, stop the importations, and give the American farmer exclusively the American market so long as he can supply that market at living prices.

Mr. KING and Mr. NELSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Would not that result in depriving the people of Europe of the purchasing power to purchase our products? If Europe can sell nothing to this country, how can they be in a position to buy our products freely? Has the Senator considered that matter?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, there is no question but what we can not continue to universally trade with a country where the balance of trade is always in our favor and against that country unless that country can get a balance of trade somewhere else. But our first and impending duty now is to take care of our own people if we can. They can not sell their products. We are seeking through a governmental board to provide means by which we can export these products to foreign countries when, as a matter of fact, the same products are coming into this country in unprecedented quantities.

Why, I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that during the month of October alone about 10,000,000 bushels of wheat, including flour, crossed the Canadian line for Minneapolis. During the month of November I am informed that that will run at least to 12,000,000 bushels.

Now, we are seeking to export this wheat to Germany and Austria and to finance those countries in some way so that they can buy our exports and thereby relieve the depression, when the depression is growing continually by enormous imports into the United States.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was interested in the suggestion of the Senator that the proposition had been made that we finance the European nations so that they might purchase our products. I wish to invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that the manufacturers and producers of the United States have extended to Europe approximately $4,000,000,000 of credit during the past year or two. Unless there is a rehabilitation of Europe quite speedily, unquestionably many of our producers who have extended that credit will not only suffer great loss, but in many instances it will be irreparable loss.

I was wondering if the Senator intends to discuss, before concluding, the manner by which we should finance Europe. It seems to me that if any financing is to occur by which they are to purchase our products we must do something that will put the European people to work, so they will have something with which to purchase. If they do not have money or products with which to buy we can not, it seems to me, finance Europe in the hope, in the end, of receiving back the amount which we have advanced to them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know there is a great deal in that; but we can not use our cash to put those people to work while our own people are being put out of work, and there is the great difficulty. It is the depression in our own country that we must look out for first, and thus give our own people in the United States an opportunity to earn a living, irrespective of its final effect upon any other country.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if these State banks had joined the Federal association would they not have strengthened their borrowing capacity, and naturally would not that have relieved the situation, or helped to relieve the situation?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is barely possible that if some of those State banks were in the association they might in the past have received some assistance in credit, but I doubt if they could receive any to-day, even if they were associated, because one of the banks in my State, I notice, that has just closed its doors was a member of the association. There are a sufficient number of national banks members of the association to relieve the situation in that section of the country, provided they could get the credit from the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. DIAL. Probably the reason why they could not get the credit was that they wanted the money on paper that was not eligible for rediscount.

Mr. McCUMBER. Undoubtedly that plays an important part, but the real trouble is that credit has been so expanded that the presidents and the boards of control of the Federal banks feel that with falling markets they must keep their reserves up and their credits down in order to be perfectly safe.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from North Dakota to argue that the situation in which the wheat growers find themselves in this country would be relieved if we were to place an embargo upon foreign wheat and not permit any further importations into this country?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; the situation would be greatly relieved but not fully relieved. The Senator can see for himself that a million bushels a month would have been a large importation from Canada under ordinary conditions. In the month of October there were about 10,000,000 bushels, including the flour, that were imported free of duty into the northwestern markets. Canada has had a splendid crop. During that month wheat dropped about 60 cents a bushel, just at the time that the Canadian wheat was coming in. With another 12,000,000 bushels in December, and at that rate of importation for a few months, we shall have all the Canadian export wheat in the United States, and we shall then be compelled to find an export market not alone for the American surplus but also for an additional amount equal to the Canadian surplus.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator, then, attributes the fall in the price of wheat somewhat to those importations?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; to a great extent.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, at the same time, I understand the Senator as saying that if those importations had not taken place, and if those importations are not permitted in the future, still the situation in which the wheat growers find themselves would not be relieved?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, it will not be completely relieved. We are having a period of depression, and the wheat growers and every other business must stand that; but a complete embargo against importations would greatly relieve the situation.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no way to relieve that condition, which would exist and be unremedied even by an embargo?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not completely to relieve it, I will admit, but we are seeking in some way to palliate the trouble as much as possible. And if we can relieve it one-half we should not hesitate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it not a fact that, leaving out the question of importations altogether, we produced last year, as we have generally produced in past years, a very large excess over the demands of this country?

Mr. McCUMBER. That must be qualified. As to the production of a certain kind of wheat which was used for a certain kind of flour, yes; of another kind of wheat, which is raised extensively and, indeed, almost exclusively in the States of North and South Dakota, eastern Montana, and Minnesota, no; because they have not raised a sufficient amount this year of the latter kind to meet the demands of millers for that character of wheat for their trade. That is the kind of grain that is coming over from Canada.

Mr. SIMMONS. And if that character of wheat sells at a low price, that is reflected in the price of the other kinds of wheat, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the crux of the matter is that an embargo will not relieve the situation; that it is necessary in some way or other to stimulate exportations of wheat? Is that not true?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am in favor of both propositions. While I doubt if we shall get very much assistance from the renewed activities of the War Finance Corporation, I am hopeful that they will have a tendency to help to some extent. I therefore would favor its revival, and I would favor every possible measure that would tend to help the situation. To my mind, however, the embargo is far more important than any other proposed remedy.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the other is absolutely essential in order to stabilize prices, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I do not think it is absolutely essential. I hope it will help to stabilize the prices and assist us some way in our connection with exports.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was apprehensive, Mr. President, from the remarks of the Senator up to the time of my interruption that he was going to oppose a revival of the War Finance Corporation as a means of helping exportation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Far from it. I am in favor of as many remedies as we can possibly put through that hold the slightest promise.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me in his time to draw a parallel between the wheat situation and the cotton situation I shall be very glad now to do so.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me one moment I shall be through, and then I shall yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will only take a minute.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from North Dakota has shown to us that an embargo upon importations of wheat would greatly relieve the wheat situation. In that particular the cotton situation differs entirely and fundamentally from the wheat situation.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. No embargo upon cotton will affect the cotton situation in the slightest degree.

Mr. McCUMBER. Because we import practically no cotton.

Mr. SIMMONS. Because we export cotton and do not import any except some Egyptian cotton. The only thing that can relieve us is to provide some means by which we can export to Europe the same proportion of our cotton products that we have been heretofore doing.

I have seen some suggestions in the newspapers that this year we have exported during the last few months about the same quantity as we did last year. That may be so, Mr. President, but our exports during that same period of time as compared with our exportations in normal times is as three to one.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, Mr. President, the principal object of this address is to reach the ear of those who are asking favors of the Government. We want every man and every corporation who must be called upon to remit for taxes to look not alone upon their own discomforts but also upon the country's dire need. We want the soldier who is asking for immediate action on a bonus bill to exercise patience and forbearance, and to understand the grave financial difficulties that confront Congress. And we want our appropriation committees to cut to the bone and to keep appropriations down to the limit of the bare necessity of government. This is no time even to dream of new governmental projects which will call for Treasury disbursements.

Mr. President, I have a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury written in response to a letter from Mr. FORDNEY, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, pertaining to the matter of extending the time of payment of the December 15 installment of income and profits taxes and also in regard to offsetting the inventory losses of 1920 as against 1919 profits. The Secretary of the Treasury very fully discloses why that would seem to be an impossibility. I will ask that the letter written by Mr. FORDNEY and the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

NOVEMBER 19, 1920.

Hon. DAVID F. HOUSTON,
The Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HOUSTON: The Committee on Ways and Means is in receipt of numerous communications from taxpayers referring to declining values and resulting inventory losses during the taxable year 1920. Complaint is made of inability or difficulty in raising money to meet the December 15 tax installment, and action is urged to postpone payment of the December 15 installment of income and profits taxes under certain conditions and legislation is advocated by them to extend the "net loss" provisions of the revenue act of 1918 to the year 1920.

I would be pleased to receive any suggestions or recommendations you may see fit to make in this connection.

Very truly, yours,

J. W. FORDNEY.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., November 20, 1920.

Hon. J. W. FORDNEY,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FORDNEY: I received your letter of November 19, 1920. I am glad to have this opportunity of stating the Treasury's views on the two proposals which have been made to you by certain taxpayers. The first is to postpone the payment of the December 15 installment of income and profits taxes. The second is that the "net loss" provisions of the revenue act of 1918 be extended to the year 1920, presumably to permit the deduction of inventory losses during the taxable year 1920 from the net income for the taxable year 1919, with redetermination of the 1919 taxes accordingly. Similar suggestions have recently come to the Treasury. The agitation for these changes in the law is doing much harm, and, from the point of view of the Treasury, it is important that the situation be made clear.

As you know, the revenue act of 1918 provided for the payment of income and profit taxes in four quarterly installments due on March 15, June 15, September 15, and December 15. The taxes due on December 15, 1920, represent chiefly the final installment due in respect to income and profits of the taxable year 1919. Taxpayers have already had nearly 12 months' grace as to this final installment and have had every opportunity to make provisions for its payment by setting up the necessary reserves or purchasing Treasury certificates of indebtedness. The Treasury Department, moreover, has adjusted its financial program to the tax payment dates provided by the revenue act of 1918. There are outstanding nearly $700,000,000 of certificates maturing on December 15, 1920, and an additional $300,000,000 mature on January 3 and January 15, 1921. On December 15 there will also become payable the semiannual interest on the first Liberty loan and the Victory Liberty loan, aggregating about $140,000,000. To meet these heavy maturities of principal and interest and at the same time provide for the current requirements of the Government, enlarged as they are by the extraordinary burdens imposed upon the Treasury in connection with payments to the railroads, the Treasury relies chiefly on the income and profits taxes payable on December 15. This installment is not expected to exceed $650,000,000. The Treasury must finance its further requirements, so far as they are not covered by ordinary current receipts, through issues of Treasury certificates of indebtedness. It would be impossible to defer the payment of the December installment of taxes without forcing the Treasury to offer Treasury certificates in prohibitive amounts.

Moreover, to extend the time for the payment of the December 15 installments would simply mean that the Treasury would, in effect, be financing private business, which should provide for itself through ordinary banking channels, if necessary. In this respect the proposal is not different from those insistently made to the Treasury during the last few months, that Government funds be made available in various sections of the country to finance the holding of commodities or for the export of goods to Europe.

The suggestion that the "net loss" provisions of the revenue act of 1918 be extended to the year 1920 is equally impossible from the point of view of the Treasury. Under the present revenue law the Treasury receives in the year 1920 taxes based on the income and profits of taxpayers during the year 1919. The whole financial program of the Government requires that the Treasury be able to rely upon the collection of these taxes. No change should be entertained which would render uncertain the bulk of the Government's tax receipts and perhaps result in heavy claims for refunds with consequent increases in the public debt and additional short-term financing. There is, furthermore, no reason in fairness why taxpayers who made profits in 1919 and became liable to pay taxes on the basis of those profits should now be permitted to throw upon the Government the burden of losses incurred in the conduct of their own businesses in the year 1920.

The Treasury must of necessity promptly meet the Government's bills. If uncertainty is to be introduced now into the tax payments upon which the Treasury principally relies, it clearly will be impossible for the Government to finance itself.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

Mr. McCUMBER. I also ask, Mr. President, to insert as a part of my remarks certain tables covering the points I have discussed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Amount of cash in Treasury Dec. 6, 1920	$160,018,235
Dec. 15 tax installment, estimated	650,000,000

Estimated gross deficiency June 30, 1922			1,448,581,211.67

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I assume from the statement of the Senator that the majority members of the Finance Committee have conferred about this matter and that they have reached——

Mr. McCUMBER. They have not conferred as a committee, of course——

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, informally.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the Republican members have informally met a few times and discussed a number of situations.

Mr. SIMMONS. And they have determined that there shall be no action and can be no action for the purpose of extending the time of payment of the next installment, due in December, of the income and profits taxes?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; Mr. President, they have not so determined, because that determination would have to be made by the committee. There has simply been a discussion among a few of the Republican members.

Mr. SIMMONS. They have decided that they will not do anything to bring that matter before the Senate for action, have they not?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, I think that is not correct, because I think the matter will come up before the committee, and the committee will undoubtedly have a meeting in a very short time to consider it. I am not presenting these figures on behalf of the committee nor on behalf of any members of the committee, but I am presenting them so that those who are interested in the postponement of the payment of the taxes due in December may know that in all probability the request can not be granted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean that the committee will be called together before the 15th of December?

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that, so far as I am personally concerned, I think the business interests of the United States ought to be advised at once——

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I am trying to have done.

Mr. SMOOT. That the Government of the United States can not extend the time for the payment of the taxes which fall due on December 15, and, so far as I am concerned as a member of the Finance Committee, I am ready to say that we can not do it, and I believe that the business interests ought to know it. Therefore I make this statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the statement made by the Senator from Utah. I do not think it is practicable to extend the time, and I was trying to make it plain and clear that it could not be done and would not be attempted, so that the business interests of the country might know now, finally, that no effort in that direction will be made.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is my reason for presenting this argument, to show how impossible it will be. Of course the committee must finally determine that question for itself.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true, and also as to the proposition with reference to allowing inventory losses.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. I think the report by the Secretary of the Treasury is a complete answer to the request.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question of another character?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator in his very clear and comprehensive financial statement informs the Senate and the country that on the 30th day of the coming next June we will be confronted with a deficit of something over $2,000,000,000, as I understood him, and that on the 30th day of June, 1922, we will be confronted with a larger deficit.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; with a somewhat smaller deficit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I make this statement, of course, from the estimates furnished by the Secretary; I am not giving my own but the Secretary's estimates.

Mr. SIMMONS. That presents, of course, a very serious situation, and I want to inquire of the Senator, who is the acting chairman of the Finance Committee and who, I understand, has informally conferred with his colleagues in the majority, if he has himself individually or in conjunction with his associates on the committee in the majority considered the feasibility of utilizing a part of the indebtedness of foreign governments to us in liquidation of this enormous deficit?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not—I do not know whether any other members have discussed that subject—because I have felt that it was impossible for any of the foreign governments to pay their debt now. I understand that they are not even paying the interest on it—I am not certain as to that——

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is true.

Mr. McCUMBER. And, of course, if they are not paying the interest, we can hardly ask them to pay the principal in liquidation.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is undoubtedly true, Mr. President. But is it not also true that it is possible to get this indebtedness, or at least a large part of this indebtedness, reduced to a form which we might use as security for the purpose of raising the necessary money?

Mr. McCUMBER. We have got the obligations of the governments now, and I know of no form of an obligation that is better than a Government bond.

Mr. SIMMONS. We have not got Government bonds.

Mr. McCUMBER. Whether we have Government bonds or Government agreements, we have the strongest known obligation.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is mistaken about that; that is the trouble; I do not think we have any Government bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. We have the I. O. U's of the foreign governments; that is all.

Mr. SIMMONS. We have their I. O. U's, and that is all.

Mr. GLASS. We have their demand obligations, which can not now be paid, but negotiations are pending for putting those obligations into the form of long-time obligations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Those obligations bear interest the same as our own securities, and that is why I spoke of them, not really as bonds, but as Government obligations that are just as safe as though they were Government bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not at all clear in my mind that any use can be made of these securities when they are put in proper form to help us out of the distressing condition in which the Treasury finds itself; but I wanted to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota, the acting chairman of the Finance Committee, that the matter ought to be very seriously considered. It is possible, it may be probable, that we might reduce the bonds of certain of these Governments, like those of Great Britain, to a form in which we might use them at some time during the period between now and the 30th of June so as to help us liquidate this deficiency.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am in favor of having an early meeting of the committee and inviting the Secretary of the Treasury to be present, and seeing what we can do along that line.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have taken the position, of course, that as long as the Governments owing us money can not pay the interest on their obligations, the Governments can not pay the obligations themselves.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course not.

Mr. SMOOT. I have also taken the position that the individuals of these different countries are in no state whatever to purchase the obligations, and in fact I doubt whether we can sell them at all to any foreign country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. If we could not sell the obligations to foreign countries, could we not sell them to our own people?

Mr. SMOOT. I was just coming to that. I was about to say that therefore if we put them in a position whereby they could be sold in small quantities, the only purchasers would be American investors. I have my doubts as to whether that would assist the Government very materially. Whatever money was used for the purchase of these foreign obligations by American investors of course would be diverted from the investment of the same funds in some other way, and it may be that it would be of very little assistance in the situation as it exists to-day.

The Senator referred to the fact that they could use them as security for the issuing of more Federal bank notes. That is true, Mr. President. I think Congress could authorize that, and that we could issue more Federal bank notes upon this indebtedness of foreign countries; but we have lots of security already in this country that we could use as collateral for that purpose if we want to increase that kind of money.

Mr. KING. We are expanding our credit too much now.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, as I said before, I never shy at the word "inflation." I knew that that is what we would have to come to, and that is where we were, and that is where we are; and the only question would be, if we issued further Federal notes upon this security it would be an expansion of the currency of the United States and would be further inflation. That is the way I look at it.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution 212 be taken up for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Before that is done I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum, because there are some Senators who want to be present when the joint resolution is taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Ball	Gronna	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Borah	Harris	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	Nelson	Spencer
Capper	Henderson	New	Sterling
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Norris	Sutherland
Colt	Johnson, Calif.	Nugent	Swanson
Curtis	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Dial	Kendrick	Phipps	Townsend
Dillingham	Kenyon	Poindexter	Trammell
Fernald	King	Pomerene	Underwood
Fletcher	Kirby	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
France	Knox	Sheppard	Warren
Gay	La Follette	Simmons

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] is necessarily absent; also that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent owing to illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GRONNA. I renew my request for unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution 212 be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no objection to taking up this joint resolution at the present time; but I received a copy of the hearings only this morning. So far as I have been able to read them they seem to me to be of great importance. I expect to say something upon this measure, but in view of the bulky nature of the hearings I do not think I shall be able to read them to-day. Upon the understanding that if I am not ready this afternoon the matter will go over until to-morrow, I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, which was read, as follows:

Whereas there exists in the agricultural sections of the country unprecedented and unparalleled distress on account of the inability of the farmers to dispose of the corn, wheat, cotton, live stock, and other commodities now in marketable condition at prices that will pay the cost of production; and

Whereas the people of Europe are in dire need of the agricultural products now in possession of the farmers of this country, but are unable to purchase on account of existing financial conditions; and

Whereas, under an act of Congress, there was established the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of financing the exportation of American products to foreign markets; and

Whereas the activities of the War Finance Corporation were suspended in May, 1920, by an order of the Secretary of the Treasury; and

Whereas the banks of the country are unable to extend credit to the farmer in order that the farm products may be held until they can be sold in a fair and reasonable market: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation are hereby directed to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural products to foreign markets.

SEC. 2. That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby directed to take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking, to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them, by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at the lowest possible rate of interest.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, certainly the time has come when we must do something to relieve the agricultural situation in this country. I am just as far from being in favor of paternalism as any man in the United States. I do not think that it is for the best interests of this country for our people to come to depend upon the Government for help in normal times. It is a bad precedent. But, Mr. President, these are abnormal times, and we are living under abnormal conditions; and I felt many, many months ago that it was the duty of this Government to restore the War Finance Corporation.

It is not very good taste, Mr. President, to say "I told you so"; but when Congress adjourned in June I thought I could see financial trouble ahead, certainly a great deal of it for my section of the country. I therefore remained here and took up with the Secretary of the Treasury the question of the War Finance Corporation resuming operations. At that time the South had something like 3,000,000 bales of cotton which we carried over last season. A great deal of that cotton was off grade, and there was no market for it. During the war the Government had its goods made out of the best grade of cotton, and some of the best customers for that grade of cotton have been out of the market for many years. Then, with the new crop coming on, I thought I could see where we would have a great deal of trouble in getting rid of what we had on hand. Therefore I thought it was very important to restore relations with the different countries of the world which used our cotton, and get it out of this country as fast as possible.

The Secretary of the Treasury did not think that was necessary. At that time prices were reasonably good. But they commenced to decline at once, and kept on declining. I came back to Washington in August and took the matter up again with the Secretary of the Treasury, and he was still of the same opinion. At that time I conferred with all of the Senators who were here whom I could find, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and I wrote a letter to the President, which I desire to include in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

AUGUST 16, 1920.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We desire to call your attention to the condition of the farmers in this country and ask your help. For various reasons the growing crop has been and will be a very expensive one. Labor was scarce and high, fertilizers were high, and everything that goes into the making of a crop seems to be at excessive figures. Owing to the congested condition of the railroads, the money situation, and the state of exchange, a great deal of the last crop has not been disposed of. Some time ago the War Finance Corporation ceased to take on new business. We now desire to ask you to authorize this corporation to resume active operations. We are not desiring the Government to engage in business which the citizens should carry on. In ordinary times and under usual conditions we would not make the above request. A few months ago some of us mentioned the matter to the Secretary of the Treasury, but at that time he did not see the necessity of taking on new businesss. We called at his office the other day, as we desired to present the matter to him again, since conditions had greatly changed within the last 60 days. Within this time wheat has declined something like 60 cents per bushel, oats and corn in proportion, and cotton about 8 cents a pound. In fact, all agricultural products are moving slowly, and this in the face of the harvest rapidly approaching.

During the war the Government ordered its supplies of cotton goods made out of the higher grades; furthermore, of course, Germany and Austria, and even other countries, could not receive their usual amounts of American cotton. Therefore there is a great quantity of off-grades staple in the South, for which there is practically no market. For example, low middling cotton is quoted at 10 cents a pound, or $50 a bale, under middling. The next grade is nearly $100 a bale under middling. At present it seems that the growing crop will be a very large one and perhaps prices will continue to decline.

During the war the agricultural interests of this country did all they could to buy bonds and otherwise support the Government in every financial way, with the expectation that the Government would continue to aid them to market their crops to the best advantage until world conditions should become settled and normal. If it would require a bond issue to accomplish this we certainly would not make the request. The loans desired are temporary and would soon be repaid. We are informed that there are about 153,000,000 spindles in the world and that a large majority of these are idle.

We understand that various European countries are exceedingly anxious to purchase our cotton and other agricultural products, but that it is essential that they shall receive some indulgence. The manufacturing interests of Czechoslovakia have been particularly called to our attention, as they desire to buy directly from our exporters, on credits indorsed by their banks and guaranteed by their Government, and further agree to hold the product in trust for payment of the purchase money.

We are strongly of the opinion that the War Finance Corporation should resume operations, at least so far as agricultural products are concerned.

The corporation while operating did considerable business and more was being rapidly offered. Czechoslovakia especially was a very promising customer. We have been urged by our constituents, and also by friends of some of the Central European countries, to present the urgency of this matter strongly to the President.

To our certain knowledge a great number of farmers purchased bonds and they borrowed money from the banks to carry these, expecting to pay for them when they disposed of their cotton. You are doubtless aware, Mr. President, that the farmers lose annually millions of dollars because they have not had the opportunity of learning in its modern phases the complex art of marketing to the best advantage. By enabling foreign countries to purchase our surplus supplies our warehouses will be relieved so that they will be prepared to handle the next crop, and customers will be enabled to pay their obligations to the banks, thereby taking up their bonds, keeping these securities off the market, and preventing them from being sacrificed. By this course every interest in this country and abroad would be benefited. Supplies will be placed where they are needed and many idle people of the world will be enabled, in part at least, to pay their obligations. By giving people employment the spread of unrest and bolshevism will be checked. We have been recently impressed more than ever with the fact that it takes both time and credit to restore a war-stricken world.

We know of no grander work than aiding farmers to make their employment successful. If some relief is not granted, many of them will face bankruptcy. Just the knowledge that other markets have been opened to their products will greatly stabilize conditions.

We respectfully urge your immediate consideration of this suggestion and believe that if you will authorize the measure proposed great good will immediately follow.

Respectfully,

F. M. SIMMONS,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
N. B. DIAL.

Mr. DIAL. Commodities still continued to decline, and the American Cotton Association had a meeting here and appointed a committee to see the Secretary of the Treasury. I was on that committee, and I again had a conference with him, and he still adhered to the same opinion.

Mr. President, as I said before, I do not believe that it is the right thing for citizens of this country to appeal to the Government for help in case they can help themselves or in ordinary times. But I felt that we were justified in coming to the Government and asking relief, for the reason that during the war all good people of this country bought all the bonds they could possibly carry, and they expected help from the banks. I know in my section of the country they subscribed very largely, and they had the cotton on hand, and they expected the Government to let the War Finance Corporation function until they got rid of that commodity and until we would be able to turn that commodity into cash and pay our debts.

We had great quantities of cotton in the warehouses and were paying storage on it; the banks were carrying paper, and the Government bonds were in the banks. If we could have found a market where we could have sold our cotton, we would have paid the debts to the banks, and the Government bonds would have been taken out, thereby stabilizing the price of these Government securities.

If a bond issue had been necessary to do that, I would have said no. But all we need is just a little banking capital, in transit, as it were. It would be but a few months after we started to export the cotton until it would be made into goods and the goods turned into cash. So I felt that the people of this country had a right to expect the Government to let the War Finance Corporation continue to function, because it was established to meet just such an emergency as arose this summer.

Mr. President, being unable to persuade the Secretary of the Treasury to change his mind, on October 26 I wrote the President another letter, which I desire to include in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OCTOBER 26, 1920.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I feel it my duty to again call your attention to the condition of the agricultural interests of this country and ask you to restore the War Finance Corporation.

While we all were prepared to expect some reductions in prices, yet they have gone far below anything dreamed of, and our people are losing millions of dollars daily, while other countries are buying our products at bargain-counter prices.

The War Finance Corporation is the only Government agency that can help immediately, and the good people of this country have a right to expect this to be done.

I discussed this matter with Secretary Houston at length on three different occasions, and I must say that he does not comprehend in the least the situation, or he does not desire to assist the American producer, and I feel that it is absolutely useless for anyone to confer with him further on the subject. I am satisfied beyond question that he is making more Republican votes than Senators HARDING and LODGE put together. In fact, I look upon the situation as desperate and appalling. The Republicans charge us with not letting the country be prosperous even when it is in our power to do so.

I have conferred with pretty much all the leaders of our party here, amongst them Senators UNDERWOOD, HITCHCOCK, SIMMONS, ROBINSON, FLETCHER, and others, together with a number of Cabinet officers, and I have not yet found a single man who does not agree that the War Finance Corporation should resume operations at once.

The people of this country almost unanimously would approve and applaud your action in granting the above request.

Yours, truly,

N. B. DIAL.

Mr. DIAL. Now, we find that all agricultural products have declined greatly. Cotton has gone down from 43.5 cents to something like 15 cents a pound. We have heard the discussion of the wool market here to-day. We know wheat has declined from $3 a bushel to something like $1.50 a bushel, and corn from $2.30 down to something like 40 cents a bushel. So I feel, Mr. President, that it is not open to debate any longer, but that we should act, and act quickly, because the whole country is becoming embarrassed, not only the producers, but the banks and everyone else, and whatever relief we have to offer we should immediately put into operation.

Mr. President, I gave out a short interview some time ago which I desire to include in my remarks. It was along this line, that if the banks of this country would join the Federal Reserve Banking Association they would thereby strengthen the association and aid themselves to borrow money and carry the commodities until they could get a better price for them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter may be printed.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NOVEMBER 12, 1920.

Senator DIAL was to-day interviewed and asked whether or not he had any further information or suggestion that would benefit the people of the South in marketing their cotton. He replied that he had had correspondence and conferences with representatives of practically every country in the world which manufactures cotton, and he was sorry to say that the universal cry was "no money." He sent names of various of these parties to exporters in the South and to the new export companies which are forming for their consideration.

The Senator said it is no longer a question of debate; the time is upon us when we will have to revolutionize our method of marketing; that heretofore Europe had money to buy cotton and New York was also flushed with funds with which to aid in exporting; that conditions have changed; that European countries were without funds and that New York people could use theirs at a greater profit elsewhere than in the South, and the South would have to find a market and help finance the exporting of its cotton; that he was informed spinners in some of the countries could give satisfactory paper, but this is a matter which will have to be decided as each case presents itself.

He said that he had noticed with pleasure and delight the progress that is being made in forming at least three export and kindred export companies in the South; that he hoped the entire capital of these companies would be subscribed without delay.

He stated that in order to do business cash was desirable, but the next best thing was credit, and this could be obtained in the following manner:

There are in South Carolina 82 national banks, with total resources of $139,971,000; there are 379 State banks, with total resources of $203,155,000; that only 16 of these State banks, with total resources of $17,061,000, were members of the Federal Reserve System; that State banks which are not members of the Federal Reserve System did not have privilege of rediscounting their paper with said system; hence there were in South Carolina 363 State banks, with resources of $186,094,000, who were not entitled to the privilege of the Federal Reserve System, against 98 national banks and State banks, with resources of $146,123,000, whose paper was eligible for rediscount.

Therefore, the way for us to help ourselves was for all of these State banks to become national banks, or at least join the Federal Reserve Banking Association, in which event the borrowing capacity would more than double the amount that at present is allowed banks in South Carolina. If this should be done in South Carolina and a similar procedure adopted all over the South, the question of marketing cotton gradually would in a measure be solved.

The Senator said he hoped at an early date to see all banks take this course, and by so doing it would not only strengthen the Federal Reserve Banking Association but would greatly increase their own usefulness and aid their customers in innumerable ways.

Mr. DIAL. For instance, in South Carolina there are only 82 national banks, whereas there are 379 State banks, and only 16 of the State banks are members of the Federal Reserve Banking Association. Not half the banking capital of our State is represented in the membership of the banking association. So if they would convert themselves into national banks, they would be in position to have their paper rediscounted at all times.

We have heard here to-day about the banks in North Dakota failing. I am sorry for anybody who fails. It is a very dangerous proposition when banks begin to fail. But I am informed that only one of those banks was a national bank. I want to appeal to the banks of this country to support the Federal Reserve Banking Association. I am a great friend of that institution, and had it not been for it this whole country would have been in bankruptcy; possibly we could not have won the war. I was surprised to learn a short time ago that there were more banks in the South, in our district, in the fifth district, not members than in any other section of the country, and down there we need credit.

So the time has come, Mr. President, when the people of this country must help themselves. While I believe it is right that the Government should restore the War Finance Corporation, yet I do not believe in letting them operate very long, only until conditions become normal. We should turn our attention to helping ourselves, and I am glad that in the South we are going to do that. We are forming down there now an American Export & Import Co., with a capital of several million dollars, with headquarters in South Carolina, under the most competent management, and we are preparing to ship our goods to where they are needed.

We are also forming a bank, under the Edge bill, with something like $5,000,000 capital, with a proposed capital of $10,000,000. That is going to aid very much. We are also forming other export companies.

We will have to learn to help ourselves, Mr. President, and one way we can do it is by forming these export companies. I am glad that there is a meeting in Chicago to-day where they proposed to form a hundred-million-dollar concern.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator if he believes those export corporations to which he is referring can properly function unless this War Finance Corporation is reinstated and enabled to furnish them the necessary funds?

Mr. DIAL. Not fully and successfully. I feel it would help some, but I feel that they are the kind of an institution which would get help from the War Finance Corporation.

There is some misapprehension about our extending credit to European countries.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the question I desired to ask the Senator was whether he thought it was feasible for them to function so as to accomplish the purpose and object of their corporation without some means of raising money through these banks.

Mr. DIAL. Not fully. They could help only in a small degree, but they would help much more if we would restore the War Finance Corporation. Then we could get somewhat adequate results.

I was going to say that there was some misapprehension about our desiring to lend money to these foreign countries. Probably we have already loaned those countries enough money. But the proposition in connection with the restoration of the War Finance Corporation is not to lend money to those countries, but to lend money to our exporters, and they will stand between the Government and danger. We do not need so much money, to my mind, as we need some guarantee company, or something like that, which will stand between the individual producer and the mills of the world.

I do not know that it is possible for the Government to go into guaranteeing, but if the farmers of the South knew where to sell their cotton, if they knew that the debt would be eventually paid, they would have no objection to crediting the purchaser, and through the War Finance Corporation we can lend a small amount to the exporters, and that would help carry the debt along. What we need is to put that cotton into the hands of people so that they can go to work. We have the commodity and it is doing us no good. It is almost a liability; we are paying storage on it; we are paying interest on the money. The Government has the assets, the Government has the ships, and the ships are becoming idle, and we want to put those ships to use. In Europe they have the mills, and a great many of the mills are intact; they were not destroyed during the war. They have the labor, and the demand is there for the goods, and I feel that we ought to put the people of this country and of the world back to work. There ought to be more work. That is the foundation of money, and that is the way to put people on their feet. If not put to work, they will be here again and forever asking for help.

We see now all about over the world that the idle are walking the streets; they are not producing and making a living for themselves; and if they do not do that, then they will be here with their hats in their hands asking us to support them. I feel we should take a lesson to ourselves now and try to encourage every man in the world to go to work.

Here is a commodity doing nobody any good, and the demand of the world is for it, and if those people put their labor into the product the manufactured product would be worth much more than the raw material, and thereby they would create wealth.

Mr. President, I believe that we ought not to hesitate a day to pass the resolution to restore the War Finance Corporation. It is not only for the help it would do the country by the actual money assistance; but, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] says, it will enable these other corporations to function, and the psychological effect of it will be wonderful. The world will say then that these commodities have gone low enough and we must begin to lay in our supply. The mills of this country and the people who use these commodities will say, "They have gone low enough and we must begin to purchase." Then we will turn these declining prices upward.

The people in my country are becoming bankrupt almost daily. It is a sad state of affairs.

I do not believe in finding fault unless we have a remedy to suggest, and I feel that the first remedy we have to suggest is to aid the people of the world to go to work. I feel that the results of this war possibly are good in some respects, but I feel we have acquired a good many false notions as a result of the war. We have the idea of helping every man, and we have a good deal of this flubdub stuff of short hours and do nothing and support the other fellow or let him come to the Government and get support if he can not get it anywhere else.

When we provide the people of the world with implements and work they will work out their own salvation. I believe one of the highest callings in life is to aid a man to help himself. If we do not, but go on and dole out a little money, it would be like the story of the Irishman, who said, "Faith, I don't believe it is fair for some people to have so much and some so little. I think we should have a divide."

And he was asked, "Pat, what difference would it make to you if you had some money? You would get drunk and spend it. What would you do then?"

He said, "Faith, I would want to divide again."

So that is the result of giving people something. The idea is to put these people to work and let them have the raw commodity with which to work.

Another way we can help ourselves besides organizing these export companies—and certainly the time has come when we down South should organize more of them—we should organize a strong export company, at least one in every State. Our banks would be glad to exchange farmers' notes for the notes of the export companies indorsed by the farmers. Therefore we would need very little cash money.

Another thing, Mr. President, Europe is in a very chaotic condition. We can not put Germany to work. Our good friend, France, stands there, and the reparation commission does not fix the amount of the indemnity, and the Germans are not ready to go to work. I have had some of them call on me to see about buying products. But they can not start real restoration of prosperity in that country until they know what the amount of the indemnity will be. I feel kindly to France, but I believe we did everything in the world France could expect, and there is no use for France to sit here now and keep the world in its present condition by not going on and fixing the amount of the indemnity, so that Germany can go to work in earnest and help pay it.

It occurs to me that France is trying to do the impossible; that she wants Germany to pay her debts and at the same time she is not willing for Germany to get the raw materials with which to work.

Another thing, Mr. President, I understand that Russia is in the market for a large amount of raw products. They want something like 500,000 bales of cotton, and they have the means to pay for it. Yet our country is not dealing with Russia. We are waiting on account of some indefinite notice that France gave about some of the funds having been purloined, or something of that sort. But I noticed in the papers within the last day or two that England had perfected an arrangement whereby she will trade with Russia. So I think these cobwebs ought to be knocked out of the way so that we can get into trade with the whole world without caring anything about whether we recognize the Governments or not.

I think the time has come when the people of the world ought to have what they need to go to work with. I heard the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] say to-day that in the next two and one-half years there will be something like $250,000,000 of Government obligations maturing. The time has come when we should help our people get back on their feet so they can begin to prosper. If we throttle enterprise and kill industry, after a while there will be nobody left in this country to pay taxes. The amount that we have maturing here shows that we ought to go to work and enable our people to convert their useless commodities into cash and help the country become prosperous again as it should be, so I hope that we will restore the War Finance Corporation at once.

I want to say that I do not much believe in the second section of the resolution. I think that is indefinite and possibly weakens the proposition. I am not particular myself whether that is adopted or not. I rather believe it would add strength to leave it out.

I have great faith in the Federal Reserve bank system and no doubt it will extend credit all it can, but I want to say that the Federal Reserve Board does not lend a dollar. That is a matter for the regional bank to attend to. The people at home have gotten a little hysterical and have gotten stampeded a little bit. Sometime ago there was a gentleman from one of my neighboring States here before one of the committees, the president of a bank, very much excited, and I asked how much his bank owed and how much it had borrowed. I am the president of a bank myself and I know a little bit about borrowing. He said he had not borrowed any except a little bit on Government bonds. I told him he was not needed in Washington, that his place was back in his own State lending the farmers money and helping to carry their cotton a while. I said, "Go on and send your paper in to the bank. There is no use to worry about these people here. They do not pass on the paper. That is done by your regional bank."

If the banks of the country would be careful and take the right kind of paper, the paper that is prescribed by law, and send it in to their home bank, there is no question about it being rediscounted. I never had any trouble. The people in my community do not have any trouble with the right kind of paper.

Pretty much everyone except the retailer has taken his losses and is ready to go to work in earnest. The retailers, I hope, will soon see their way clear to mark off their losses and meet conditions as they exist.

So I feel that things are very blue, but they could be worse, and our own salvation is in our own hands. It is the duty of the people of this country to turn their attention to production. I feel that in the meantime it is nothing but right that the Government should help them temporarily until they can get on their feet again by disposing of their surplus commodities. We almost had a contract with the Government to expect that much. We bought securities believing that they would allow the War Finance Corporation to continue to function. I hope the resolution will pass to-day.

During the delivery of Mr. DIAL's speech,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside.

Mr. KENYON. Temporarily.

Mr. GRONNA. That it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of Senate joint resolution 212.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. DIAL's speech,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has unanimously recommended this resolution embodying, first, a definite direction that the duly constituted authorities resume the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and, second, a direction that the Federal Reserve Board take such steps as are necessary to permit the rediscount of farm paper on as liberal terms and at as low rates of interest as are consistent with sound banking. The second section is not really directory; it is suggestive of the opinion of the committee that further relief would be proper; but the first section is mandatory. It directs the officials in charge to operate the War Finance Corporation.

The original War Finance Corporation act created that corporation while the war was going on. The corporation was created with limited authority. It could only help finance enterprises or individuals engaged in producing for the Government war supplies or banks that were financing such institutions. That part of the act has ceased to be effective because we are having no war supplies made, now that the war is over.

About the 1st of March, 1919, we amended that act and gave new powers and duties to the War Finance Corporation. We charged it with the duty of helping extend our exports after the war was over, and we provided for the continuation of this work by the War Finance Corporation for 12 months after the proclamation of peace.

We provided that the War Finance Corporation could issue and make loans up to a billion dollars, limited, however, to helping carry credits necessary for exports, either directly aiding the exporters or the banks who were aiding exporters. The War Finance Corporation rendered a great service during the war. It did it at an expense of $388,000 and at a net profit of $26,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator means at an expense of $388,000,000, does he not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; an expense of $388,000, with a net profit of $26,000,000.

It aided a number of enterprises, it helped to finance banks that were financing enterprises, and it gave courage to industries on account of the fact that here was this powerful institution, the entire stock of which was owned by the Government, with an ability to raise $3,000,000,000, authorized to help carry these industries with loans longer than the banks would carry, authorized to aid the banks in carrying their own loans to these individuals, taking a place that the banks properly could not take.

Now, Mr. President, the thought in the spring of 1919 was that this institution could perform another great service for our country. It required but little vision to realize that many of our former markets would be practically closed even after the war was over, on account of the fact that the industries in those markets would be unable to finance the purchase of raw materials and other supplies in the way that they were financed prior to the war. The war, of course, stopped many trade routes, but the increased demand upon industry during the war temporarily occupied all industries, all plants, and all labor, even beyond the demand placed upon them in the prewar period. But with the close of the war, and with the cessation of these war demands for supplies a collapse to a certain extent was inevitable. The vision contained in this legislation was that the War Finance Corporation could help stimulate a restoration of currents of trade and a utilization of markets which, again opened with the close of the war, would not be in a position to handle the necessary purchases to restore at once normal trade.

Primarily the object was to serve our own people, to furnish markets for our raw material, to furnish markets for the products of the farm, the products of the mine, the products of the factory, going to people who, on account of conditions produced by the war, could only buy on long-time credits—credits that exporters would not be prepared to give; credits that banks would not be prepared to give. So Congress saw fit to continue the work of the Finance Corporation, and, according to the provisions now in section 21 of the act which was passed in the spring of 1919 as an amendment to the original act, the War Finance Corporation was authorized to make loans and to help finance to the amount of a billion dollars those directly engaged in exports or those financing others directly engaged in exports.

The new power given to the War Finance Corporation was limited to helping furnish the necessary credits to carry our exports. Sixty per cent of the copper produced in this country formerly was exported. A large part of it before the war went to middle Europe. Zinc was exported; iron ore was exported; agricultural implements were exported. Indeed, 12 months before the war about 80 per cent of our exports were included in agricultural implements, corn, wheat, wheat flour, breadstuffs, automobiles, copper, cotton, cotton cloth, electrical machinery, fruits, meats, and dairy products, iron and steel and manufactures thereof, mineral oils, vegetable oils, tobacco, wood and the manufactures thereof, leather and the manufactures thereof. The most varied lines of products were exported. The bulk of the raw material went to Europe. Our two chief customers, our two largest customers, were Great Britain, and Germany, Germany being just behind Great Britain.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator from Georgia now speaking of raw materials?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I am speaking of raw materials.

Mr. KING. Because Canada was and is a very large consumer of our manufactured products.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I said "raw materials."

Austria also was a very large customer for our raw materials. It was perfectly clear that the industries of central Europe would not be in a position to restore current trade routes from here to them by the consumption of the raw material which they used prior to the war, nor would their people be able to buy the foodstuffs, which in many instances they needed, except on long-time credits. It was a happy conception that the War Finance Corporation, which did such splendid service to help strengthen production of war supplies during the war, should continue after the war to restore trade routes, and reestablish markets cut off during the war.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. If my memory serves me aright, the War Finance Corporation was created in the spring following the armistice.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator is mistaken. The Finance Corporation was created in the early part of 1918.

Mr. McKELLAR. On April 5.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On April 5, 1918.

Mr. THOMAS. My authority for the statement is Mr. Eugene Meyer.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. Meyer could not have made that statement. The Senator from Colorado will find that he is mistaken. Mr. Meyer said in March, 1919, the amendment was added to the act creating the War Finance Corporation authorizing it to aid in the export business.

Mr. THOMAS. I accept the Senator's statement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am sure Mr. Meyer could not have made the statement attributed to him by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I may have misread his statement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; or the printer may have made a typographical error.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I think the original act was approved on April 5, 1918.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. The amendment was made in March, 1919.

Mr. KING. On March 3.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. Even in that short time, during the war and just after the armistice, in those six months the War Finance Corporation handled $750,000,000 of Liberty bonds and Victory notes, $825,000,000 of Treasury certificates, and financed, or helped to finance, a large number of industries and banks that had reached a point where they needed help. It used practically no money from the Treasury. It now has credit upon the books of the Treasury for about $375,000,000 that has never been drawn from the Treasury except to purchase Government obligations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think this situation exists at the present time. I think the certificates have been surrendered and that the Treasury has used the money.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Treasury used the money all the time as it saw fit. I said it was simply a bookkeeping credit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury was that the affairs of the corporation were so far wound up that the certificates of deposit in the Treasury from the proceeds of its bond sales were surrendered, and that at the present time it has no credit in the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the third annual report of the War Finance Corporation, under date of November 30, 1920, which shows that there was a balance due from the Treasury of the United States on November 30, 1920, of $374,313,493.89, practically the amount that the Senator from Georgia has stated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have taken my figures from the third annual report of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will permit, I was basing my statement in part on the testimony of Mr. Meyer, which I heard, which is found on page 21 of the hearing before the Agricultural Committee, as follows:

> There is $370,000,000 on deposit in the Treasury for the War Finance Corporation. I would not like to see that money used. The Secretary has used it already for general purposes. He canceled the War Finance Corporation's holdings of Treasury certificates. He used them to reduce the debt—which is not much of a way to reduce the debt.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The War Finance Corporation still has to its credit the amount of money in the Treasury, because there has been no action by the corporation officially winding up its affairs. It can not be wound up as yet, and it has not been wound up as yet, and no authority was vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw the balance in its favor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think the matter can be cleared up by what Secretary Houston says on page 44 of the recent hearing, as follows:

> Senator NORRIS. Mr. Secretary, has the War Finance Board any money now?
> Secretary HOUSTON. It or the Treasury would have to borrow.
> Senator NORRIS. It has not anything?
> Secretary HOUSTON. No; except a credit on the books of the Treasury.
> Senator NORRIS. Did it have a surplus?
> Secretary HOUSTON. There were certain amounts deposited in the Treasury.
> Senator NORRIS. Then it has all been paid back?
> Secretary HOUSTON. No; certain loans are outstanding.
> Senator NORRIS. Do you know how much that has been?
> Secretary HOUSTON. The amount deposited in the Treasury? No; I would have to look it up.
> Senator NORRIS. Quite a large sum?
> Secretary HOUSTON. That will be available very soon when the annual report is out, but I do not recall it offhand.
> Mr. HEFLIN. Something over $300,000,000?
> Secretary HOUSTON. I think so.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me. Mr. Meyer, on page 21, says:

> There is $370,000,000 on deposit in the Treasury for the War Finance Corporation. I would not like to see that money used. The Secretary has used it already for general purposes. He canceled the War Finance Corporation's holdings of Treasury certificates. He used them to reduce the debt, which is not much of a way to reduce the debt.

I think that statement is reconcilable with that of the Secretary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make an observation with a view to eliciting information?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am anxious to get the Senator's views as to the modus operandi by which if this bill shall be passed money may be obtained for the purpose of financing American industries or exporters or manufacturers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will give that to the Senator in just a little while.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have about reached that point, and I will do so now.

I do not think there is any difficulty about the War Finance Corporation getting all the money needed. It has the right to issue under the amendment a billion dollars of its own paper. There was no trouble in floating its own paper before. We have no idea of asking for any bond issue by the Government. It used little money from the Treasury during the war; in fact, it helped the Treasury more than it called on the Treasury to help it. Payment for its capital stock was largely a matter of bookkeeping. It raised the money with which it operated principally by the sale of its own notes, and that can be done again and done easily.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a further interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that they would have been able to have negotiated their own notes if they had not, to use his expression, had the "potential force" of the Treasury of the United States behind them and an appropriation of $1,000,000,000? The original bill called for $500,000,000. Suppose there had been no appropriation at all and the corporation had merely been authorized——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, I want $500,000,000 back of them; I want them reinforced by the potential power of the Government. It is the use of that potential power that makes the activities of this corporation of value to the whole people of the country.

Mr. KING. Then, it means that the Government of the United States will guarantee a billion dollars, if the corporation shall issue that much of its paper or notes or bonds or whatever form the security may take. The Government of the United States is to guarantee the amount and the purchasers of the paper are to understand that the Government of the United States is back of the paper.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not mean that; it means this: The corporation has a capital stock of $500,000,000; it has a surplus of $26,000,000 as a result of its operations. It has, therefore, a capital of $526,000,000. It will issue its notes backed by that capital, and its notes will be perfectly good because they will be backed by its capital, and its loans will also be based on good security given by borrowers. Its obligations will be from exporters who are sound, backing the advances by good securities, and the credit papers which it will hold will be those of banks which have advanced money to exporters. Just as it worked satisfactorily before the war, so can it now function without calling on the Treasury for a dollar.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to explain what the Secretary of the Treasury meant by this testimony on December 3, found on page 44 of the hearings:

All the money it—

The War Finance Corporation—

has had, it received from the Treasury, earned, or borrowed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, that is not true. My answer is that it sold or disposed of $200,000 of its own paper, and it did not receive that from the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Secretary said "earned or borrowed."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But he said "received from the Treasury," and the War Finance Corporation did not receive all it used from the Treasury.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, I think the statement quoted still remains practically true. Originally, the United States Government subscribed $500,000,000 to the capital stock of this corporation. That was Treasury money. On the faith of that money the corporation borrowed two or three hundred million dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, I never questioned that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the funds which they received were either Treasury money originally, or money borrowed upon the faith of Treasury money.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Borrowed upon its capital paid in.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; that is right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I stated that emphatically, and I stated that I wanted to have its capital now back of it, furnished by the Government, to enable it to serve the people of this country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am asking for information, because I want to know just what the security is and who is to offer it.

I understand the last statement of the Senator to be that he wants the capital of the Finance Corporation back of the loans. That capital must be paid by the Government of the United States. It can not be a mere bookkeeping transaction. The Government must provide the capital. Now, I ask the Senator, Where is the five hundred millions or the one billion dollars that is to constitute the capital of this corporation to come from, unless the Treasury of the United States goes out now and borrows the money?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will not have to borrow it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not want to yield further just now. I want to go on now a little further. For the last half hour I have not been able to proceed with my discussion. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. GLASS. I beg the Senator's pardon for the interruption I made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I beg pardon. Go ahead with the question. I have not yet answered the last question, however.

Mr. GLASS. It simply occurred to me, in connection with the inquiry made by the Senator, that I should like to present what the Secretary of the Treasury said in his examination on December 3 as to the process.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I beg pardon, if that is what the Senator wishes to present. If it is a question he wants to ask me, all right. I am familiar with what the Secretary said, and that may be used at any time by anyone who wishes to discuss it.

Mr. GLASS. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The original corporation had a capital subscribed by the Government of $500,000,000. It used only a small portion of the money. The money principally remained in the Treasury, nearly all of it, and was used to meet Government expenses. The money was not laid aside in a pile and taken away from the other funds of the Treasury. It had a bookkeeping credit, and so it will now have its bookkeeping credit with the Treasury and will not, I believe, call on the Treasury for funds, and there will not be a bond sold to raise money to put in the Treasury to carry the corporation. It will have that liability of the Government back of it to help give it a credit and a standing, just as it had before. It has, in addition to that, the $26,000,000 of profit that it has already made in its business.

It is lending the Government credit to the War Finance Corporation to help take care of a responsibility and of an interest involving the people of the entire country, which, by reason of the war we have gone through, can not be handled in the ordinary way, can not be met by ordinary banking. And just as this corporation, with its reserve strength and reserve power to aid industries and banks, was an inspiration to give them courage, to enable them to act with force and power, so it was contemplated that the War Finance Corporation, with the privilege of extending loans to the amount of $1,000,000,000 to help carry the credits necessary for the export of our trade, would give courage, confidence, and backing both to banks, to exporters, and to those aiding in financing exports. The psychological effect alone of the War Finance Corporation resuming work will be most helpful.

In the short time after the passage of the act of March, 1919, the War Finance Corporation made substantial contributions toward financing our exports, and at the time of its suspension it had applications to aid in financing a hundred millions of exports. In March or April of this year, just before the Secretary suspended the operations of the War Finance Corporation, our exports exceeded our imports by $300,000,000. In August of this year they fell to $60,000,000, a lower figure than at any time since October, 1914.

Is there a condition in our country which calls for a broader market for the products of the toil of our people? A story has been presented to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry which shows that the need of these broader markets is not sectional. It is nation-wide, and it goes further. It shows that the loss of markets for the sale of commodities, largely those taken from the soil, either by the farmer or by the miner, has paralyzed the purchasing power of the people of those sections, and, paralyzing the purchasing power of a large part of our domestic purchasers, the condition reaches on to the manufacturers in the East and the manufacturers in the middle section of our country, and they are closing down and discharging their employees from the loss of their domestic market, which has been lost largely by the loss of our foreign market.

If we can do something to broaden our exports, we shall not only aid in relieving immediately the condition of the agricultural and mining sections, the products from which are moved, but we shall aid in restoring among them the markets that have consumed so much of our domestic production in manufactures. Let me illustrate by cotton how it works.

The export market for cotton is largely reduced. The purchasing power of the people of the cotton-growing States is largely removed. They have practically no market for the sale of cotton. Business almost ceases in this section, comprising one-fourth of our entire country, and the buying power of that section stops. The manufacturers of the East and of the Middle States lose their customers, and as they lose their customers and suspend operations again the cotton producer loses his customers even at home; and so it works in a circle. On the other hand, broaden the market of export, aid in bringing back the demand so far as it can be done of middle Europe and southern Europe, and you again create purchasing power in that section of the country which produces cotton, and that purchasing power will reach out into the Eastern and Middle States to furnish markets and give employment to the men in their factories and their mills.

Take copper: The same situation exists, as we have been advised before the committee, and the same thing is true of many other lines of production.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. What the Senator says with regard to agricultural products applies with equal force to manufactured products.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. To illustrate, in the city of Akron, which is the center of the rubber industry of the world, they have their warehouses filled with tires and other rubber products which at the present time they are not able to market at all. All manufactured products are on the same footing with others.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Our export of the manufactured product has ceased, and the entire market in one-fourth of the country has been cut off from them by the failure of markets for the sale of cotton. You can not sell an automobile in that section. You can not sell anything. You furnish a means to export from Memphis, Tenn., 500,000 bales of the very low-grade cotton that is found there, which is not used by American manufacturers, which can be used in Germany, in Austria, and Czechoslovakia. Their mills use the very short staple. You put the exporters in the position where they can help finance such sales and at once there will be a restoration of the purchasing power. You have had cut off, first by the war and now by the lack of ability to finance except on long-time credits, a great part of the markets of the United States. It is believed, indeed it was apparent, that the War Finance Corporation, more than any other institution, could help restore these exports. I believe thoroughly in the export corporations being organized under the Edge Act.

I believe in all possible help by the bankers. But back of them all it was the purpose of Congress in March, 1919, to have for 12 months after the proclamation of peace the War Finance Corporation, with $500,000,000 from the Government, with the power to handle credits to the amount of a billion dollars, to aid and stimulate private enterprise and private banking; not to compete with it, but to let it be known, "Do your best and here in a way your Government is behind you; your Government has created an organization to help back your exports. Your Government recognizes the fact that conditions abnormal still remain as the result of the war, and your Government proposes, as it did during the war, for 12 months after the war to aid in the restoration of trade currents and bring back to you your markets which otherwise you can not reach."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he has the figures showing the amount of foreign exports that have been financed by the corporation during the period of its operation, the first 18 months?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amount was not very great, because only a short time before its operation was suspended were the calls made on it. It had pending before it applications for a hundred millions which it was ready to extend at the time the Secretary of the Treasury suspended it. I can give you a number that it did aid.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have just found them in the Secretary's report, and am very much surprised to find how little it did during the period of its operations, very little for cotton, very little for agricultural products, mostly for manufactured goods for very large concerns.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Georgia will look on page 22, he will find just what Mr. Meyer testified on that point.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The reason why there were not many agricultural products exported under their operations, and so many manufactured products, is I think very clearly stated in the hearings by Mr. Meyer. Briefly stated, it took quite a while to organize to handle agricultural products, because there were no existing organizations. In the case of manufactured products that was different, to a very great extent. I believe they did, however, assist in financing the export of about $11,000,000 worth of wheat to Belgium; eleven and a half million, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] says to me. Mr. Meyer said at the time they were suspended they had a lot of organizations ready by which they expected to be of great assistance in the exportation of agricultural products, but it took some time to get the organizations ready.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I recall that testimony, and I assumed that it was due to the fact that the time was short. But here was an amendment which we adopted in March, 1919, and which was in operation for something over a year, and yet during that whole period the figures show that it made the following advances:

For agricultural implements, $4,000,000 of exports; for condensed milk, $5,000,000 of exports; for cotton, $9,332,000 of exports; for electrical equipment and supplies, $10,796,000; for grain, flour, and foodstuffs, $12,229,000; for locomotives, $5,000,000; or a total of $46,347,654.

That total is an absolutely insignificant amount of our total foreign exports, and I am surprised that the activities of the corporation were so little directed toward the exportation of agricultural products; and I am even more surprised that the total they financed was so insignificant compared to our total exports during that period.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the amount that was actually expended, of course, does not tell the whole story. There were a great many of these operations where they were behind the organizations and had made an agreement to assist when it became absolutely unnecessary for them to extend a dollar of assistance. That is one of the great benefits that we hope will result. It will not always mean, when we get a lot of exports to go across, that this corporation will have a dollar in it. The fact that they are behind it, and these securities are put on the market for sale, gives them a market that would not exist if they did not have this corporation and its backing behind them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will permit me, carrying out my argument, I find that during the first 10 months of this year our exports have amounted to $631,000,000 and all that this corporation financed during the year it was in actual operation was only $46,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator is wrong in his figures. It was nearly $8,000,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should say billions. That is billions, as a matter of fact. It was $8,000,000,000 for the whole year, approximately. The exact figures for the 10 months are $6,498,996,000, and that seems huge compared to the insignificant amount of exports which this corporation financed, only $46,000,000, during the whole year of its operations; and I was going to ask the Senator how he can explain the value of its services in promoting exports when during that year it did so little.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is explained in the testimony.

Mr. McNARY. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the testimony of Mr. Meyer, which is found on the bottom of page 21, and extending over to the middle of page 22, which goes to the very question of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to say a word?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, as I think I can offer one possible solution to his question.

Following the armistice, late in 1918, the European countries and other parts of the world, I imagine, had considerable sums of money with which to buy our products. I know that the price of cotton remained at a very nice figure until the close of the year 1919. I know there was no special call on anybody to help finance cotton. It was in such tremendous demand that we could hardly get enough to supply the market. I imagine that the same would apply to the very large amount of exports of various kinds and sorts which were sent to the other nations of the world.

In other words, after we created the War Finance Corporation, in March, 1919, there were no demands made upon it.

Business was functioning without its aid. It was only later on, when these other nations had, I assume, exhausted their funds, or their credits, to a very great extent, and were unable to pay us the cash, that our exporters began to call upon the War Finance Corporation. Undoubtedly they were calling upon it pretty lively, according to the testimony of Mr. Meyer, when it ceased to function. Big demands were made upon it about that time, shortly before it ceased to function. I grant you that they had not been made upon it until shortly before it ceased to function, and I have merely offered that as a suggestion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator bases his statement upon the assumption that our exports had fallen off, but, as a matter of fact, our exports for the first 10 months of this year, when the War Finance Corporation has not been functioning, are actually larger than they were for the first 10 months of the last year when it was functioning.

Mr. KING. And larger the last month of the 10 than any other.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We know that the raw material we are talking about is not being shipped to middle Europe; that it is not going to the markets to which it normally went before the war. We know that by proper financing it can be sent there.

The answer of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is the chief explanation, I think, of why the War Finance Corporation was not more promptly called on to aid in financing these credits. Our Government continued to extend to foreign countries, to our allies, the loans invested in American products. They drew quite a large sum from the National Treasury after the armistice, which was spent in the purchase of American products. They furnished the funds during that period to continue to handle and to stimulate our exports.

But, as the Senator from Louisiana said, and as the Senator from Nebraska said, in May, 1920, that fund had been exhausted, and the private credits were beginning to be strained, and the War Finance Corporation was being applied to, to aid, and applications, amounting to a hundred million dollars, they were about to approve at the time the Finance Corporation was suspended. The representatives of all the farmers' organizations in the United States have indorsed and urged the resumption of work by the War Finance Corporation.

It is the opinion of the bankers and leading financiers with whom I have conferred that the resumption of the duties of this War Finance Corporation will greatly aid conditions throughout the country.

It is the opinion of representative organizations of the States that it is important and essential. There is an organization of the chief executives of the States which meets once a year. The governors recently met in Harrisburg. Let us see what message they send to us fresh from the people of their respective States. Among other things, it is said:

> Let the Federal Government create a finance corporation of some sort that will enable the people of other lands to obtain from us the commodities they so greatly need, but for which they are not able to make immediate payment. We believe such a corporation to be entirely feasible and that its mere creation would substantially help the situation.

The convention of governors, through a committee of their number, presented it to your Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The representatives of the agricultural interests have met and begged for the resumption of the War Finance Corporation. The bankers have urged it. The governors of the States urge it. Let us take counsel with them and listen to their appeal. It represents the views of nearly all of our constituents.

Those who think it will do little must know that if it does little it will certainly do no harm. Those who believe it can do much, who hope for substantial results through its immediate action and through its cooperation, ask you not to prevent resumption because you think it will do little. If you do not want it to act, the less it does the better you should be pleased. We think it should resume its work, believe in what it can accomplish, and feel sure that the results will demonstrate the accuracy of our views.

Now, with reference to the securities and the absorbing power of any of those countries that are requiring long-time credit, I have had occasion to confer with men who have recently visited them, who are familiar with their condition, and they say that Central Europe can furnish us to-day a market not equal to the market of 1913 but a substantial market and a market which, by buying on long time, can give securities that exporters and bankers will be ready to accept; that these markets can be brought to our people, and the War Finance Corporation is needed to bring them to our people.

I would not undertake to give the details of the character of the securities. Exporters and bankers are satisfied that sound securities can be obtained and if they have an assurance of cooperation to carry these credits longer than periods for which banks carry loans, they are ready to begin exporting. Every carload of war material exported under such circumstances will help, every shipload will help. It will help to bring back normal conditions in our own country and it will help to restore normal conditions abroad.

I am one of those who believe that the industrial restoration of Central Europe and of Germany is essential to the industrial prosperity of the world. I believe further that the greatest contribution we can make to Europe is to furnish credits that may enable the purchase of raw materials to put their unemployed to work, to let them again be purchasers, to let them again earn a livelihood, to let them again have a hope for the future; and if Central Europe and Germany can ever be brought back into industrial activity and again take their places as producers, it will prove a great stone wall against which the waves of Bolshevism might roll, to be hurled back, doing no harm.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator if he does not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator desires to ask me a question I am glad to yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask a question, but to preface it by a very short statement.

I agree thoroughly with the Senator in his view that the economic restoration of Germany and of central Europe is essential to the return of normal conditions throughout the world. This is my question: How is it possible for Germany and the people of Europe to undertake the work of rehabilitation until they are relieved from the undetermined and indefinable indemnity which the treaty has imposed upon them, and under which the people can not and up to this time have not been able to determine what is to be expected of them during their period of rehabilitation and afterwards?

The Senator, of course, knows that this treaty, unprecedented as it is in many ways, is unprecedented in the fact that it imposes upon Germany an indemnity whose proportions no one knows, but which are to be determined year after year by the reparations commission, based upon what seems to be the ability of Germany to pay. I can not imagine any people in the world being able to go to work under conditions of that kind.

If I were mortgaged similarly to the Senator from Georgia because of our financial relations, I certainly would not long entertain any ambition to get back upon my feet financially and earn money when conscious of the fact that every dollar over and above my means of existence would go to the Senator, and without any limitation as to when that process would cease.

I do not believe—but I will not answer the question, as I promised not to, but does not the Senator think that this is a condition precedent to the rehabilitation of Germany—the fixing of a definite indemnity, so that she and her people may know what they have got to meet and then meet it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will give the Senator my views upon that subject with great pleasure. I regard it as utterly indefensible to hold an unsettled charge against the people of Germany. I think every influence this Government has should be brought to bear to induce a decision with reference to it—to let the people of Middle Europe know what they are to pay and fix their plans for the future to meet it. I should like to see the sum fixed and bonds accepted, that it might be made liquid, sold perhaps in part by the countries receiving the bonds. I think the fair and just thing to a beaten foe is to tell them what they are to pay and give them a chance to live.

But even though that is a hindrance—and I recognize it as a hindrance—I have been satisfied that large quantities of raw material will be, with satisfactory securities, purchased in Germany and in Central Europe.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment, please. I would say probably not half as much as if their war indemnity and their future liabilities were settled, but they must have work to live at all.

I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. With the permission of the Senator from Georgia, I desire to remind the Senators who have precipitated this discussion that the position which they have advanced now is the position which was taken by the American commissioners at the peace conference. The view thus expressed was very ably presented by the financial representative on the commission, Mr. Baruch, and it is no new argument for anybody speaking in the name of the United States, but I desire to remind the Senators of that treaty as entered into between Germany and all the other Allies, the Allies other than ourselves. If it is to be changed in any way it must come from negotiations between them and Germany. There is nothing that the United States can do about the matter except to urge, persuade, and I remind the Senators that in view of the situation we are in at the present time our suggestion concerning an amendment of that treaty would probably not be received hospitably.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would not be very persuasive, the Senator thinks?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. THOMAS. I have made no such suggestion. I am aware of the good work done by Mr. Baruch as our representative upon the reparations commission, but unfortunately he could not have his way. I think there is one thing, however, that we can do, and that is to continue our policy of keeping out of that treaty.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have expressed several times upon the floor of the Senate my views with reference to the treaty, and am rather indisposed to enter into a discussion of the treaty unless it comes back here for our consideration. I only was pleased to express my agreement with the Senator from Colorado about the value to the world of a settlement of the indemnity which is to be required from Germany, and if we are in a position to use any good offices, if we should at any time in the near future be in a position to offer advice which might be heeded, I trust that all the influence of our Government may be thrown on the side of bringing to an end the indefinite condition of the indemnity and place it, if possible, in a shape where it will be fixed, where it will be settled by a bond issue, and where it may take the shape of a liquid obligation, no longer handicapping the industrial condition of the world.

But, Mr. President and Senators, coming back to the War Finance Corporation, there is no possible harm it can do, even if the Senators who have asked a few questions are not satisfied that it did not do more before it was suspended. There is every reason to believe that it can do a vast deal of good, that it can help broaden credit and help take care of credit essential to our exports into central and southern Europe, for even Italy and Spain have asked for credits beyond the ordinary banking credits.

Now, the banks may extend the credits to the exporter, but it would be difficult for them to carry those credits as long as may be necessary. If the bank knew that the War Finance Corporation was in a position to assist if the bank needed assistance, it would act with more liberality and with less hesitation. The same thing is true of the exporter.

As has been before stated, it is not simply the financing actually to be done by the War Finance Corporation that would bring the benefit. It is the encouragement and the backing it would give to exporters and bankers to handle the credits themselves. The War Finance Corporation will greatly aid the export corporation organized under the Edge Act. I believe that the overwhelming sentiment of the bankers and business men of this country is that this contribution to the rehabilitation of our export trade, this contribution to the reestablishment of our markets, is essential in the present condition of our country.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. CALDER. I hesitate to interrupt the Senator, but I must leave the Chamber in a moment, and I desire merely to comment at this time upon the point the Senator has made in his remarks.

As chairman of a special committee of the Senate I had occasion to visit the western and southern sections of the country during the last month. Much of the information given by Mr. Meyer before the Agricultural Committee was obtained by him in traveling through the country with me and assisting me in the work I was doing. My committee had under consideration the question of the housing shortage and matters of thrift, transportation, and fuel as related to housing. We took upon ourselves to inquire carefully into the condition of the Nation's finances. We asked the bankers, we asked the business men, we asked the merchants, we asked everybody that might be interested in the rehabilitation of the country's business just what they thought of this very proposal that the Senator from Georgia is discussing, and I will say to the Senator and to the Senate that almost without exception we found the conservative business men and bankers of all that section of the country—and I speak now of the country west of the Alleghanies—almost a unit in favor of the revival of the activities of the War Finance Corporation. They believe that the psychology of its revival would be helpful to business; they believe that, as the Senator has stated, the activity of the corporation in the way of encouraging exports, without even advancing money at all, will be very helpful; and they believe the country could do no better than to adopt this suggestion at this time. They suggested other means of helping business, but this seemed to be the one in which there was no risk to the country and a manner in which credit could be given and guarantees of credit could be gotten and one through which the country would run little or no risk.

If the Senator will permit me, I should like merely to read a paragraph from this morning's New York Herald, which the Senator knows is the great conservative newspaper in the East.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not only permit the Senator to do so, but I shall thank him for doing it.

Mr. CALDER. Among other things, this editorial says:

> A merciless flogging has been administered to trade and industry in this country during necessary deflation. Producers directly and consumers indirectly have paid a penalty far and above any sins they ever committed. Producers have listened to sermons about increasing production and satisfying the foreign demand as a means of cutting down taxes and keeping a balance on the right side of the ledger. There is more corn, more cotton, more wheat, more copper, more steel; there are more textiles and more shoes than the country can consume, but there is only a restricted outlet for our surplus to the markets filled with eager buyers abroad.

The editorial goes on and commends the action of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the Members of this body in urging that steps be taken to revive this corporation, which the Senator so splendidly advocates.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator. I spent three weeks in New York City just prior to the convening of Congress. I then had an opportunity of conferring with quite a number of prominent bankers and thoughtful business men, and I can not recall a suggestion from one that was not favorable to the resumption of the activities of the War Finance Corporation and that did not indicate a belief that great value could be expected from the resumption of its activities.

As I have stated and as others have stated a number of times, not alone what it would do, but the psychological effect of its resumption of operations as an agency of the Government, the Government thereby recognizing the importance of our exports and showing its willingness to help lead in the export work for 12 months after the proclamation of peace, would be profoundly beneficial.

Mr President, I offered on yesterday an amendment, the real feature of which is to add, after the word "agricultural," the words "and other," so that the joint resolution will read "to resume the activities of the War Finance Corporation * * * with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets."

If the Senate wishes to do so, I am willing to see the language left "agricultural," but I really do not think it ought to be so restricted. I think it should apply to all lines of industry that may be helped, and at the proper time I shall ask for the adoption of my amendment adding the words "and other," so that it will read "agricultural and other products."

There is one other amendment also in the second section of the joint resolution which I propose, in line 16, by striking out the words "of extension." I think, as expressed, it might be understood to apply simply to the renewal of notes rather than the extension of credits as an original proposition. So I have suggested the striking out of the words "of extension."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator resumes his seat and after he has concluded his remarks, I should be very glad to propound one or two questions, with his permission.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I now yield to the Senator for the questions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the observations which have been made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, and with much that he has said I am in hearty accord. I confess, however, to a lack of understanding of the explanation which the Senator has made with respect to the functions of this corporation when it shall have been revived, as to its powers, and particularly with reference to the obligations of the Government. I can not understand a system of bookkeeping—for, if the Senator will pardon me, this is more than a question of bookkeeping—I can not understand a system of bookkeeping which places under the control of this corporation, to use my expression of a moment ago and the Senator's expression, as a potential force, backing its stock issue, $500,000,000 or $1,000,000,000, and yet at the same time that act does not create an obligation against the Government. It seems to me that when this corporation shall be revived—and I assume now that it is defunct——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to the term "revived," because I do not concede that it is dead. I want to substitute "resume operations" for "revive." The joint resolution says

"revive," but I wish to substitute "resume operations," because I deny it is dead; I do not concede at all the right of the Secretary to kill it.

Mr. KING. Well, assume that it is not dead, but is in a moribund condition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is asleep.

Mr. KING. As I understand now, it has not a billion dollars or five hundred million dollars to its credit upon the books of the Treasury. I assume, therefore, that by some process of bookkeeping, which doubtless was authorized, the credit which it received in the beginning has been charged against it and the Treasury has been reimbursed for the original payment. Now, if this moribund organization——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a correction there——

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have discovered what has become of that $500,000,000. In his report the Secretary of the Treasury says:

> The entire capital stock of the War Finance Corporation, $500,000,000, has been issued and is held by the Treasury. This and its reserve fund of about $25,000,000 are invested to the extent of about $422,000,000 in United States bonds, notes, and certificates of indebtedness, and to the extent of about $103,000,000 in other loans and investments.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They can pass that to the credit of the corporation when it resumes operations.

Mr. KING. If this organization, then, shall resume, it will mean that there shall be placed to its credit the amount of capital stock which it is presumed to have.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it is to its credit now; it owned those bonds into which it put its money. I do not think the Secretary of the Treasury has any authority at all to end it. To suspend its operations was the limit of his authority, and I doubt whether he had that authority; but the bonds in which this money was invested belonged to the corporation.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator another question? If this corporation owns those bonds, it is evident it has not paid the Government the amount which it obtained from the Treasury of the United States. Therefore, the Treasury of the United States, unless it has sold the bonds for the purpose of replacing the money which was placed to the credit of this organization or has taken the money from taxation, has a deficit which must be taken into account in determining the financial condition of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I consider that that $500,000,000 is still the property of this corporation; that nobody has had the right to take it from it. It drew about $125,000,000, and has still to its credit about $375,000,000—I use round figures. That amount should be to its credit on the books of the Treasury. It had been invested in bonds and Treasury certificates, and the amount should be to its credit on the books of the Treasury, if the books of the Treasury are properly kept.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I can explain that matter to the Senator. The corporation invested, I should say, $120,000,000 in securities, which has not been paid back. It then drew out the balance, or practically all the balance, of its funds in the Treasury——

Mr. KING. Amounting to $500,000,000?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What was left of the $500,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and bought Liberty bonds. Those Liberty bonds have been turned over to the Treasury and they have been given credit now for those Liberty bonds, which restores their account to the same position in which it was before they drew this money out and purchased Liberty bonds; so that the corporation now has actually to its credit upon the books of the Treasury about $385,000,000.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, if it got from the Treasury of the United States $500,000,000, which it must have done in order to have invested part of it in bonds and to have loaned the residue, and then repaid the Government the amount received, and it has now received back credit upon the books of the Treasury of the United States for this amount, and if we now revive this corporation we must reappropriate $500,000,000, or the bonds which the Senators say are to its credit, in order that it shall have either stock or assets, or whatever you please to denominate the funds, with which it shall guarantee the loans which it shall make.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the Senator is wrong. They have that credit there now, and it is not necessary to appropriate any money. They have simply restored to the Treasury the money which they temporarily took out.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator understand that by the revival of this organization we will restore to it, upon the books of the Treasury of the United States, credit to the extent of three hundred and some odd millions of dollars?

Mr. SIMMONS. Why, it already has it. We do not have to restore it. It already has it.

Mr. KING. Then, if it has that credit, how has the Treasury of the United States been paid for the amount which it advanced when the corporation was organized?

Mr. SIMMONS. Why, in Liberty bonds which were purchased by the War Finance Corporation. The Senator knows that the War Finance Corporation was in the market buying Liberty bonds for the purpose of stabilizing the price of those bonds.

Mr. KING. I understand that; yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. It bought those bonds of the Government, and turned those bonds over to the Treasury, and the Treasury gave it credit for the bonds on the books.

Mr. KING. Where did it obtain the money with which to purchase the bonds?

Mr. SIMMONS. It drew it from the Treasury, out of the funds appropriated.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have appropriated $500,000,000 to it, and it drew the $500,000,000. It put the money into bonds. The Treasury redeemed a part of the bonds held by this corporation, the statement shows, and when it redeemed them it gave the corporation credit on its books for the money.

Mr. KING. I understand that perfectly. Then it is obvious that the Government of the United States is out $500,000,000 through an appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Absolutely; and it has the stock of this corporation.

Mr. KING. It means, then, if I understand the Senator's contention, that a revival of this corporation permits it to make loans, and back of those loans will be these Liberty bonds which have been purchased by the money appropriated from the Treasury, which will be a guarantee for the payment of the obligation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Back of the loans will be the obligation of the United States to pay the $375,000,000 that this corporation has to its credit in the Treasury—yes; that is just what I mean. It has one hundred and twenty-six millions and more of assets, and this additional amount is to its credit in the Treasury, and its credit in the country, and the credit on which it sold its notes before was the fact that the Government appropriated $500,000,000 to take all of its stock.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. SIMMONS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to yield to whoever wants the floor. I have been ready to yield for some time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the simple fact is that the Government, to the extent of $500,000,000, subscribed to the stock of this corporation. When the corporation ceased to operate it turned back to the Treasury, in bonds and credits, all of its assets. So that technically it has to its credit these bonds and these assets; but if it undertakes to draw them from the Treasury again in order to revive its activities, the Treasury must go out and by the use of certificates of indebtedness borrow the money at 6 per cent interest in order to replenish the funds of the corporation.

I do not care to be understood at this stage as either opposing or favoring this proposition. I am simply stating that fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, that is exactly the situation as I have apprehended it; but, as I understood the Senator from Georgia, he was attempting to demonstrate that there had been no obligation in the past nor would be in the future upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, not at all.

Mr. KING. That is, that the Treasury of the United States could advance this money, but keep it by bookkeeping within its coffers, and that there is no obligation or liability upon the part of the Government of the United States, and still it would be available as a basis upon which to predicate the loans that might be made by the corporation or to obtain credits to facilitate trade with foreign countries.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all. On the contrary, I have said that the Government subscribed $500,000,000 for the stock and took the stock, and that that $500,000,000, whether left with the Government or in the vaults of the War Finance Corporation, constituted its capital, and if in the Treasury the Government would be liable for $500,000,000 if the notes of the War Finance Corporation were issued and were not met. It is the basis of its credit, absolutely and unqualifiedly. I never doubted it.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator to say that the War Finance Corporation paid back the loan or the $500,000,000 originally appropriated; but the last observation of the Senator places a different construction on the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That the War Finance Corporation paid back the loan it made from the public?

Mr. KING. No, no; that it paid back to the Treasury of the United States the $500,000,000 which at the outset it obtained from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I did not say that. The War Finance Corporation actually received from the Treasury approximately $125,000,000. The balance of the $500,000,000 has been in the Treasury to the credit of the War Finance Corporation all of the time, except when it was invested in Government securities. Subsequently the Treasury paid off these securities, bonds, and Treasury certificates, and the credit again went to the War Finance Corporation upon the books of the Treasury.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, then, if I understand the Senator, he will accede to this statement made by Secretary Houston:

> The Treasury has acted as depositary for the corporation. Its funds are represented by a cash credit on the books of the Treasury. If the corporation should draw against that credit, the Treasury would have to borrow to get the money. If activities were resumed, the Treasury or the corporation would have to borrow in order to make the loans.

Now, if the Senator assents to that, may I inquire whether, if the War Finance Corporation is revived and it does make loans, what provision will be made for the Treasury of the United States to get the money in order to meet such loans?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No additional provision at all.

Mr. KING. Where will the Treasury of the United States get the money?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We do not expect the Treasury to furnish a dollar. We expect the corporation to finance its own paper, just as it did before.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if he thinks it would be honest or sound finance, or to the credit of the United States, or to the credit of the Treasury of the United States, if upon a revival of this organization this corporation loaned $50,000,000, for the Treasurer of the United States not to place to the credit of the corporation immediately $50,000,000 in cash in order to meet the obligation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the corporation loaned $50,000,000 without disposing of its bonds or raising it otherwise, the Treasurer would undoubtedly meet the $50,000,000.

Mr. KING. If the corporation should issue its own paper, and some one was unwise enough to accept it without the obligation of the Government behind it in the form of an appropriation or suitable security, does not the Senator think it would be the duty of the Treasurer of the United States, if we revive this organization, to immediately credit this organization in cash with the amount of the loan?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. The Treasurer now credits it with $375,000,000 and it has the balance of this $500,000,000 in other assets. It to-day has a cash capital of $500,000,000 plus the $26,000,000 it earned—$375,000,000, in round numbers, being in the Treasury. Its notes are perfectly good.

It sold its notes to the amount of $200,000,000 before. The only notes it gave it sold to the public. I said it had paid off its notes. Those were the only obligations it had. The $500,000,000 was the obligation of the Treasury to it, for we had appropriated $500,000,000 from the Treasury in payment for the capital stock of the corporation. We provided in the original bill that the National Government should be the sole stockholder and that it should take $500,000,000 of the stock from time to time, with the approval of the Treasurer and certain other officials, and it was taken, and it now has to its credit $375,000,000 in round numbers.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if it controls the $375,000,000 which is to its credit?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it can control that sum absolutely.

Mr. KING. And upon its making a loan, if it had to back that loan with Government bonds, would it have the power to make a requisition upon the Treasury of the United States for the equivalent of that loan?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For the $375,000,000?

Mr. KING. Well, for whatever the loan amounted to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it can call on the Treasury for what is to its credit there, every dollar of it—the whole of the $500,000,000 that it has not drawn.

Mr. KING. Suppose that it had to have cash in order to give the benefits sought to be obtained, or securities which would readily command cash. Could it take from the Treasury those bonds, which I understand have been deposited there, and vend them in the market?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. KING. How would it obtain the cash?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is what I understood has taken place, although I may be inaccurate in this:

When the Liberty bonds or the Victory bonds were being sold, and at other times, the War Finance Corporation bought them, and bought some on the market a number of times. It invested its $385,000,000 in bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand, called in and redeemed certain bonds, and he took the bonds of the War Finance Corporation, and having taken the bonds the Treasury held and redeemed them. Instead of paying the corporation the cash the Treasurer gave it credit on the books of the Treasury, which was the depository of the War Finance Corporation, for the value of those bonds which the War Finance Corporation had held. So the War Finance Corporation has given up the bonds that it bought, and the Treasury owes it the value of the bonds.

That is my understanding of the matter. I think I am right about it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator is right. The misunderstanding between the Senator and myself arose out of this fact:

I understood the Senator's position to be that the $500,000,000 which was originally appropriated by Congress and credited to the War Finance Corporation had been paid back to the Treasury of the United States either in the shape of assets, obligations of individuals or corporations which the organization held, or United States bonds which the organization had obtained from the Treasury and purchased by it, and therefore that the Treasury of the United States, to use common parlance, was made whole, the Government was made whole; that it had the $500,000,000 back again under its own control without any string or any obligation whatever with respect to it; that the present purpose is to revive this corporation and to place a lien—if I may be permitted that expression—upon the $500,000,000 which had been covered back into the Treasury of the United States, either in the shape of Government bonds or other securities, and to abstract it from the Treasury for the purpose of loaning it to exporters; and further that this transaction would involve only a little bookkeeping, which would show that the United States had parted with no money, and that at the same time this corporation would have $500,000,000 to its credit, available for loans to the interests provided in the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator certainly misunderstood me. I never had such a thought in my mind. The confusion, I think, must have grown out of the fact that I suggested it had redeemed its note obligations. I was referring to the two hundred millions of notes that it sold to the public. I was referring to obligations it issued and paid off to the public. Those were the only obligations it had. It never had any obligations to the Treasury. We appropriated the money to it. The obligation was by the Government to pay for its stock, and when I was referring to an obligation I was referring to a technical obligation, a promise to pay by this corporation, and the Senator no doubt was referring to what he considered its obligation to finally make the Treasury good, and that is the way the confusion arose. I relied upon this $500,000,000 capital of this corporation as a basis for the issue of its paper. I do not think it will be compelled to draw a cent from the Treasury. I think it can finance its work by the issue of its paper, by the indorsement of the paper of banks, by the utilization of the securities it receives for its loans; that it can bring out of hiding investment money that is not now engaged in active occupations, and instead of being injurious to the general condition, drawing this investment money and putting it to service will be a contribution to the general financial condition in the country, and as this money goes back into the communities where goods are moved and marketed, that money will quickly go to pay off debts and back into the banks and back into the reserve banks, to bring back normal conditions and to revive the general purchasing power of the country.

Let me read this sentence, and then I will close:

> Secretary HOUSTON. The Treasury has acted as depositary for the corporation. Its funds are represented by a cash credit on the books of the Treasury. If the corporation should draw against that credit, the Treasury would have to borrow to get the money. If activities were resumed, the Treasury or the corporation would have to borrow in order to make the loans.

That may be true. The Treasury might be compelled to issue short-time certificates to raise the money if called on by the War Finance Corporation, but the corporation, as has been fully explained, contemplates financing its own affairs and not using money from the Treasury.

Mr. KING. If that is the process which is to be followed, would the Senator object to a modification of the resolution so that it will not compel the Treasury of the United States or this organization to sell Government securities, thus further inflating the credits of the country, in order to obtain the money with which to make loans to individuals?

UMI

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think we should in any way change the status of the fund that belongs to this corporation in the Treasury. I think it is in proper shape now, and should remain in that shape, to furnish a basis for disposition of obligations of the War Finance Corporation, thereby placing it in position readily to raise money and perform the great national and international task before it.

It will serve our own people and help stabilize world industry so necessary for the peace of the world.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, while we have this subject before us, I wish to read a telegram I have received from the State bank commissioner of Kansas, in which he says:

Kansas banks are unable at this time to properly take care of all credit required by farmers and stockmen in present emergency. Banking conditions are critical. Believe Congress should take action at once, with view to having either the Federal Reserve Board or some other governmental agency relieve the situation. Additional credit must be given producers without delay. Urge Congress to act promptly on this matter.

I have some 18 or 20 other telegrams from State and national bankers of Kansas, and I think they tell the same story. I think they urge action by Congress in line with the resolution which we now have before us.

Mr. President, due to the unprecedented collapse of credit facilities in the great agricultural regions of the West, 26 country banks in North Dakota have closed their doors in the last 30 days because they could not collect from their farmer debtors. The farmers could not pay their notes because the tremendous slump in prices for farm products within a few short weeks had cut in half the price of practically everything they had to sell. By all rules of business and economics these farmers should have been more than able to meet their notes in the bank. But they were not. Instead, the slump in farm prices, wholly unjust and out of proportion to the declines in other commodities, had pushed them toward bankruptcy and ruin. The fall in prices of farm products this year means a loss to the farmers of more than $6,000,000,000.

There is not a living market for farm products in the United States to-day. Where there is not a living market no industry can exist, not even the unappreciated and overburdened industry of agriculture. Mr. President, the closing of these Dakota banks is a forerunner of much worse to come if we do not heed the warning. It indicates that agriculture, our biggest business and the foundation of our wealth and prosperity, is close to demoralization and collapse. It indicates that the food scarcity that has threatened us before is again approaching, and it says as plainly as can be that all the rest of the country will go down with it once agriculture collapses. Unless relief comes soon this country is in for one of the greatest breakdowns in its history. The signs are plain, and out in the Middle West and the West, where the food you eat is produced, the rumblings are unmistakable.

Mr. President, we have gone about this thing of deflation all wrong. The farmer has been made the goat so often that it was thought he could be safely made the goat again in this big task of deflation. But we have leaned on him too long. The burden has become too great. He can not carry it. He will not carry it. He has said so and is saying so to-day.

If this warning is not apparent to you, consider the unprecedentedly large receipts of breeding animals, of cows, heifers, and calves, brood sows, and immature pigs that have been dumped on the market in the last month or six weeks. The farmer has been forced to dump them, to dump them on a slumping market, at ruinous prices. In line with the drastic deflation policy which Washington has insisted upon, the banks demanded their money and the farmer had to pay. The banks are not to blame. In the West, at any rate, the banks have gone the limit in assisting the farmers.

The week of November 15 broke all records for shipments at the Chicago stockyards. Farmers dumped 4,503 carloads of 111,966 head of cattle in six days. Those shipments included thousands of breeding animals; more than that, there were 15,281 calves, thousands of which would normally have stayed on the farm to make beef or as breeding animals. It is certain that an unusually large proportion of that record week's shipment were cows that should have remained on the farm for breeding purposes.

The same thing has been happening at the other four big western live-stock markets and in all the little markets. Cows, heifers and calves, sows and immature pigs that should never have been shipped have been dumped by the thousands of cars. Steers and shotes that were not ready for market have been dumped. All because of the most pitiless, unrelenting, short-sighted, and unfair policy of deflation that the Washington and Wall Street financial powers ever have forced on any industry in this country.

You will remember that last year we were all alarmed lest the farmers could not produce food for us. The farmers were short on capital. They needed credit urgently. The financial powers saw to it that credit was transferred to the producing country, for they feared that otherwise there might be a scarcity of food and that terror and anarchy would breed from hunger. We urged the farmers to produce. It was necessary for orderly deflation and social order. So down from the reserve banks and the big city banks credit was handed to the farmer through the country banks.

The farmers took this credit to run their business. They raised their crops. They accepted the steadily declining markets as inevitable, asking only that the decline be kept in just proportion with other commodities. But with garnering in of the greatest harvest the country has ever known, and with the fear of hunger's unrest removed another 12 months the financial powers inaugurated a wholly different policy. Without warning a few weeks ago the country bankers began hammering the farmer. They began forcing him to sell wheat, cattle, hogs—anything, everything. He would dump a load of unfinished cattle on the glutted market, knowing that he would depress prices still further, but he could not help it. The banks forced him. They couldn't help it. Further up, the city banks were hammering them. Further up the reserve banks were hammering, and still further up the financial powers that control that so-called public utility—credit—were hammering, hammering, hammering. And every blow struck the farmer. The powers that had so graciously lent the farmer money to grow food for them were demanding it and taking from him every cent he could scrape together, no matter how great the sacrifice to himself, his family, or his industry.

From June 1 to December 1, No. 2 mixed corn, the grade on which corn trading is based, slumped approximately 70 per cent, or from $1.90 a bushel to less than 60 cents a bushel in Kansas City and to 30 cents a bushel at country shipping points. One Kansas farmer took a load of 25 bushels of corn to his local elevator the day before Thanksgiving, to get his wife a pair of shoes. He also took along a hide from a young beef he had killed. He got $7.50 for the 25 bushels of corn and $2 for the hide, but for an ordinary, serviceable pair of woman's shoes he had to pay $10. The shoes cost him all of the price of the load of corn and of the hide and he had to dig up 50 cents to complete the payment. Do you know of any deflation in staple commodities that equals that? You do not, for nowhere has deflation been carried to such an inhuman extreme as with the farmer.

Mr. President, that is a homely example of just what is happening throughout a great part of our country to millions of our people. Two farmers down at Hickory Point, Tenn., killed a couple of young beeves, or calves, in November. The two hides weighed 40½ pounds. They paid $1.58 to ship them to St. Louis, and after the hides had been sold and all expenses paid one man got back eleven 2-cent stamps and the other received 29 cents in stamps.

That is another homely little example, a thing to be passed over with a smile by the unthinking. But it is human, and it is the meanest kind of pure injustice and unfair dealing that grows into great suffering and social upheavals. And those pieces of injustice are being multiplied by tens of thousands to-day, multiplied again and again every time the helpless farmer is forced to sell a bushel of grain or an animal to liquidate along the pitiless line that his creditors have ordered him to follow.

Lack of credit is choking agriculture to death. The men who are shipping breeding stock to market are eager to keep their herds. Almost all of them are solvent, going concerns if given decent business treatment. They know they can weather this storm easily if the Federal Reserve Board will adopt a more liberal policy in rediscounting agricultural paper. Do not think that it is just the little hand-to-mouth farmer who is being bled to death. The same power is squeezing the big farmers and the big ranchers, men with hundreds of thousands invested, and they, too, are having to dump their live stock into a glutted market to satisfy the banks. With the best security in the world, they can not get loans.

Farmers from almost every State in the West and Middle West have written me in the last few weeks complaining that they can not get credit under any conditions. Their banks are refusing any and all kinds of security they say. Yet they have the best kind of security to offer—foodstuffs. A country banker in western Kansas went to Kansas City in November to get money for farmer customers. He offered a bushel of wheat as security for every 30 cents lent him. He came back home without a cent. The financial interests and the reserve banks had shifted credit to the farming country only to help produce this year's harvests and after these harvests were in the farmers existed solely as the scapegoats on whom they proposed to dump the burden of deflation.

Mr. President, last summer quite a few big corporations from the industrial centers circulated their paper among country banks. They were good concerns and they took quite a bit of money from country banks, but now when the farmers are suffering for credits none of that money comes back to them. You can not blame the bankers for buying that paper. It was good, sound investment. Everybody expected tighter money, of course, but no such shortsighted, industry-killing program was anticipated. The financial sages talked orderly and equitable deflation, and the Secretary of the Treasury was so placid that he suspended the War Finance Corporation, a thing that never should have been done, for if that aid to trade was needed it is needed now, and it should be put back in operation just as quickly as is practically possible. I particularly call your attention to the action of the recent governors' conference, including the governors of nearly every State in the Union, which made a special appeal to Congress to come to the relief of stricken agriculture by means of an amendment to the Federal reserve act. These governors expressed the opinion that the unremitting credit strain throughout the agricultural section made it imperative that this Congress should arrange for a supply of temporarily additional currency to provide relief in this unprecedented situation.

Mr. President, more adequate credit is an absolute necessity to the life of agriculture to-day and to the food supply of our cities in the future. Lessened production next season is a certain consequence if this relief is not granted. Normal food production can not be continued until agriculture is properly financed.

As I said, lack of credit is sending breeding animals to market in trainloads. There has been no wool market for seven months, and a Wyoming sheepman who shipped recently to Kansas City paid $2.10 a sheep for freight and received $1.75 a head for his sheep. Naturally he is being forced out of business. Yet there is scarcely any noticeable decline in the retail prices of food. The cut in shoes has been small and the cut in clothing only nominal. The farmer must pay 12 cents a bushel to get corn husked and then sell it for 30 to 40 cents. He pays $10 to $11 for coal that used to cost him $4 and $5, and in many western counties he will burn corn this winter for fuel. Two ounces has been added to the loaf of bread in my home town, which is doubtless a fair example of the cut in bread prices, while more than $1.25 a bushel was taken from the price of wheat and 96 cents a bushel from corn between June 1 and December 1.

Clearly the farming business can not exist unless credit conditions and market conditions are remedied soon. The farmers can not pay the prices charged for commodities with the prices they receive for their products. A few months ago 30 bushels of corn would buy a good suit of clothes. Now, even with the small cut in clothing prices, it requires more than 100 bushels of corn to buy the same suit. A bushel of wheat would buy 10 gallons of gasoline last June. It will buy little more than 5 gallons now. And so it goes with everything he buys and worse than that with the money he borrows, if he can borrow, for he often pays 10 per cent interest and more, and as security he signs a property statement on everything he possesses.

We can refuse our own farmers credit or can grudgingly give them credit at ruinous rates with a property statement on everything they own, but our Wall Street bankers never hesitated when the Cuban sugar planters needed financing.

They sent money to Cuba in the face of a falling market, while here at home they have forced their own farmers to ruin their own markets to pay back their loans. We can supply Wall Street with billions for gambling, we can advance the railroads more than a billion dollars on a broken-down transportation system, and we can finance the profiteering Cuban sugar planters, but we can not show decent business justice to our own farmers. It is true that the Federal reserve bank denies that credit has been denied to agriculture. But we all know in Kansas that that credit is entirely inadequate. The Federal reserve bank at Kansas City has charged as high a rate of interest as 20 per cent per annum this year.

Mr. President, farmers have got to have a fair credit system. The sooner they get it the better it will be for the entire country. The big corporation that does not wish to float long-time bonds at present rates issues short-time certificates and there is a money market suitable for its needs. The commercial house that needs 30, 60, and 90 day credits finds the deposit banks suited to its business. But for the farmer there are no credit facilities. He must do business largely through deposit banks, which can not safely deal in the length of time paper that farmers must give. Except the cattle-loan companies, which are limited in their operations, he has absolutely no adequate credit accommodations.

The great necessity for developing a financial system that makes allowance for the peculiar conditions governing the business of agriculture and that will adequately meet the special needs of the farmer has never been more apparent than in the present agricultural crisis. Ordinary commercial credit will automatically flow to the point where it secures the largest returns. In a time of financial stringency, the speculators will pay any figure for credit. The farmer can not compete with call money, with speculative money, or with money for foreign exploitation. Let me assure you the farmer is not seeking an economic advantage by which he may exact an inordinate profit. All he asks is that his credit needs may be met as freely and on the same terms as are enjoyed by other business men. He has no right to ask for more.

Inasmuch as the present situation has been largely brought about by necessary Government interference with what would otherwise be the restraining effect of the law of supply and demand, it is quite reasonable to appeal to the Government—which was compelled to create this situation—to relieve it so far as it may do so without violation of economic principles. Precedent for such action in behalf of the agricultural interests may be found in the action of the Government in relieving the railroads of too sudden a readjustment on their return to private ownership. It can not be denied that the farming industry is just as important to the foundations of national prosperity as the transportation industry.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the excellent suggestion presented to the Senate Committee on Agriculture a few days ago by the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, as follows:

> If the banks in the reserve centers could transfer this burden to some other agency for a year's time there would be released an entirely adequate amount of credit for present needs of both agriculture and general business and for the relief of country banks which are now compelled to exercise undue pressure on their customers, and, worse still, to refuse to furnish their farmer customers essential credit for carrying on their operations. This relief is fundamental to the relief of the other needs enumerated below, and mature consideration suggests a revival of the War Finance Corporation as the best immediately available agency for taking over this burden. We therefore urge the immediate revival of the War Finance Corporation with specific powers and instructions to accomplish this end, with the stipulation that the corporation should assume no paper carrying a higher rate than 7 per cent. This measure is intended for relief, not as a means of profit.

Congress must solve this problem, and as one remedial measure it must reestablish foreign trade relations that our surplus crops, live stock, and our cotton may find a market. In considering remedial measures the War Finance Corporation should be authorized to resume operations at once. There is no other way to market the 12,000,000,000 bales of this year's cotton crop and our other great surpluses. The renewal of trade with Europe will give some relief, especially for the South. With the reestablishing of foreign trade Congress should see to it that agriculture is afforded equitable credit accommodations along with the other lines of industry in this country. There is no reason why a solvent farmer should not have credits as cheaply as any other business man.

Mr. President, my great concern is for what I know to be the most vital matter before this Nation prompts me as never before to urge this Congress to recognize our national dependence upon the agricultural interests of this country for our immediate prosperity and its ultimate effect upon our civilization.

A constructive national policy toward agriculture developed on sound lines, and that may be safely applied, is our great need. I believe that the future history of this country will be determined by the problem of food; its production, its distribution, its cost, and by the depletion of the soil's fertility, and the loss of its young people. The necessity of practical cooperation between the Government and the farmer and the protection of the Nation's food resources was never so acute as now. We are asking for LO class legislation or special favors, but, Mr. President, I believe it is imperative that the present acute situation should have the best attention of Congress at this moment, and all possible encouragement given to a stricken industry.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will not venture upon any discussion of the joint resolution at this time. Indeed, I doubt if it will be necessary at any time because I think the Senate is in favor of the measure and I hope sincerely that it will be passed. I think the benefit that will flow from it is of immense consequence and the indirect benefit probably will be greater than the direct benefit.

At this time, however, I desire to ask that there be printed in the RECORD two short communications which I have, one from the National Board of Farm Organizations and one from the commissioner of agriculture of Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Without objection leave is granted.

The letters referred to are as follows:

NATIONAL BOARD OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1920.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: You undoubtedly know that during the month of October two important joint agricultural meetings were held here in Washington in which we strongly protested the action and policies of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board with respect to the agricultural credit situation, and in which we strongly favored the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation.

S. J. Res. 212, which I understand you are favoring, is undoubtedly a step in the right direction, and I believe that its passage will be of material benefit not only to the farmer producers of this country, but also to business in general.

Sincerely, yours, CHAS A. LYMAN, Secretary.

THE STATE OF FLORIDA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Tallahassee, December 7, 1920.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: The purpose of this communication is to earnestly urge your valued cooperation and influence in securing the passage of a joint resolution by Congress reviving the War Finance Corporation. The purpose of this is well understood by all Senators and Members of Congress.

I think it should be renamed and called the foreign finance corporation or export finance corporation. The war is over; let's leave off the word "war."

It is unnecessary for me to go into a lengthy discussion of this measure and I shall not take up your time to do so; but I do want to drop this suggestion: Unless something is done to open up markets for American farm products such an exodus from the farms will take place as has never before been known. This will be a most serious outcome of our neglect and lack of statesmanship.

There is nothing radical nor unreasonable in meeting the emergency that all agree exists, and only Congress has the power to put in motion the machinery which can save the day.

There is another point which I would like to suggest: Whatever means may be necessary should be used to have the Federal Reserve Board regulate its deflation policy so as to discriminate between productive and nonproductive loans—restricting the nonproductive without crippling the productive industries. A combination of the deflation of currency and the collapse of foreign markets has created a condition which will force a twenty-five billion dollar crop produced in the United States to be sacrificed for $15,000,000,000. This will mean financial ruin and such discouragement to agriculture as to be positively alarming.

With kindest regards, I am, W. A. MCRAE,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] if he knows of anyone else who desires to speak to-night? If there is no vote to be taken upon the joint resolution to-day we may as well adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. GRONNA. I was in hopes that we could dispose of the joint resolution to-day, but the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] indicated this morning a desire to speak upon it, and, of course, if he is not ready to-day it will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. I stated that I wanted to familiarize myself with the hearings before taking the floor. I have read about one-third of the testimony this afternoon and expect to finish the balance to-night. I will be ready to go on in the morning.

Mr. GRONNA. I can assure the Senator that I do not wish to hurry him unduly.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to taking that course if we can have some kind of an understanding that we shall dispose of the joint resolution to-morrow. I presume that there is a feeling in favor of an adjournment from to-day until Monday, but I would not like to take a step like that before the joint resolution is disposed of. I do not seek any unanimous-consent agreement, but this measure ought to be disposed of to-morrow. I am willing to let those who are opposed to it take up the time talking, if we can then get a vote. Is there anyone else who wants to talk to-morrow in addition to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KING. I may desire to submit some observations.

Mr. NORRIS. Could not the Senator from Utah do that to-day?

Mr. KING. I prefer to do it to-morrow. It will not take long. If I do take any time it will not be to exceed half an hour.

Mr. NORRIS. I dislike to adjourn at this hour if it is not certain that to-morrow we shall finish the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. From what I can learn, there are very few Senators who will make any speeches on the joint resolution, and the speeches will be very short. I do not see why we can not get through with it in a short time to-morrow.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say this about the unfinished business: I think those interested in it have had no objection to temporarily laying it aside for the consideration of the joint resolution, but there are some amendments to the bill proposed by members of the committee, and I thought we could dispose of them to-day and have them agreed to and then have the bill reprinted, so that we can have it before us in the amended form on Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. That can be done the first thing to-morrow morning.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Utah will yield——

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me suggest to the Senator from Iowa that we lay aside the joint resolution at this time and proceed with the unfinished business, so that the Senator may offer his amendments now, in order that the bill may be reprinted and be ready for use on Monday.

Mr. KENYON. Why not do that? It will only take 10 minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; let us do that to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator from North Dakota offer the amendments, or shall I do so?

Mr. GRONNA. I prefer that the Senator from Iowa shall offer them. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY—FEDERAL LIVE STOCK COMMISSION.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live stock commission, to define its duties and powers, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. I offer the following series of amendments that have been practically agreed upon by most of the members of the committee. I shall then ask that the bill be reprinted, with those amendments printed in italics.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Iowa whether that will be done so that the bill in its amended form will be available to-morrow or Monday?

Mr. KENYON. I assume that the joint resolution will occupy to-morrow, but the reprint of the bill will be available to-morrow at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Iowa will be stated in their order.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 20, strike out the words "commonly known as stockyards" and insert the words "maintained and conducted at or in connection with a public market."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 23, between the word "for" and the word "sale" insert the word "purchase," and strike out the words "feeding, watering, or," and at the end of line 23 insert the words "or slaughter in commerce."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, between the words "such" and "business," insert the words "slaughtering or preparing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 5, after the word "commerce," strike out the words "or of" and insert "and any trader or commission man or other person"; at the end of line 5, page 3, add the words "wholly or partly"; and in lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "on a commission basis."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 21, strike out the words "such rules and regulations as may be issued thereunder."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, line 24, between the words "unfair" and "unjustly" insert the word "or," and between the words "discriminatory" and "or" insert the words "practice or device in commerce"; and in line 25, before the word "deceptive," insert the words "in any," and between the words "device" and "in" insert the words "to cheat or defraud."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, line 14, after the word "commerce," strike out the words "in any line of foodstuffs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, strike out the paragraph lettered (f) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(f) Otherwise act or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or abet the doing of any act contrary to the provisions of this act, or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to refuse, neglect, or fail to act in accordance with the provisions of this act."

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out section 14 as printed and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 14. No operator shall engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce, or charge, collect, receive, or demand any unreasonable charge or rate for any service in commerce performed in connection with the business of such operator. The commission may, after hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative, determine and fix, and by rule, regulation or order prescribe fair and reasonable practices, charges, and rates to be observed by operators, and fair and reasonable terms and conditions upon which the service of operators in commerce shall be rendered or performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 11, strike out all of section 15, beginning with line 22, so the section as amended will read:

SEC. 15. It shall be the duty of every packer and operator to comply with the provisions of this act and approved regulations and orders which the commission may from time to time prescribe in conformity with this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 12, line 14, between the word "required" and the word "for" insert the following:

The commission may in its discretion prescribe uniform systems of accounts and records, and require the installation and use thereof by packers or operators. If such uniform systems are prescribed and required by the commission, no packer or operator shall keep any account, record, or memoranda other than those prescribed or approved by the commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 13, line 8, between the words "matter" and "any," insert the following:

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence before the commission, or in obedience to subpœna of the commission, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the commission in obedience to subpœna issued by it: Provided, That no natural person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 15 strike out from line 1 to the word "if" in line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, it shall afford to such packer or operator a reasonable opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and through witnesses, under such regulations as the commission may prescribe, at a hearing before the commission, at a time and place designated in a written notice served upon such packer or operator.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 15, line 11, between the words "or" and "any," insert the word "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 16, line 17, after the word "notice," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has requested unanimous consent that the bill be reprinted, showing in italics the amendments proposed by the committee which have been agreed to. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 11, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 10, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for the incomparable life and character of the Jesus of Nazareth, the holy one of Israel. Not a philosopher nor a theologian, He did not organize a church but He taught the most sublime principles that ever fell from the lips of mortal—the fatherhood of God and its corollary the brotherhood of man; I am the way and the truth and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me. We pray that His spirit may enter into the heart of man that righteousness, love, and good will may reign supreme in all the world; that men may learn war no more, but do unto others as they would be done by. In His spirit. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE RULES.

The SPEAKER. In justice to the very efficient Journal clerk, whose accuracy and knowledge have been of great value to the Chair and to the House and whose serious illness we all deplore, the Chair thinks he ought to state that the error which it was thought last night had been discovered in the Journal proves on further investigation to have been imaginary, as the matter had been properly journalized in accordance with the RECORD. Therefore the correction of last night was entirely unnecessary.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignations from committees, which were accepted:

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1920.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Respectfully, yours,

S. WALLACE DEMPSEY.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1920.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
By S. WALLACE DEMPSEY (by request of Mr. ROGERS).

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1920.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I beg to tender my resignation as a member of the Joint Commission on Postal Service.

Sincerely, yours,

MARTIN B. MADDEN.

INCREASE OF FORCE AND SALARIES IN PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11984, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 11984 from the Speaker's table, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 11984. To increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, who is the Democratic ranking member of the committee?

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, but Judge DAVIS of Tennessee would be the conferee.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, for the purpose of delaying even for a few days what might be final action on the bill, since this very materially increases the wages, in some instances as high as $500, I must object. This is no time now in the course of readjustment of matters for increase of salaries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, my parents came to this country as immigrants, and in the very nature of things I would be inclined to oppose any proposition looking toward the suspension of immigration to this country for the period of two years were it not for the fact that I realize the imperative necessity for some legislation along this line.

The present bill is merely a stop gap. It proposes to suspend immigration only for the period of two years. It is thought that in that time the Immigration Committees of both Houses of Congress will have time to go into the question of immigration thoroughly and report out a permanent measure that will meet the needs of the times. Also that in the next two years the great unrest that is now manifest all over the world will have subsided to a marked degree.

I wish to call your attention to the paragraph on page 3 of the committee report, which contains some very interesting figures with reference to the number of immigrants who have come to this country during the past year.

In July practically 56,000 came to our shores. In August 58,000, in September 70,000, in October 74,000. This was at Ellis Island alone, and the figures do not take into consideration the number of immigrants that come in through other ports of entry. It is safe to say that would add 10 or 15 per cent to the figures I have read.

Now, these figures do not represent the maximum number of people who wish to come to this country; they represent the maximum number who came in under the present facilities for handling them. If there were sufficient tonnage afloat to-day to bring everyone here from Europe who wished to come we would have in round numbers 10,000,000 or 15,000,000 immigrants coming to this country in the next year.

In the first place, we have not the facilities for taking care of this number, and the industrial unrest all over the country would be aggravated by such an influx. It is being constantly aggravated by the large number of immigrants coming to this country at the present time. I read in a newspaper the other day that there are over 60,000 unemployed in the city of Detroit alone. If we allow a half million, or a million, or a million and a half to come to this country in the next year to aggravate an already bad situation, as far as unemployment is concerned, it is merely going to create more unrest in the country.

Mr. SABATH rose.

Mr. KNUTSON. I shall yield a little later on to my friend from Illinois. A great objection to the people who are coming to this country at the present time is that they are unskilled, common labor. Very few are willing to go into the rural sections and help solve the farm-labor shortage. We have no place for that sort now. Few of our factories are working full time. These immigrants come here and settle in the large and congested centers, where the problem of housing is already acute. We are not getting the class of immigrants that we did 10, 20, 30, or 40 years ago. Most of those who came prior to 1900 went onto farms or took up land. They became producers, while those that we receive now, or at least 60 per cent of them, will become consumers and will contribute comparatively little toward the material development of this country.

The committee has gone into this question very carefully. There have been extensive hearings on this proposition in both the Sixty-fifth and the Sixty-sixth Congresses. Everyone who wished to be heard appeared before the committee, both for and in opposition to the proposed bill. A measure similar to this was introduced in the Sixty-fifth Congress and reported out favorably by the Immigration Committee. The bill reported out at that time provided for a suspension of four years. Mr. Powers, of Kentucky, who was then a Member of Congress, and myself submitted a minority report wherein we favored reducing the term from four to two years. Otherwise this is practically the same measure as the one reported out to the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. SIEGEL rose.

Mr. KNUTSON. I prefer not to be interrupted just now. Every mail brings letters from all over the country asking for the enactment of this legislation, and I feel that no time should be lost in passing this measure, because if we do not do something very soon we are simply going to be flooded with people from other countries. They are coming in now at a rate where we can not sift them out, and the worst part of it is that a large percentage of the people we are receiving now are radical in their political opinions. I spent three months in Europe during the past summer, and while over there I talked with a number of American representatives, consular agents, and others, and all viewed the situation with alarm. As a result of information gathered, I am willing to state on my reputation as a Member of this House that several foreign Governments are financing or facilitating the movement of radicals to this country. Before the war immigration from Spain was practically unknown. Two weeks ago when I visited Ellis Island I found that nearly 2,000 immigrants from that country were received in one day. Portions of Spain are a seething mass of anarchy, and many of the malcontents are being gathered and dumped onto us. How long are we going to stand for it? I do not know when there has been a proposition before this Congress that I have considered of greater importance than this, because my feeling is that something must be done and done at once. We can not allow the Governments of Europe to dump their bolshevists and communists onto us. We have no place for them. We have more of that kind now than we know what to do with. We ought to deport those that we have. I sincerely hope when this measure is put upon its passage that there will not be a dissenting vote. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box]. [Applause.]

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I think the House can safely act on the proposition that the situation as presented in statements by my colleagues on the committee has not been overstated. I have tried to view the situation sanely, and I fear that we have not ourselves realized, nor have we made the country realize, just what is involved. I have seen this throng of newcomers at New York; I have seen them at San Francisco on the Pacific coast. The people of California have not overstated their case. The New York grand jury, a portion of whose report was read to you yesterday, has not overstated the case. Personally, my only objection to the bill is that it does not go as far as I think it should go. I think I have noticed a disposition to somewhat apologize for the legislation by gentlemen saying that it is just a suspension; that it does not undertake anything drastic or anything of that kind. To be plain with you, I think the bill does not go far enough.

I include as a part of my remarks some extracts from the report of the committee accompanying this bill:

> Seventeen steamship agents recently told Hon. F. A. Wallis, commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, that immigration to the United States had but barely started; that if these companies had ships available they could bring 10,000,000 immigrants in one year's time. This statement does not take into account the possible German immigration due upon the termination of the existing technical state of war.

> The committee has confirmed the published statements of a commissioner of the Hebrew Sheltering and Aid Society of America, made after his personal investigation in Poland, to the effect that "If there were in existence a ship that could hold 3,000,000 human beings, the 3,000,00 Jews of Poland would board it to escape to America."

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Some of the members of the Committee who have discussed this subject have given figures concerning immigration entering Ellis Island. Can the gentleman give the number who enter at other ports? No one seems to have covered that important point.

Mr. BOX. We have not the exact figures but the understanding is that about from 80 to 85, possibly 87, per cent are now coming through New York.

Mr. SABATH. Here is the report I received to-day giving the total immigration up to July 1, for the last year; that is, the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. BOX. The gentleman asked for the relative figures; it is about 85 per cent, I think.

Mr. Chairman, I can see how one who is more concerned about the present and future welfare of people in foreign countries than the good of those already here can look at this subject from a standpoint different from ours. But only a misconception can divide us and the country into two groups, one consisting of immigrants and their friends, and the other of natives seeming to have a different interest. Let the newly arrived immigrants, their kinsmen who have been here longer, and their most sympathetic friends among us understand that unless America is preserved, natives, older immigrants, and newcomers will be involved in a common calamity. If we make another Europe or Asia here, the work of our fathers will have been destroyed, and immigrants and their children will have left the old home and journeyed far, only to find here the same lack of opportunities and the same miseries which they left in the unhappy land across the sea. If America is lost, the world will grow visibly darker, even to the people of foreign lands, and all that is worth living for will have been lost by us, whether we came recently or our fathers came long ago.

Let me define what I mean by the loss of America. I do not mean the loss of territory. The land between Maine, Puget Sound, Los Angeles, and Key West will remain and be called America for ages, but that alone does not satisfy me. As fond as we are of the land and the name, they are not the dearest things. I do not mean that American cities or rural sections would be depopulated or that our wealth would be destroyed soon, if a hundred millions of Europeans, Japanese, and others like them should come in the next 20 years. Cities and their population and wealth might be greatly increased, but a country can be full of big cities and be very unhappy. Europe, Japan, China, and India are full of teeming cities, and yet millions of their people are leaving for America. The presence of many big cities does not assure the preservation of things that good Americans love most. We might continue to multiply our cities and their population, and yet might create here the same unhappiness from which immigrants are trying to escape.

Neither does wealth increase happiness, nor brains, nor does it enlarge the human soul. Certainly it does not increase purity, nor justice, nor the love of liberty. It was not the wealth of America that made it the wonder of the world in Revolutionary times and for half a century afterward. Many of the men who came here then were drawn by an affinity between them and America's spirit. Now that we are rich other considerations may prompt them to come. The affinity between wealth and its seekers is far below that between liberty and its lovers. "When wealth increases, men decay." America might gain a whole world, and yet lose its best self, that which distinguishes it from the lands whose people in millions are leaving them now.

The loss of what things would amount to a loss of America, even though territory, name, population, cities and wealth remain?

Law, with its just and orderly administration, bringing opportunity, safety, and peace, is one of them. The people who are coming or preparing to come from Mexico and Europe have not been trained in the schools of order but have stewed in disorder—the disorder of war, the disorder of persecution, the disorder of revolution, the disorder of anarchy. Just now there is a world plague of senseless destructiveness, making it appear that misguided men may by their folly change an unhappy world into a weltering hell. Not all the teachers and disciples of this insane rage are among the newcomers, but the others would find few hearers and still fewer instruments of their hatred and destructive insanity among natives or immigrants who have been here long enough to come to themselves.

Another thing which would de-Americanize America would be a population or citizenship with divided allegiance—a hyphenated populaton, a hyphenated citizenship. The ills which beset countries are numerous and serious enough to require the whole-hearted loyalty of all the people. Big home problems and foreign difficulties can be adequately met only when there is a united and supremely loyal citizenship, permitting no illicit love affairs with outside affinities to divide and debauch the national household. Domestic and foreign policies vital to us concern important interests, touch sensitive nerves of other nations. When parties or public men are afraid to do this or that because the Irish vote might be estranged, the German vote alienated, or the Italian vote driven away, demoralization, weakness, and dishonor have already come. When millions of voters have foreign attachments which segregate them from Americans having no controlling outside love, then millions are not thoroughly Americanized and yet are sufficiently numerous and influential as to control the balance of power in national contests. "A house divided against itself can not stand." Europe has been divided against itself since before Romulus built the little wall around the village on the Tiber. We are importing millions of these same people, divided as between each other and too often segregated from us, and our parties and politicians are playing these foreign attachments against each other and against their own Government when partisan ends can be served by it.

Oh, the shame of it!

What elements of dissolution are lurking in it!

The relationship and spirit of American industrial life can be changed to the undoing of America. We want no peasant or peon or coolie class nor caste system dividing us into an upper and a lower world. The countries whose people are fleeing from them have such relationship between labor and the rest of mankind. Their coming promotes that condition here. When men put their thumbs in their vests and speak of importing "labor," they are not thinking of men and women to become neighbors, friends, and associates; they are speaking of underlings, whose coming will not increase the attractiveness of labor to America. Their employment rather tends to drive young Americans out. Let me illustrate: The first employees of the New England cotton mills were nearly all from the adjacent farms and villages. A French writer who visited Lowell in 1834 says that of 7,000 employees 6,000 were young women, the daughters of neighboring farmers. Charles Dickens, who visited Lowell at that time, was deeply impressed by the sight of these happy American girls, well dressed, extremely clean, healthful, and refined. He says that they were no degraded brutes of burden. They had libraries, musical instruments, and the conveniences, comforts, and refinements of life.

But immigrants poured in, so that the Immigration Commission, composed of Senator LODGE and a Republican majority and Democratic minority membership, composed of those who had investigated the subject thoroughly, found that at the time of making its report nine-tenths of the employees were foreign born, and one-tenth native born, instead of more than five-sixths, as formerly. Young Americans would delight to join that interesting company of well-dressed, refined, reading, singing, young American employees, but they would avoid the other company and avoid labor, because it put them in such company and in a place so different in the estimation of the community. Every man acquainted with the industrial history of the South during and since the days of slavery knows that the importation of black people tended to drive the white people out of labor and tended to dishonor labor in the minds of proud young white people. It promoted idle helplessness among one class and a disposition to let the work be done by slaves and so-called "poor white trash."

During the past summer your committee was for several weeks engaged in the investigation of the Japanese question in California and Washington. We learned that in many of those flowering and fruitful communities in former times the young American people from the homes, schools, and colleges went gladly to the berry fields and orchards during the summer and found wholesome, attractive, and profitable employment in gathering such crops as grew in Eden, and that they no longer do so. We inquired why. The young men said, "Oh, that has become a Jap's or a Chink's job." Mothers said, "We can not afford to have our daughters working side by side with oriental coolies." Both old and young look upon the present company and work of the fields as degrading. By this means young Americans were driven from the fields of California, as their cousins had been kept from the fields of the South and from the factories of New England.

Bringing such labor but perpetuates and magnifies the evil it professes to remedy. The evil thrives and grows when fed on the medicine which gentlemen propose as a remedy for it. And, what is more serious, it tends to separate America into an under and upper world, divided by a very thin crust, above which are those who care nothing for the crowd beneath, while those below hate and seek to destroy those above. Under such an industrial status America as we know it would cease to be, but the status would not continue, but would develop into Russian chaos.

If time permitted, I could further specify phases of our life which, one after another, can be so modified as to leave the territory, name, a vast population, and wealth, and yet make this the gathering place of a throng strange in thought, word, and action, jarring and warring against each other, a people and a life which Washington, Jackson, Lincoln, McKinley, or Cleveland, and the Americans of their day would have promptly disowned. In many places this situation is developing now.

In Placer County, Calif., Japanese own or occupy 17,000 out of the 20,000 acres of gardens, vineyards, berry fields, and orchards—a veritable Paradise spot, more than three-fourths of which gives the odors of bloom and fruit to oriental nostrils.

If you want to know what it is to keep the skin and skeleton of American life without its meat, go into California rural villages and see the land occupied by orientals and observe whole families of them everywhere in the fields on the Sabbath. At the very same time you see a few lonely looking Americans, some men and a few women and children, going to their Christian churches to worship. Busy villages, where few Americans can be seen, where American churches look desolate and the new Buddhist temple appears to be more prosperous. It is a long way from early Puritan churches in New England, or Christ Church, where Washington worshipped in Virginia, to a new Buddhist temple in California, but the progress from one to the other is the process which I am trying to describe.

My home is 2,000 miles from California, but I am at one with her people. That land must be kept by them and their children.

As the grass, shrub, and tree life of fields and woods of the whole world has been extended, made, and modified over and over again by its carriage on wind and water and otherwise, so the world of men has been, and will be, distributed, placed, shaped, and reshaped by human migration. This is a factor of first magnitude in our life and that of the world—the old world of the past and the living world of now. It is moving in all the world to-day, and we of the United States of America are in the middle of the movement. No other tide ever swept the affairs of men, carrying in it more that moves the foundations of human life or more power to replace and reshape the whole structure, than does the tide of human migration that now moves from all lands to America. The desire of the mistreated and crowded-out of all humanity is to get here. So far as I have found or heard suggested, no other country in all time was ever before the place to which so nearly all homeless, hungry, misplaced men desire to migrate. This, if not controlled, will multiply and hasten the effects of this society-changing, world-changing influence on us and make us essentially different, or undo us more thoroughly than was ever done to any great people before.

Earthquakes, glaciers, receding seas, uprising land, and cooling continents have changed the face of the earth on which man makes his home. No less surely the coming and going tides of human migration will change the races of men, their condition and institutions. Men can do little toward shaping the surface of continents, but this Nation can do much to control these migrations moving to it in such volume.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BOX. Its action should be along two lines; first, it should control and restrict the number coming. Because this bill promises some good results in that direction, I shall support it, though I would like to see it much stronger.

The next line of action should be toward Americanization. America's plan to Americanize immigrants and their children already here should be thoroughly like America in the bigness of its proportions, its comprehensiveness, its intensity, and in the persistence and unrelenting determination behind it.

I have introduced a bill providing for action along this line for the consideration of the committee and my colleagues in the House. I do not claim that it is the only plan; it may not be the best plan; but the committee it going to hear more from me on this subject, and so will the House, if it is as kind as it has uniformly been to me in the past.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks leave to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman consumed

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman consumed four minutes.

Mr. BOX. I yield back the one minute.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries:

IMMIGRATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY]. [Applause.]

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when one considers the history of immigration during the last century he comes to the conclusion that this country has not had any immigration policy up to February 5, 1917. What we have done during the last 100 years is a matter of patchwork, making a law here to apply to this emergency and another law to apply to another emergency without having the vision to prepare one which would apply to the future and cover conditions generally. Just now we are confronted with a condition which to some of us is alarming, because the aliens who come to our shores largely go to the overcongested populous centers, such as New York, Chicago, Cleveland, and Baltimore. I suppose probably 90 to 95 per cent of the aliens coming to our shores remain along the coast and in large cities. No matter if those aliens were agriculturists before they came here, they go into these larger centers, already overcrowded, tearing down the standard of living and the standard of wage.

This question confronts us, gentlemen: Are they tearing down the standard of living and wage? A hundred years ago we find that those who came to this country, 94 to 95 per cent of them, went upon farms to till the soil. But now a large portion come not to produce but to consume. And the House has a bill to exclude aliens, that we might possibly have another moment to catch our breath, for we know not how to solve the problem of immigration. We postpone, little dreaming that procrastination is the thief of time.

It reminds me of a story that Lincoln told about Congress. He said that a farmer had a tree which fell into a fertile field, and when he continued to plow around it he was asked why he did so. The farmer replied, "It will not burn, because it is too soggy, and it is too tough to cut and too heavy to haul away." It seems as though with this immigration question we are simply plowing around a fertile field without solving our problems.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was hoping that instead of having this bill of exclusion we might have some constructive measure which would look into the future and place our immigration upon a basis so that we could sift those who come to our shores; so that we might accept those who are desirable; so that we might receive those who will assimilate with the great American spirit. But it seems that Congress is not ready to tackle this problem.

Canada has learned her lesson. She does not continually give offense whenever she excludes immigrants from a certain nation or any alien group that could not assimilate with the Canadian life and population. The matter of immigration is regulated by an administrative body capable of acting when the needs require action. Why should not we prepare a standard known as the American standard, and then we can tell the immigrants who come to our shores, "Here is our standard. We will be pleased to open our doors if you accept it; but if you will not, our ship is in the harbor." Instead of that, whenever we are confronted with a proposition of this kind we are also confronted with those who want to capitalize their ideas. I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from California, the chairman of the Military Committee, but when he points out the menace and makes a speech urging us to prepare for war, why does he not give us a solution and urge us to solve the problem once and for all instead of widening the breach by advocating military preparedness? It seems to me if this Congress would establish a board of five or six men who would study this problem, with power to admit aliens on conditions that those already here of that ethnic group become Americans and accept our American standards, we might solve our problems. In other words, let us tell those of other countries, "We will accept your nationals, provided those who are here do not tear down the standard that we call America."

Then, in this way we would shift the burden from off of our shoulders upon that alien group who refuses to accept our ideals and who do not assimilate with us. But instead of that, it seems as though there are those who want to keep this problem alive for the purpose of foisting upon this country a large military force—universal military training, if you please—and saddle a soldier on the back of each individual in our country. After the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee returned from his trip to the Orient, according to the press reports, he urges us to build the largest Navy in the world. And it seems the Nation across the Pacific heard that and voted 600,000,000 yen for their navy, and it is said that they made arrangements with England for the purpose of buying ships from her. She has already, according to the reports, made arrangements with Germany to build her submarines, so that she may preserve what she thinks is her self-respect. The same old story which brought on this World War. Oh, you can keep this problem alive if you want to do so. You can make a plaything out of it for the purpose of waving the flag in our face and telling us that we must have a large standing Army; that we must be burdened as taxpayers in order to maintain the largest Navy in the world, if you please. And yet your problem will remain unsolved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield me some time?

Mr. SABATH. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. WELTY. The literacy test has done something, but it fails to meet our ideals. For instance, the other day, while our committee was visiting Ellis Island a citizen of this country came from California. He had a ranch there and was going to marry a Czecho-Slovak at Ellis Island. He met his bride. But he was not permitted to marry the young lady, because she could not pass the literacy test. If he had only known, he probably could have gone 3 miles from the United States and married there and thus made her an American citizen. They refused to permit that young lady to enter the United States. Another case that came up while there is of a woman who came here in 1908. A couple of months ago she left to bury her mother, and when she applied for readmission at Ellis Island she was excluded because she could not pass the literacy test. And yet she was here before the literacy test was passed. She was here, my friends, when we voted that she could be a citizen of this country. But she was excluded.

There are a great many matters of that kind that work an injustice. No doubt in both of those cases that I have cited the people will be admitted in time, after they have gone through the red tape of the departments, and then, perchance, in a week or six months the man from California may be permitted to marry the young lady. But all this time we are entertaining his bride at Ellis Island at the expense of the Government. And I suppose the domestic in course of time, after she appeals her case to the Secretary of Labor at Washington, and perchance from there it goes through red tape to the Secretary of State, and then back again, may in six months come into this country.

Mr. VAILE. Is not the gentleman advised that she is being entertained at the expense of the steamship company in the United States?

Mr. WELTY. But when the steamship company finds that we admit the bride, and she becomes the wife of the ranchman from California, then in justice we must return the money for keeping that bride at Ellis Island. For we made a mistake, otherwise we would not have admitted her. What I want to say is this: Instead of having the red tape in admitting our aliens, we ought to cut it. We ought to have some one at Ellis Island who can act there in those cases. If the bride looks good to him we ought to say to the ranchman, "God bless you, take her and go back to your ranch in California." And if the other woman was entitled to admission because she was here in 1908, in the name of all that is fair and just she ought to be admitted. But she was not admitted. The steamship company pays first, and then we will assume payment, because the judge having final jurisdiction says she ought to be admitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate resolution 396.

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its profound sorrow in the death of the Hon. JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD, late a Senator from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public service.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. WALSH of Montana and Mr. FRANCE members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Interior Department.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 643) entitled "An act to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia," had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMMIGRATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the chairman of the committee, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SWOPE].

Mr. SWOPE. I will yield that time to my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. VAILE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a unanimous-consent request to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] 15 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I consider this bill as one of the necessary reconstruction bills following the World War. It is not a question of just what should be the amount or kind or character of immigration to this country. We need and always have required a reasonable amount of immigration. But it is apparent from the investigation of the committee that beyond all question there are now in the United States something like 15,000,000 people who are not American citizens. There are coming to the shores of America now all the way from 65,000 to 150,000 people a month. In other words, immigration at the present rate will amount to over a million and a half a year. Our country is not determined as to just what it wants to do, and the people of the world are in the same condition, even more so than in this country. Hundreds and thousands of them are trying to get out from under the burden that has been placed on them by virtue of the war. They are not seeking necessarily the benefits of this country because they want to become citizens and be a part and parcel of America and to carry out the principles upon which this Government is founded. The great majority of those who have come already since the armistice and of those who are seeking admission now are dependents. They are not farmers or laborers, but are coming to live upon their relatives and friends and on the bounty of this country. The evidence shows that beyond all question. With the large number of contagious diseases that are prevalent in the Old World, many hundreds of persons afflicted with those diseases are bound to land on our shores, notwithstanding the inspection here, because the inspection as to physical and mental condition is exceptionally poor, on account of the fact that there are not enough inspectors or agents. Many of the immigrants who arrive here just practically walk off of the vessel on the landing planks and scatter promiscuously among the people of this country. So under the conditions which exist to-day it is better to let immigration be suspended, and to let us assimilate those who are here now, than to continue this overflow of the many, many undesirables who are coming at the present time. That is the purpose of the committee in reporting this bill. It excludes all. There is no discrimination against any country or race. All are excluded with the exception of Government officials and certain relatives of those who are now living in this country. We allow a man 24 years old to go abroad and be married if he desires and to bring his wife to this country. Notwithstanding these exceptions, the Secretary of Labor has the power to make investigations, and it is his duty, if there is any possible reason, notwithstanding the relationship of these people, why they should not be admitted to this country, to see that they are excluded, and that is one of the purposes of the bill.

Now, no one can object to a clearing up of this business. No one can object to putting our own house in order. No one, no matter how anxious he is for immigration, can object to our taking time to assimilate those who are here, to see that they are citizens; that they take unto themselves the principles of this country and study its institutions, in order that we may further extend our work of Americanization, so that those who have come to this country within the last 10 years may become citizens; that they may love, honor, respect, and assist in maintaining our Government; and that they may imbue their children with the same ideas. Instead of that we find communities in this country that are as foreign as to language and thought as any city in any foreign land to-day. That must be avoided, and now is the time to stop.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question only.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Does the gentleman's committee propose legislation at this session to prevent that condition existing in this country?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; we are working on it now. We have been at work for the last two years. The work of Americanization is going on every day, and hundreds of thousands of foreigners are being put in the way of becoming good American citizens. We ought to expend more money for better investigation, to the end that this work may be carried on in connection with the various State functionaries that are doing such splendid work. Now, on the question of investigation, I wish to show one of the necessities for it.

In the smaller communities over the country the men who are naturalized appreciate the naturalization. They realize that they have gone through some process of form or substance of what is meant to become an American citizen. Without making any complaint or criticism, I want to call the attention of the committee and the attention of the gentleman from New York, who says it is all in the naturalization, to the method in the large cities. Now, in the meantime, during this suspension we will be able to report to the House bills on naturalization correcting and modifying the present law so that they will get a better realization of what they are doing than we are getting to-day. But you must give us time to do it and give the public time to do it.

Here is a sample of the naturalization in the large city of New York that occurred last year in the presence of this committee, not only once but several times. You can be naturalized in the Federal courts or the State courts when it is a court of record. One hundred and twenty-five applicants appeared before the judge, with 250 witnesses. Think of it a moment; in 90 minutes, the State court of New York, in the city of New York, naturalized 125 citizens. The bailiff says, "All of you from Italy come forward, get around here, stand in there, line up, come on, hold up your hands. Br— br— br— br—. Sit down. All of you who come from Austria come forward, get in line, stand up, hold up your hands. Br— br— br— br—. Sit down. All of you who come from England come forward, hold up your hands. Br— br— br— br—. Sit down." They went through 10 nationalities, and when they got through the court made a two-minute examination as to American citizens, and said, "So help you God," and that is the theory of the instruction to these men as American citizens.

Now, in the city of New York, or in any other large city, it is so crowded with business that the judge can not give a sufficient length of time to examine the witnesses that come before him or examine the applicants as to where they come from, their knowledge of the English language, and whether or not they ought to be admitted as citizens.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the distinguished ex-Senator.

Mr. MASON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that before the judge passes upon the admission of these applicants the papers are all examined and made out by the proper officers.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes; the committee spent some time in the presence of these officers who examine these papers and persons. We found the same method of examination in the Naturalization Bureau. Here were two little rooms, 10 by 12, and in one room five stenographers and assistants and in the other six or seven, and they were crowded so thick with applic .nts that they bumped against each other. They brought the applicant in with two witnesses, and the witnesses were asked, "Do you know this man; will he make a good citizen; and would you like to be an American citizen?" "Yes." "Well, go on." And they are run through there like sheep, dropping a little pebble when you get 100. That is the way they examine them in New York by the Bureau of Naturalization.

Now, the committee has not taken any second information on this. They saw what was going on in the Bureau of Naturalization. They saw it not only once but several times, and in the courts also, by these men who were being naturalized.

Now, that is one remedy—suspend immigration for two years until we get those here naturalized. Let these applicants have some conception of what it means to become an American citizen. We should make a sufficient appropriation so that the Bureau of Naturalization, in conjunction with the superintendents of the counties of the various States and the city superintendents may get these men and women into these night schools where they may receive instruction as to what this Government means, so that they will be able to read and write and understand the genius of our Government.

Now, a great part of that will be done in the next two years, relieving them of the enormous burden and expense. Then when the two years have passed and gone and things will have been changed here, conditions abroad will have settled down to a better state, people will be more contented than at the present time, and we will be able to enact an immigration bill whereby we will be able to admit to this country the aliens from another country who have some conception at least before they come here that they are going to become a part and parcel of this country and spend their remaining days on American soil and be imbued with its principles and where they will be protected by society instead of having a purpose to destroy this Government, as has been done for the last four years. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I can not discuss this matter in the short time yielded me, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEHLBACH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE].

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman; I am not so much afraid of the immigrant as some Members of this House appear to be. I have lived in the city of New York a great many years and have met and had business relations with a great many who came over as immigrants. Up to 1914 we received into this country a net of about a million a year. This year we will probably receive into this country 700,000 or 800,000. Of every two who come to this country one is going back. There is no great reason why we should take this up at this time. The people who come here are not of a poorer class than those who have come here during the last 20 years. I know considerable about the conditions. I was present at Ellis Island, went down on the ship that sent the 249 undesirables back to Europe, where they should have been sent long ago. I have been twice during the month of November to Ellis Island to see what the conditions were at that place. The last time I was over to Ellis Island I took with me a prominent citizen of the State of Iowa, because in the papers of Iowa he had read very often that undesirables were coming to this country, and wanted to see for himself the conditions at the island. That was about three weeks ago. The island was full of people and we had a splendid opportunity to examine the situation. We spent more than three hours there. When he came back on the boat and met several people at dinner that night I remember that the very first remark he made was to the effect that the immigrants whom he saw coming in at Ellis Island were of a much better class than one would believe from reading the newspapers of his own State or the papers of Chicago.

The fact is that in this country we need laboring men and women of certain classes. We are paying now in the city of New York for ordinary shovelers to dig trenches in which to lay a sewer or a water pipe from $4.50 to $6 a day. We are paying from $6 to $9 a day for hod carriers. It is not because we have not plenty of men in this country. The fact is that our people of the second generation in this country will not carry a hod or dig a trench. We need the men on the farms. We have a great need in this country of competent women to do housework, and there are in Europe men who are willing to do this hard work in America and women who are capable and willing to do the housework. I believe in restrictions. I would have a very careful examination. I would not have it made under labor-union organizations. They represent only about one-ninth of the laboring men in this country. They should not have the power of saying who shall come and how the laws of this country shall be administered in respect to who is to be permitted to come into the Nation. I want to have restrictions. I think that for a limited time we might stop immigration in this country long enough so that Ellis Island may be made a proper place in which to receive all of the immigrants who desire to come into the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is not that exactly the purpose of this bill—a suspension of 22 months?

Mr. ROWE. Yes; but 22 months is too long. We are a very incompetent Congress if we can not prepare laws and prepare Ellis Island to receive immigrants within 12 months. If that is the fact, then we ought to be ashamed of ourselves and of the Congress of the United States. On the other hand the very best material can be received by us from Europe. Why not pick out not all of them, not two-thirds of them, but a third of the men and women who want to come to this country, the very best material of all Europe, as workingmen and working women, and have them come into this country, and come regularly. It seems to me that while we need more restriction, we need a more careful examination of applicants to this country. They should first be carefully examined on the other side by officials of the United States duly authorized to examine there, and then, having reached this country perhaps it is best that we should still submit them to a further examination. On the other side they can know whether a man or woman is desirable, whereas on this side we are not qualified to judge of that fact.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC].

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I feel that the Immigration Committee is entitled to the thanks of this body for bringing in a bill of this kind during the early part of this session. There is an old saying, "A stitch in time saves nine," and this saying, in my opinion, is apropos of the condition that exists in the United States at the present moment with relation to the need of a law which will protect the citizens of this country from the foreign immigrants who are fleeing to our shores to escape the heavy taxation in the war-devastated regions of Europe.

Some time ago it was my privilege to visit Ellis Island, not as a member of the committee but as a private citizen interested in obtaining information relative to the situation which exists at that place. I stood at the end of a hall with three physicians, and I saw them examine each immigrant as they came down the line, rolling back the upper eyelid in order to gain some information as to the individual's physical condition. I saw them place the chalk marks on their clothing which indicated that they were in a diseased condition, so that they could be separated when they reached the place where they were to undergo certain examinations. Afterwards I went to a large assembly hall where immigrants came before the examiners to take the literacy test, and the one fact that impressed me more than anything else was that practically every single immigrant examined that day had less than $50 to his credit.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman kindly yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman recognize the fact that many of the most excellent citizens of this country came here without $50 in their pocket, made their way, and builded splendidly for the welfare of the country?

Mr. McCLINTIC. That may be true; but there is not a Member of this House who could have looked upon that body of immigrants as I did that day but what would recognize that they were of an undesirable class. Practically all of them were weak, small of stature, poorly clad, emaciated, and in a condition which showed that the environment surrounding them in their European homes were indeed very bad.

It is for this reason that I say the class of immigrants coming to the shores of the United States at this time are not the kind of people we want as citizens in this country. It is a well-known fact that the majority of immigrants coming to this country at the present time are going into the large industrial centers instead of the agricultural centers of the United States, and when it is taken into consideration that the large centers are already crowded to the extent that there is hardly sufficient living quarters to take care of the people it can be readily seen that this class of people, instead of becoming of service to the communities where they go, they will become charges to be taken care of by charitable institutions. The week I visited Ellis Island I was told that 25,000 immigrants had been unloaded at that port. From their personal appearance they seemed to be the offcasts of the countries from which they came.

The cost of living in the United States has increased several hundred per cent in the last few years. Those who are coming to our shores are not able to speak our language; they only have a small amount of money on hand, and it is only a question of a few weeks until their resources will all be used up. I have been told that there are certain individuals in this country who make it their business to exploit immigrant labor coming from certain countries. The immigrant, realizing that he can not speak our language, naturally turns to a former countryman for help, and instead of enjoying the fruits of his labor a large portion of what he earns is taken from him as a commission for the assistance given him. If the immigrants coming to this country were of a class that sought employment on the farms and were capable and willing to render this kind of service to the Nation, then there would be no reason for this legislation. However, the opposite is true, and instead of becoming producers they at once become consumers, thereby working a hardship on every industry throughout the Nation.

I am sure that the United States Congress has no desire to cast any reflection against the citizens of any country. However, the law of self-preservation is one that must always be observed and respected, and it is for this reason that the American citizen, regardless of the occupation he follows, must be protected from being undermined by this class of people.

The Nation at the present moment is going through a reconstruction period. Thousands in many of the large cities have recently been thrown out of employment. Conditions from many standpoints have been gradually growing worse. The first duty of our country is to provide employment for our own people, and until normal conditions can be restored it will be the part of wisdom to close the doors of our country until every condition can be restored to a normal basis. It is for this reason that I am supporting this bill, and I hope to see it enacted into a law by this Congress.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I agree in the main with the remarks of my colleague from Brooklyn [Mr. ROWE], and I think he epitomizes in a fair, judicial manner the circumstances with which we are confronted. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] made a correlative statement of immigration with our imports which implied that we should set up a barrier against all things foreign. Of course, such a policy should be deprecated. I prefer the constructive criticism of the gentleman from Brooklyn, where he laid down something definite that might be worked out for the benefit of our country and for these people who seek liberty under our Constitution; his suggestion that there be agencies distributed throughout Europe and other countries where these people would be checked up and investigated and the good taken from the bad and permitted to come here is, I think, feasible, just on the same basis and manner as our consular agents and commercial agents. The Department of Commerce has already initiated an activity along that line. I believe in restriction, reasonable and fair, and I am of the opinion that 2 years or 22 months is arbitrary and excessive. I believe it is unnecessary, of course, to refer to every American born or every foreign born who is in this House who is at best an immigrant only in different degrees. There is one, however, my colleague, JOHN MACCRATE, who sits on the Republican side of this House, who will have served by March 4 next, one term in this Congress, born in Scotland within the last 40 years, a resident of Greater New York, and which the great electorate of that city honored on November last with one of the greatest possible honors that could be given to a man within that State, elected him, this young Scotch immigrant, for a period of 14 years, at a salary of $17,500 a year, as justice of the supreme court. Here is a young man of sterling character and of admitted legal ability who would have, if this law was in force when he was a wee lad, been denied this distinction and honor. He is a type of many others who would be excluded if this measure were passed as proposed. I believe it has not been given the thought and consideration from a technical standpoint which should be given to it. My friends, as it is now reported I oppose it and hope that it will be so corrected to fit the circumstances where the immigrants who are desirable and anxious for our advantages can come to this haven of the oppressed, this land of promise and opportunity, and contribute in its development and advancement. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I am not in condition to do this subject justice, but I can not be silent—I think from a sense of duty—while this bill is so hurriedly passed through the House of Representatives. I want to say for my fellow immigrants [laughter] in the House—you are all immigrants; what have you got big heads about; every one of you. If this bill had been passed 50 or 100 years ago hardly any of the House would have been here. It would have kept the Pilgrim Fathers out. They had no passports. The meanest thing about this bill—and I say that with all respect to my good friends who framed it—is that the whole theory that this was to be the land of the free and the home of the brave and an asylum for the oppressed is destroyed by it. You must have a passport if you want to escape the rule of Lenin and Trotski.

You can not escape unless you get a passport from them, and this Government does not recognize the Soviet Government. It would have kept Kossuth out when he came to speak here for the liberty of Hungary. It would have kept Thomas Estrada Palma out, who came to speak for the liberty of Cuba. He could not get a passport from Spain, and to-day this little island of Cuba is blossoming, a beautiful, strong, young Republic. You propose to-day by this bill to say that no man, however good or strong of arm, that no man, however much in love with the principles of our Government, can come from India or Ireland or South Africa without a visé of the king. By article 10 we guaranteed the territory of all nations. The people knocked that out. You now propose to enact into law that provision by guaranteeing that the kings of the earth shall not be deprived of their right to govern the brain, blood, and bone of all their subjects. An honest, brave man fleeing from the power of the king you propose to deport and send him back to prison or the gallows if he lands on our soil without the consent of his master, the king.

To my colleagues on the Republican side, let me say to you, gentlemen, you are making a mistake personally and politically. But, bigger than that, you are making a mistake for your country. All of the treaties that we have will be amended or abrogated by this law, except possibly where there is a special treaty like that with Japan. We want peace and good fellowship. By this bill you turn the people of the world against us. You put into the mind of every man, woman, and child all over the world that this great country has suddenly drawn the cloak of seclusion about herself. You say by this bill, "Young man, have you got money?" "Yes." "Royal blood?" "Yes." "Do you want to go to school?" "Yes." "Come in." But if the Norwegian stands here with a strong hand and warm heart, in love with the doctrines of your country, you say to him, "Stay out unless you can go to school."

The trouble about this, my brother immigrants, is that the fault has been in the execution of the law we have. No man can come here who does not subscribe to our doctrines. The description given by my friend the gentleman from California as to granting of citizens papers in our courts was not fair. I have seen them go through the United States courts. They are all examined. I saw them stand there. They did go fast before Judge Landis the other day, I noticed, but every one of them had been examined; their papers had been examined; the living witnesses were there as to their character and reputation.

The trouble in the immigration subject is where it has been all the while for eight years—inefficiency and incompetency in the execution of the laws. We do not need this law to shut out these people who want to come here. We do need—and the people have spoken—to give a new administration to this Government. And I hope and pray that the law we have will be enforced and that there be no more talk about the danger of the immigrants coming into this country and the danger and hysteria about the bolshevik. This country can take care of itself. All the Bolsheviki in the world can not hurt us. They may disturb us for a while, but the Bolsheviki can not come in here under the present law. The people have given you a new administration; we will have a new Attorney General; we will have a new administration of the department. Let us see what they can do. Let us see whether they can not protect the American people from the things you are talking about. But to me the most unsentimental, the most selfish, un-American, unpatriotic thing is the ungodly desire to crowd every man off the earth because we do not want to compete with him. We get a prejudice; and you know that largely the basis of this is the prejudice against the Jews. Tell the truth about it. We are not afraid to speak the truth, are we? There is a prejudice against the Poles; there is a prejudice against the Germans; there is a prejudice against the Irish.

It is a prejudice also against any nation in the world that is seeking to adopt the doctrine of self-government, that has the cruel hand of Great Britain at her throat. South Africa wants to be heard. By unanimous vote of her Congress she declared for self-determination. Within the memory of us here now, we saw Great Britain kill that young republic. They want a chance to come here. Her people want that chance. But they have got to get a visé from the king, George.

There is war in Ireland. Ninety per cent of the people have spoken for self-determination. They have established a de facto government. We are not neutral. We refuse to recognize one but do recognize the other. Some of them want to come here. I remember my great leader, sir, in politics, was John A. Logan. I remember that he saved the day at that critical hour in the war, and I remember that he was the son of an Irish immigrant. They want to come here. Here is this poor, brave woman, Mrs. McSwiney; she could not be here 24 hours if we passed this bill, without a visé from the king. He is not her king. The people of that country have spoken. A larger percentage of Ireland are back of De Valera to-day for president of Ireland than there was back of George Washington when he established our Republic. A larger percentage are for that freedom to-day in Ireland than was back of Abraham Lincoln when he maintained the Union—a larger percentage of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MASON. I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. SIEGEL. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. Just one illustration of this selfishness of us immigrants, the Masons through Scotland and the Campbells from the same country. A lot of you came along from Ireland and some from Germany. You are here now and have gotten on your feet, and do not want anybody else to have a chance.

I read a legend once of an old stingy grouch who was in hell, and who appealed to an angel to help him. The angel said, "Name one good thing you ever did and I will try to help you." He said "I gave a carrot once to a poor boy." Immediately a carrot appeared before this grouch in hell. They got hold of him and began lifting him out of the pit, and just as they were going to deposit him out of hell-fire and damnation, he saw some other fellows clinging with him to the carrot. He said, "Get out of here. This is my carrot." And the angel very properly dropped them all back to hell, where they belonged. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, this is not our carrot alone; it is not your world, your country alone; it is not my country. The people who have developed this country have come from all over the world. England is not the mother, but all of Europe. We have made this country. You have good laws; let us enforce them. Let us have a President in evidence on the 4th of March who will appoint men to see that those who come in here are sound of limb and of mind and can become good American citizens. It is a part of the world. It is not your country or mine alone; it is God's country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I speak on this measure as an old-fashioned American, as one who comes of a stock so long in America that there is no record of when they came. So that I may be pardoned, I hope, for taking an old-fashioned American view of this question and for not adhering to some of the remarks which have been made upon this bill. I hold to old-fashioned ideals of Americanism and not to the new-fangled, narrow, and chauvinistic spirit of nationalism. I still believe in the principles of Jefferson, in the principles recognized in the American Constitution, and in some of the old ideals for which our ancestors labored and fought.

It has been charged that this bill is an anti-Semitic bill, that it is aimed particularly at the Jews of Europe who are seeking to come here. To such an extent, if any, as the bill has the Jew particularly in view and aims at his exclusion, the bill is irredeemably bad. I have no hesitation in saying that.

I read in the report of the committee a very significant statement, a statement of sinister significance, found on page 6, which is this:

> The committee has confirmed the published statements of a commissioner of the Hebrew Sheltering and Aid Society of America made after his personal investigation in Poland, to the effect that "If there were in existence a ship that could hold 3,000,000 human beings, the 3,000,000 Jews of Poland would board it to escape to America."

I also read in the appendix, on page 11 of the report, comment on the situation as to applications for passports for emigration from Rumania:

> Bucharest: Possibly 10 per cent of applicants are Rumanians from Transylvania or the Old Kingdom. The remainder are Jews, mostly from Bessarabia and Bukovina, practically all, except women and children, being petty merchants or salesmen. It should also be noted that the proportion of men emigrating is increasing and that not a few are probably fugitives from Ukrainia who have managed to obtain Rumanian passports. Ninety per cent of applicants are Jews of both sexes and all ages.

I wonder, in the light of those statements, why it is that the Jews of Ukrainia and Rumania are seeking to escape, and why the Jewish population to the last individual is seeking to escape from Poland. I wonder why it is. Their economic situation is not more severe than the balance of the populations of those countries. There exists no reason, so far as I can conceive, unless the Jews are meeting in the countries of their nativity with oppression and abuse on racial and religious grounds. I can draw no other inference from the fact when a nation's entire population of a certain race and religion is seeking to escape from that nation.

I read with deep indignation accounts of Poland's anti-Jewish pogroms, of the butchery of men and women in cold blood. The stories of these atrocities were denied by representatives of Poland. Now we find them verified by the wholesale flight of the Jewish population. I can not forget that the new State of Poland was brought into being by the aid of America and her associates in the Great War; that we have succored and sustained the Poles, furnished them supplies, and loaned them money from the public funds. More than that, we furnished many millions of dollars in supplies and munitions with which Poland might repel the bolshevist invasion. I am deeply disappointed by the failure of Poland to appreciate the spirit in which American aid was given. America can not, and will not, be partner and companion with bloody-handed oppression of race and religion.

I have in mind also that Ukraine and Rumania are reaching out their hands to us for help. Already we have given substantial aid to Rumania. These people must be made to know that our country will not countenance rapine and murder; that we will not aid those who commit atrocities upon a harmless and inoffensive people.

The present "white" Government of Hungary owes its existence in part to aid and sympathy extended by our Government. It has repaid our humanitarianism by a "white terror" of its own. A recent dispatch states that 15,000 Jews have been gathered in Budapest and condemned to deportation. They are being persecuted on racial and religious grounds.

One bright spot in that part of eastern Europe, where Jews live in large numbers, is Lithuania, from which no reports of oppression and pogroms have come. Lithuania seems disposed to treat the Jews fairly, and although some of its largest cities are more than half Jewish, Lithuanians are not trying to come to America in overwhelming numbers. It speaks splendidly for the Lithuanian people and their spirit of democracy and humanity.

It is a pathetic fact, one of the deepest pathos, which should wring the heart of every humanitarian, that after all the Jews have suffered in the terrible war they must now abandon the countries for which they offered their lives and flee to a distant land to escape religious and sectarian persecution.

Of all the peoples of the world, no people, unless it may be the Armenians, have suffered so universally and so greatly because of the Great War as the Jews. Living, as they do, chiefly in eastern central Europe, in territories which were ravaged and overrun again and again by the contending forces, crushed under foot by every invader, their homes destroyed, their families outraged, their possessions swept away, their desperate situation to-day makes overwhelming claims upon the humanity and sympathy of all mankind.

They served in our own Army. They offered their lives in support of our flag. They served in the allied armies, in the armies of Germany and Hungary and Austria and Poland and Russia, and no man anywhere can point his finger at the Jews as a people and say that they shirked their patriotic duty. But now, having served and having done their best, having suffered alongside of the most unselfish, they find themselves persecuted and driven away from the countries they fought for; they must abandon their homes; they must come to a strange country; they must seek new hopes and new fortunes in a distant land. The situation must appeal to any heart that has any sympathy.

The Jews as we have them in America—and of course we have them from every country of Europe—furnish a valuable element in our people. I would not have them away. It is too late to say that the Jew can not be assimilated in America. We have the Jew in such numbers that there is no use in discussing that question any longer. He can be assimilated; he has been assimilated in the past, and he will be assimilated in the future. There are no people who come to this country who are so ready to lay aside their allegiance to foreign governments, to foreign flags and foreign institutions, and to embrace those of America.

We had a good deal of spy hunting during the recent war. We had charges of men being slackers and of being objectionable hyphenates. Men were charged with disloyalty, with loving some other country better than America. But nobody pointed to the Jews and said they were guilty. On the contrary, the Jew was always willing to say, "I am an American, I love America, I am willing to stand by the institutions of my adopted country." No Jews in America were partial to Hungary or to Germany or willing to betray our cause and our flag in behalf of any country that lay across the seas. Always they held our institutions and our interests above those of their native land.

And I say it is a peculiarly pathetic situation which is presented here just after the war, when we have had this splendid evidence of Jewish loyalty and patriotism as citizens. It is a peculiarly pathetic situation that here is presented a bill that is aimed at the Jews. I am not willing to have this bill aimed at the Jews. We should attach to it certain reasonable and proper amendments which would open the doors of this country as an asylum to people like the Jews and the Armenians, who are being oppressed at home on racial or religious grounds. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] use some of his time now?

Mr. SIEGEL. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 21 minutes remaining.

Mr. SABATH. That includes the seven minutes used before.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me four minutes of his time?

Mr. SABATH. How much time have I remaining, please?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. SABATH. I will yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have one minute, and that will give the gentleman from Wisconsin three minutes to close the debate.

Mr. SIEGEL. I will yield two minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That will be five minutes in which to close the debate.

Mr. SIEGEL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE], a member of the committee.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it is variously estimated that there are now in this country from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 idle laborers. It would seem to me that under the conditions which are developing in this country, and becoming more acute from day to day, it would be an unwise policy to leave unchecked the great influx of immigration now coming in our direction. It is frivolous for any man to say that wages have not been reduced when four cotton mills in a single week announce a working schedule of from one to two days per week. Banks are failing, factories are closing, and I say to you, gentlemen, that there is no more effective or fatal way to reduce wages than to announce the closing of factories and the cutting down of working schedules.

I take it, gentlemen, that the American Constitution was written for America, and in this bill you find the vindication of one of those great principles announced in this preamble, and that is the promotion of the general welfare. Gentlemen, I could not oppose this bill unless I were to assume an international benevolence of which I am not the possessor. I am not the kind of American who would surrender that which is most valuable to us to those who can give us nothing and who promise us nothing in return. We are to-day in the throes of the most terrible reaction and readjustment that this country has ever experienced in my memory, and I remember as a boy the readjustment subsequent to the Civil War. My distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] in his remarks was disposed to emphasize the defects of our Americanization work; but with all its defects, which are obvious, the opponents of this bill should remember that it proposes to minimize the aggravation of that condition which would result from the opening of our doors. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] presented, as an offset to the employment situation, that if it were true that wages were declining, if it were true that there is unemployment in the United States, that those coming to our shores might return; but the fact is that they would not return to the war-desolated and socially disorganized countries of Europe, but would be well content, and no doubt supremely happy, to work for a wage of one-half or less the American standard and account it a good living wage when measured by their lower standards of living, and these immigrants would displace our own laborers and inevitably degrade our high standards of life heretofore maintained by the American laborer.

Nor is it pertinent to this subject for gentlemen to assert that there is no surplus of farm labor, for gentlemen should know, if they are informed upon the subject, that the labor coming is not adapted to the farm. It seldom seeks agricultural employment. If it were from England, Ireland, France, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, or Sweden, it might and could be very usefully so employed. It may well be stated here at this time, for be it known that farm labor is skilled labor and it requires a generation to produce a successful farmer. He must know a thousand things that other men do not know and of which they have not even a remote knowledge. There is to-day no inducement for any man here in this country nor yet for anyone outside of this country to come here to engage in agriculture. In the brief time allotted me I can not recapitulate the hard conditions now pressing down upon and threatening the utter ruin of that great industry, which more than any other one thing furnished the sinews of war in the great world struggle between the systems of an autocratic power and free government. The farmer is not resentful. He is not revolutionary and he is not splenitive and rash. But the commercial injustice, the relative inequality of the prices of his products as compared with the prices of all that he buys and all the ultimate consumer buys, the evidence of which condition is apparent on every hand and which no one denies, may easily be the most serious problem confronting the American people and the American Congress.

Do gentlemen contend there is not inevitably a reduction in wages impending, an important reduction? Do gentlemen believe that the farmer who can not sell his product for 50 per cent, in many instances, of the price obtainable for the past three years will pay six, eight, and ten dollars per day for labor to harvest, thrash, and care for his crops? They must, perforce, reduce cost of production by reducing the cost of labor or they must reduce production and thus maintain prices, if it shall be possible to do so, or they must be themselves reduced to abject industrial ruin. The object of the predicted enormous influx of immigration presents a serious question from the social viewpoint. We know that there are here to-day a large number and millions more ready to come that are not readily assimilable. We can not for any reason afford to assume an attitude of indifference to a situation which threatens to vitiate our civilization.

Mr. SIEGEL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have been unable to ascertain from the gentlemen who are members of this important committee just what is the reason that impels them to report such a drastic piece of legislation. We are told that hovering in the distance there are millions of people seeking to come to the United States. If that be true, and if that be the reason, why is it necessary to say that none of them shall come, in order that the citizens of our country shall be protected? We have also been told that there are many undesirable classes in Europe who are seeking admission here. If that be the reason, is it necessary to shut out those who are desirable? Oh, I recall when the section of the country which is now so very ably represented by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration [Mr. JOHNSON of Washington] was not so particular about who should come or in what numbers should come the immigrants; when certain great cities on the western coast were anxious to outstrip their sister cities in population, and they invited immigrants and others to come there irrespective of their previous condition or their present fortunes.

I was a little astounded to hear the present occupant of the Chair [Mr. FESS], who presides over this committee with such grace and ability, announce yesterday the doctrine of organized labor, that not only should we cut out the cheaper-made goods of Europe from our markets but that we should absolutely prevent admission here of the laboring classes who might perhaps be willing to work in open shops at a lesser rate of wages than those who belong to organized labor and to the unions.

I believe we are acting upon insufficient knowledge; that we are attempting to take too radical a step. We are making too wide a departure from the policy heretofore enforced in this country. We are attempting to cure a slight disease, a slight blemish upon the tail of the dog, by cutting off his tail behind his ears.

Two years! Who expects that this unrest is going to continue in this country for two years? I listened with great interest to the distinguished industrial expert from the plains of Kansas [Mr. WHITE] when he cited the instance of one or two factories running four days a week. Why, my friends, there are nearly 30,000 factory employees idle in the city which I feebly struggle to represent, together with the rest of my congressional district in this House. Those factories are idle to-day. The looms are silent, and only two or three are working upon anywhere near a full schedule of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, that is not because of the fault of immigrants coming to our country. It is because of an economic situation. It is because under the existing schedules of the tariff we are unable to compete with foreign goods. But who shall say the time has come when we must say, "We have grown to 105,000,000 people, and we will rely upon those within our own borders for the further increase in our population"?

I agree with the committee that the time has come to give serious attention to the immigration question and to see that thousands and hundreds of thousands who after they get here turn out to be undesirables should be excluded; but I do not believe that the proper way to go about that is to shut up the gates and lock them fast for two years, as you do practically in this bill. In the first place, that period is altogether too long. Two years are a long time. In the second place, I believe that we can tighten up the existing immigration laws. We can give more funds to the department to enforce the law; and we can see to it, as it will be seen to within a few short weeks, that men are put in positions of trust in that department who will enforce the law according to its letter and spirit, a thing which has not been done during the past few years. But I feel that if you close these gates, lock them fast for two years, you are but postponing conditions, and that you are doing an injustice not only to many desirable immigrants who come here with a firm faith in our Government, with a firm intention to abide by its laws and become good citizens, but you are going to do an injustice to many of those now in this country who may desire others to come here and make a success in life as they have done. I trust that the committee will not seriously oppose an amendment to reduce the period within which all these immigrants practically should be excluded. [Applause.]

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH] two minutes.

Mr. SABATH. And I yield, Mr. Chairman, to the same gentleman three minutes.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, during the 10 years immediately preceding the outbreak of the European war the average number of foreigners coming to this country annually amounted to more than 1,000,000. Since the war, due to lack of transportation facilities, the average has not been so great, but we are now told that an average of from three to five thousand foreigners land daily in New York for admission to the United States, and this represents only about 80 per cent of the foreigners coming into this country through all places of entry. During the years of the immediate future the number of immigrants to this country will be limited only by the carrying capacity of the ships available for passage. In fact, we are reliably informed that 2,000,000 Germans are now anxious to get immediate passage to the United States, and it is said that the entire population of Poland, estimated at 3,000,000 persons, would take passage to the United States to-day if the opportunity were afforded.

Italy has sent large numbers of her population to this country during recent months and no doubt will send large numbers in the near future unless some action is taken by the United States. In fact, due to the remarkably unselfish and effective part that the United States took in the recent World War, our country has become the favored nation of the world, and the unfortunate, dissatisfied, or adventurous people of every nation on earth are now turning to this country, and unless this Congress takes some action staying the mighty tide of immigration that is flowing in our direction we are going to find millions of foreigners landing in this country as fast as it is possible for them to get here.

An inspection of the character and kind of immigrants coming to this country at this time convinces us that the great per cent of them are nonproducing and nonsupporting men and women. In fact, it is estimated that between 80 and 90 per cent of those reaching our shores in recent months have been consumers only, and without any visible means of support; and it goes without saying that such a mass of population as this will add to the number of unemployed in our country, already variously estimated at from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 men, and will further tax the capacity of the producers of this country.

Not only are a large majority of the immigrants nonsupporting, but from past experience we know that a large per cent of them, at least, are not in sympathy with America and American institutions, and a good majority make up the criminal class that is causing so much concern throughout the entire United States. Mr. William Shadduck, foreman of Kings County grand jury, New York, recently reported the conditions actually existing in his county, and in this connection made use of these significant paragraphs:

> A study of the record of our proceedings shows that all of the homicides and most of the graver, more desperate, and heinous crimes were committed by foreigners, who palpably have no understanding of the genesis or genius of American institutions. They not only have not been assimilated, but seemingly are unlikely under present conditions ever to be assimilable.
> The facts as to many of these crimes show the presence in this city of foreign colonies whose existence is a perpetual menace to the lives and property of our law-abiding and law-loving citizens. From the testimony of witnesses, some of whom were participants in these heinous crimes, it has been clearly revealed that interracial hatred, with their attendant feuds and vendettas, have been transplanted to this country. These feuds have been aggravated and perpetuated by the increase and extension of these foreign colonies.

If the grand juries of the other sections of the United States where foreign elements predominate were to make reports, I have not the slightest doubt but that we would find great unanimity in their reports corroborating the report of the grand jury of New York. As a matter of fact every President who has fallen at the hand of the assassin has gone down by the murderous blow of a man of foreign extraction.

Such facts as these have not escaped the American people and must not escape the Congress of the United States. If we fail at this critical hour to protect America and American institutions, we will fail in the discharge of our plain duty and obligation to the 105,000,000 people whom we represent. This is not a trivial or passing matter, but is one that reaches to the very foundation of our Government, and in my candid judgment threatens to disturb and disrupt our institutions built up at a cost of so much sacrifice by those who have given their lives that America might survive the test of time.

The time once was in the history of this country when America was looked upon as the home of the downtrodden people of all the nations of the earth, but we have arrived at a new and different era in our history; new conditions have arisen among the people of the world. Beyond the seas there are being taught new and strange doctrines. Socialism, bolshevism, and anarchy are playing unusual parts in the history and welfare of those nations, and are threatening the very foundation of their governments. Bolshevism and anarchy may draw their slimy trail across the map of Europe and write their destructive doctrines into the history of the nations over there, but never with my vote or influence will they make their unholy imprint upon America or American institutions. It is absolutely imperative that this Congress close the door at this time to all immigration except those whose entrance is provided for by the provisions of this bill, such as children and parents of citizens, travelers, scholars, and so forth, in order that we may have time to make sure that this country and its institutions shall not be impaired or destroyed by the foreign element.

We stand to-day, as never before in the history of the world, as the leaders in thought and democracy, and are emulated as never before by the other nations of the world, and if we are to make secure the place we have taken in history we must take time now in the mad rush for money and in the disturbed days of demobilization and reconstruction to save this country to Americans, American ideals, and American institutions, and to see that our standards and ideals are not poisoned or lowered by the incoming hoards from other countries of the world.

The district which I have the honor to represent believes in American institutions and ideals and their sentiments are shared by the millions of other American citizens who are willing to throw aside any idea of gain or commercialism for the good of America and for the welfare of American citizens, and I for one believe we should close the doors until we have had time to study the conditions of the world and the conditions of our own country and make secure our own future; we must close the doors until we have had time to Americanize those who have already cast their lot with us; we must close the doors until we have had time to seek out those foreigners who will not take Americanization and who will not become lawabiding and patriotic citizens, and drive them from our shores forever; we must close the doors until such time as the Congress of the United States may pass legislation that will safeguard our people and make sure that those who come to this country hereafter will become American citizens, loyal to the American flag, and will give up allegiance to any king or potentate or authority beyond the seas. I am an optimist, not a pessimist, but unless we deal with this question with a firm hand, it is my conviction that in the near future the loyal and patriotic citizens of the United States will be called on to assert themselves in a way not now dreamed of to save themselves from the poisonous influence of the foreign element that is now implanting itself in the very root and foundation of our country. We must suspend immigration entirely until this has been accomplished, and, in my judgment, it will take more than 2 years, probably 5 or 10, to accomplish this result.

The American youth in battles across the sea in the great world conflict, by his bravery and patriotism, added new luster to the glory of our flag; after the war had ended and during a celebration of the anniversary of armistice day, a number of those young men were shot down in cold blood for no other reason than that they wore the American uniform, and those boys fell victims of the anti-American and anti-Government movement that is being built up by a sentiment existing in this country opposed to America and American ideals. Such occurrences as those ought to bestir us to immediate action and cause us to make sure that we speedily put an end to the further coming in of such persons as will encourage those who would destroy our country. We all have, or should have, the same purpose, and that is to add to the glory, power, and influence of this Nation and to preserve uncontaminated the true American spirit of the fathers who built this Government and laid well the foundation of its institutions, and we can most effectively accomplish this result by closing the door to dangerous influences, and give us time to teach more Americanism and less Europeanism. [Applause.]

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if I understand this bill correctly it would apply to a case like this. There exists to-day in Ireland a very deplorable condition, as everyone will admit. What is going to be done there I do not know, but I apprehend that the British Government is likely to adopt more drastic methods than it has up to the present time. That condition might exist in any other country in the world. Under the terms of this bill, as I understand them, if an Irishman seeks to escape in the end from the drastic measures adopted by the British Government and succeeds in getting a vessel which will carry him from his own shores and lands him in America, he will be returned by us to the British Government to be tried and convicted of treason, perhaps, and perhaps to be hung.

I will not vote for any bill or law which proposes that a liberty-loving citizen anywhere in the world, attempting a revolution at home to secure what he believes is his liberty and his right, driven from his shores, lands on ours, shall be turned by our Government over to another Government to be hung. [Applause.]

The same situation may arise in Mexico. It is said that the Guatemalan Government has a man in confinement who was formerly president of that Republic.

If he should manage to escape from his confinement and find a vessel which would bring him to the United States, he would be returned by our Government to the Guatemalan Government and punished by it. I doubt whether the time has come when liberty-loving America should say that we will not permit, under any conditions, the entrance into the United States of people from abroad who are being persecuted or prosecuted, as you please, because they are attempting to obtain freedom at home.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman want a few minutes more?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I have expressed myself, I think.

Mr. SABATH. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman three or four minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not desire to trespass upon the time which other gentlemen want.

Mr. SABATH. I yield four minutes to the gentleman. He can make a much better speech than I can.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I would rather hear my colleague talk. I do not understand there is any escape from the proposition which I have made. If at the time of the revolutions in South America men had fled from their country to the United States seeking liberty, they would have been returned under this law, to be punished for treason. I have always been educated to believe in the love of liberty and that this is a liberty-loving country, the light of which shines over the world. Yet it is proposed to say here to people throughout the world, "You submit to the tyranny of the Government under which you live, or, if you escape to us, we will return you to that tyranny." Tyranny exists in many countries of the world, notwithstanding the recent war and our efforts to bring universal peace. There is trouble and there will continue to be trouble in many of these countries. How far we ought to go in restricting immigration I do not undertake to say. For many years I voted against the immigration bills in the House, but finally voted for the last one, because we were told that under the terms of that bill, if enacted into law, our Government would be able after the war to keep out the horde of immigrants that might seek our shores. Whether it is because of lack of enforcement of the law that this is not done I do not undertake to say. I have no doubt that everywhere people are looking to the United States as the land of liberty and safety and home. I am not willing to say that if they seek to establish good government at home by revolution that we shall say, "Suffer; you can not enter our doors." [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] stated that we are in the throes of a tremendous reaction. He spoke the truth, but I do not agree with his conclusion, that the situation, grave as it may be, justifies the alarm that is manifested in this House. We are, it is true, in the throes of a tremendous reaction, but I regret to say that the reaction shows a tendency to fall back into pure materialism and selfishness. We seem to be going back upon all the noble traditions of our country. The lessons of the war are lost and we seem to have borrowed from Europe, and even from Asia, the very worst traits of narrowness and provincialism.

Let us get together on a fair and square basis. Let us reduce the argument to a common denominator. There is no one here, so far as I am able to discern, who, standing in opposition to this measure, has ventured to suggest that he was opposed to the exclusion of the unfit and undesirable. I will go further than any advocate of this measure and say that migration unchecked and uncontrolled may prove as great an evil as an armed invasion. It seems to me that it is not playing fair to suggest that the opponents of this bill desire to open our doors for the free and unrestrained access of foreign hordes. We do not take this position. Our attitude, at least my attitude, is rather to check the stream of migration by deliberate and well-thought-out safeguards; to control its course and regulate its stream in accordance with the industrial needs of our Nation and our ability to assimiliate. The aggregration of strange peoples in our large centers of population is undoubtedly a hardship to themselves and a menace to our traditions and to our institutions. As a rule, they do not think in the same terms as the population among which they are thrown, and the inevitable result is the formation of colonies where the traditions, bad as well as good, of the land of their origin are perpetuated.

As distance is said to "lend enchantment to the view," and as "absence makes the heart grow fonder," it is common knowledge that these colonies of the foreign born cherish an exaggerated fondness for the land of their birth, often to the detriment of American interests. They forget the hardships of their earlier environment, the poverty and misery, the tyranny and persecution, and at times display an utter lack of appreciation of the opportunities and advantages that they have enjoyed under the American flag. Whenever the attitude of their adopted country does not seem to harmonize with the apparent interests of their fatherland and the question, by any chance, is projected into the political arena, they steer their course not by the measure of benefit to accrue to this country but by its effect upon the land of their birth. The majority of this House, whose committee is responsible for this measure, have profited by this disposition of the foreign born in the recent election, and the wonder is that they should so soon after their phenominal victory kick over the ladder on which they climbed to power.

I am not at all resentful at the attitude taken by the foreign born. I hold that the basic principles which governed our ancestors and whose generous spirit of toleration and humanity made this country the haven of the oppressed of the world are of deeper import than any argument predicated either upon expediency or resentment. It may be that the threat of immigration is as grave as the majority would seem to indicate. It may be that the character and condition of the hordes who are knocking at our doors for admission are as debased as represented. That, however, I seriously question. But I am thinking it will be interesting to note the reaction when the friends and the relatives of the races criticized in the majority report of Congress come to reflect upon the subject.

For instance, in Appendix A of the report, on page 9, we find an expression of views as to the character and undesirability of the proposed immigrants from the different lands and races:

AUSTRIA.

Vienna: Sixty per cent of the present emigrants are of the Jewish race, 20 per cent of the German race, and 20 per cent of other races. The favorite occupation of these emigrants is merchant or clerk.

GERMANY.

Berlin: It is estimated that 2,000,000 Germans desire to emigrate to the United States if passport restrictions are removed.

The Germans who proceed to the United States are not of the most desirable class, due to the fact that military service is at present, in most cases, an absolute bar.

ITALY.

Catania: Practically all the emigrants from this district are of the peasant class. For the most part they are small in stature and of a low order of intelligence.

NETHERLANDS.

Rotterdam: The great mass of aliens passing through Rotterdam at the present time are Russian Poles or Polish Jews of the usual ghetto type. Most of them are more or less directly and frankly getting out of Poland to avoid war conditions. They are filthy, un-American, and often dangerous in their habits.

POLAND.

Warsaw: Concerning the general charteristics of aliens emigrating to the United States from Poland and the occupation or trade followed by them reports indicate such to be substantially as follows:

(a) Physically deficient:

(1) Wasted by disease and lack of food supplies.

(2) Reduced to an unprecedented state of life during the period of the war, as the result of oppression and want.

(3) Present existence in squalor and filth.

(b) Mentally deficient:

(1) Illy educated, if not illiterate, and too frequently with minds so stultified as to admit of little betterment.

(2) Abnormally twisted because of (a) reaction from war strain, (b) shock of revolutionary disorders, (c) the dullness and stultification resulting from past years of oppression and abuse.

(c) Economically undesirable:

* * * * * * *

Report of April 6: Approximately 100,000 persons are desirous of immediately leaving Poland for the purpose of coming to the United States. Ninety-five per cent of these persons are of the very lowest classes of the country and are considered to be thoroughly undesirable. Many of these persons have trachoma and other quarantinable diseases and come from typhus-infected areas. They are filthy and ignorant and the majority are verminous.

Report of May 15: Typhus conditions have shown little, if any, improvement. Some organizations interested in sending certain classes of Polish citizens to the United States are objecting to quarantine restrictions and are endeavoring to avoid regulations through transshipment through other countries. Some emigrants are objecting to certain sanitary provisions, such as the removal of beards and clipping hair.

ROUMANIA.

Bucharest: Possibly 10 per cent of applicants are Roumanians and are from Transylvania or the old Kingdom. The remainder are Jews, mostly from Bessarabia and Bukovina; practically all, except women and children, being petty merchants or salesmen.

* * * * * * *

This is unquestionably a serious arraignment; but if it is examined closely it will be found that there is hardly a single disability mentioned that is not amply guarded against in the existing immigration law. We can exclude the criminal, the mentally defective, the unclean, and the unhealthy under the laws as they stand. Why is it necessary to enact further laws or to close the doors completely? It has been vaguely suggested during the course of this debate that racial and religious intolerance has been permitted to enter into the question and may perhaps have been the controlling factor. The emphasis laid upon the Jewish question in the above extracts lends some color to the opinion.

I believe in the regulation of immigration. That would be wholesome and salutary. We could easily regulate the stream by directing our consuls abroad to only approve the passports of such numbers of immigrants as there is a possibility of employing in useful industry. We could make it a condition precedent to their immigration. Such a course would be absolutely defensible. It would preclude the charge of intolerance and put all nations and races on the same basis. It would solve the Japanese question and meet the objections of the Pacific coast States against the importation of Japanese labor. Japan could not take any offense and that troublesome question would be settled once and for all time.

Under the proposed plan of two years' absolute exclusion we would offend all nations and races and bring upon ourselves the charge of being the modern hermit nation. Not only that, but we block our own economic progress. We deny ourselves the benefit of the refreshing and healthy flow of labor into channels where it is most needed. To-day household help is at a premium in our cities, and I have often listened to the complaint here in this House by the Members representing farming constituencies that farm help is not obtainable. Even now these Members are clamoring to have exceptions added to the measure permitting them to import Mexican and Canadian help at certain seasons of the year. Such a course is selfish and economically unsound. It invites undesirable foreigners into our land to earn money that had better be earned by our own population and then permits their return to their home lands to spend their earnings. It would be much better, in my estimation, to make the help needs of the agricultural sections of our country known in the great city sections and invite the vast army of unemployed into the fields. Such a course would help to settle the sparsely populated States and distribute our population equitably.

The last census of the United States shows that 51 per cent of our inhabitants are centered in cities and towns. We can not exist long as a nation if this movement is permitted to continue and grow. The Immigration Committee had a great problem on its hands, but they took the wrong course in trying to settle it by a scheme of absolute exclusion. Their solution is the lazy man's "open sesame." Their solution is a confession of weakness. If they had proposed a plan of intelligent regulation, they would have had the earnest support and cooperation of every man in this House.

In settling the immigration question we should ever keep in mind that the influx of a good, healthy stream of immigrants is always desirable and should be encouraged. It will always prove a great public benefit, if it is only directed into zones where it can be employed advantageously, without creating unreasonable competition with American labor. The mixture of blood in the United States has proven to be the salvation of our Nation. We hear men boast of the purity—by which they mean the unmixed origin—of their racial blood. It is nothing to boast of. Inbreeding is always the source of racial deterioration. I commend to your attention the book written by a friend of mine, an able newspaper man, who often sits in this gallery.

I refer to "America's To-morrow," by Snell Smith. In that book he reviews the rise and fall of nations and has evolved the law that a transfusion of the blood of several stocks throughout a period of 300 years produces an entirely new people, which at the maximum of strength, caused by the admixture, conquers its rivals, expands into empire, and does its work in the world. Speaking of the American people, he says that "strengthened and developed though they may be physically, by centuries of hardship and struggle, their brawn and quickness flow solely from an amalgamation of the blood of the peoples of many lands into one."

I know that this theory is double-edged in its conclusion; but while indicating caution in the character of the admixture it absolutely squelches the argument that the truest perfection in our national character may be attained without any admixture whatever. In its final analysis it justifies the conclusion that the founders of our Republic were correct in the establishment of the principle of toleration and humanity in laying the foundations of our national structure, whereby they have truly made this great country of ours the land of the oppressed and the home of the free. The measure before us is a confession of weakness. The committee fly in the face of our entire history. They have been laboring for 22 months, and now their only solution is a panicky appeal to close the doors for two years. I agree with them that it is proper to exclude the unfit and undesirable. By all means let us do it, but you can do that by expanding the present law. You can do it by regulation. It is not necessary to adopt a plan of exclusion which is so utterly repulsive to all of the noble traditions upon which this country was founded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. GRIFFIN to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I hope it is not necessary for me to state to you that I have the interest of my country at heart and that it is not my intention to do anything that would operate injuriously to the welfare of our Nation. I wish to also assure you that I am just as serious as any Member of this House in the desire to keep out every undesirable. The chairman of the Immigration Committee, I am sure, will bear me out when I say that I have at all times cooperated with the committee in preparing, aiding, and advocating legislation that would make it possible not only to eliminate the immigration of the undesirables, but also to strengthen our deportation law. The gentlemen from Minnesota, Kentucky, and Texas charge that the present immigration is undesirable and that the sections of this country to which this immigration goes are suffering from unemployment and lack of housing facilities.

Mr. Chairman, the charges that are being made against the present-day immigration are by gentlemen who come from sections who receive no immigration and who are not in position to know as much about that question as those who come from and live in the cities and in the States that absorb most of the present-day immigration. Is it not singular that up to this moment not a single gentleman coming from our great cities or our great States who, I am sure, are better acquainted with the immigration question than those from the rural districts, has said a word in behalf of this legislation; but, on the contrary, like myself, feel it is hasty, uncalled for, unnecessary, and unjustified.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman realizes that those men who came then to be American citizens and that those who come here now do not intend to stay her, and do not stay here, but run away with their money and go back to Europe.

Mr. SABATH. That is not the truth.

Mr. FOCHT. Give me time and I will prove it.

Mr. SABATH. I will give the gentleman all of the time he wants some day.

Mr. FOCHT. All right; give me the time and I will be glad to do it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for misstatements; I yielded for a question; and I say to the gentleman that anyone who makes that statement is mistaken, because the people coming to-day are coming for the same purpose as those who came 100 years ago. I have heard statements and insinuations like the gentleman has made from other gentlemen, but they could never prove their assertions. Mr. Chairman, a few years before the war the gentleman and others questioned the loyalty of those people who were coming then, and I am proud to say that those very people demonstrated that they were as loyal and as patriotic as any.

They enlisted and fought side by side with the American born and in a way that won for them praise and admiration of all who were in position to see and hear of their many heroic deeds.

Mr. Chairman, the arguments in favor of this bill and the charges that are being made were made over 100 years ago. The restrictionists of those days classed the people coming to this country then as undesirable and favored their exclusion. The same arguments were made as to the tendency of the immigrants to congest in the cities, and it was maintained that the effect of immigration was to reduce wages and lower the standard of living.

The report of the Immigration Commission quotes the following from Nile's Register of 1817:

> The immigrant should press into the interior. In the present state of the times we seem too thick on the maritime frontier already.

Consider that statement carefully, gentlemen, for you must remember that it was made when the immigration did not reach 5,000 a year.

Again, in the second annual report of the managers of the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism in New York City, 1819, we find the following:

> As to the emigrants from foreign countries, the managers are compelled to speak of them in the language of astonishment and apprehension. Through this inlet pauperism threatens us with the most overwhelming consequences.

In the year following this report only 8,385 immigrants came to this country, and yet we find these men speaking of this immigration in language of "astonishment and apprehension."

It would seem, as years went by, that no difficulty had been experienced in the assimilation of these immigrants that had been the cause of such great apprehension, and therefore they were immediately classed as "desirables," whereas those seeking admission a few years later were still regarded as a menace. In a paper entitled "Imminent dangers to the institutions of the United States of America through foreign immigration," and so forth, published in 1835, the author compares the immigration of earlier years with that of his day, and says:

> Then we were few, feeble, and scattered. Now we are numerous, strong, and concentrated. Then our accessions of immigration were real accessions of strength from the ranks of the learned and of the good, from enlightened mechanic and artisan and intelligent husbandman. Now immigration is the accession of weakness, from the ignorant victims of the priest-ridden slaves of Ireland and Germany or the outcast tenants of the poorhouses and prisons of Europe.

Remember these are the sentiments expressed in the year 1835, when there were less than 50,000 people admitted.

At a meeting of the delegates of the Native American National Convention, held in Philadelphia on July 4, 1845, an address was delivered in which occurred the following statement:

> It is an incontrovertible truth that the civil institutions of the United States of America have been seriously affected, and that they now stand in imminent peril from the rapid and enormous increase in the body of residents of foreign birth imbued with foreign feelings and of an ignorant and immoral character.
> The almshouses of Europe are emptied upon our coast, and this by our own invitation, not casually or to a trivial extent, but systematically and upon a constantly increasing scale.

In 1845, the year this address was delivered, some 114,000 immigrants came to make this country their future home.

All of the quotations I have used refer to a class of immigrants which to-day even the most rabid restrictionists refer to as "desirable."

The birth of the Republic and the inception of the agitation for the exclusion of immigrants were coeval. The demand has been insistent, unreasonable, and unsubsiding. Born of prejudice, this desire to shut out foreigners grew up with eyes closed to the light, blindly ignoring all knowledge that would demonstrate the folly of its reasoning.

In the earlier days its advocates stubbornly refused to read with unprejudiced eyes a single page of the country's history upon which was chronicled a patriotic deed or which recited an achievement of any character that was the contribution of the class marked for their disfavor. Impelled by motives that were completely out of harmony with the fundamental principles of the Republic, this element never gave thought nor consideration to the economic effect of exclusion or restriction of immigration, but persisted with a zeal that bordered upon the fanatical in its attempts to foist upon the country views that were narrow and ill advised. Statesmen of every decade of our national life have been confronted with this question, but to their everlasting credit those clothed with power and exercising influence in shaping legislation have turned deaf ears to the prayers and threats of the exclusionists and continued the liberal policy adopted by their forefathers.

Mr. Chairman, some of the supporters of this bill have maintained that our country is becoming too thickly populated, that we already have within our borders nearly all the people we can accommodate, and that for this reason it is imperative that immigration be restricted. This statement, like so many others emanating from the opponents of immigration, is misleading. The fact is that in 1910, according to the Bureau of the Census, the density of population of the United States, or, in other words, the average number of people per square mile throughout the United States, was only 30.9. Contrast this average density with that of some of the individual States, such as Illinois, with a density of 100.6; Ohio, with a density of 117; Maryland, with a density of 130.3; Pennsylvania, with a density of 171; Connecticut, with a density of 281.3; and Massachusetts, with a density of 418.8. They talk of this country being overcrowded. Why, 125 years ago the density of population of Maryland was greater than that of the United States to-day.

These restrictionists talk about our country becoming too thickly settled. Let us consider some of the European countries. In Germany we find there are approximately 312 people to every square mile; in Italy, 315; and in the United Kingdom, 374. Just think, gentlemen, with a population of only 300 to the square mile this country could support over 900,000,000. Is it not the height of absurdity to claim that immigration should be restricted because we have no room for these people?

Mr. Chairman, it also has been stated by those favoring the passage of this measure that the immigrants all flock to the large cities, there to increase the present congestion. This is not true. It may be a fact that these immigrants go, first, to the cities, but their residence there is only temporary. Gentlemen, I state without fear of contradiction, that there is nothing closer to the heart of the immigrant than his desire to become possessed of a piece of land which he can call his own, and he does this at his first opportunity. Hundreds—yes, thousands—of these people are leaving the cities each year and settling on farms. The statistics will show that a large percentage of the people residing in the rural districts of the northern, western, and northwestern sections of our country are of foreign birth or foreign parentage.

I have before me figures taken from a report of the Bureau of the Census which shows that in 1910 in the States of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania 31 per cent of the rural population was of foreign birth or foreign parentage; in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin 32 per cent was of foreign birth or foreign parentage; in Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas 40 per cent of the people residing in the rural districts were of foreign birth or foreign parentage; in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, and Nevada we find the percentage the same—40 per cent of the rural population is foreign born or of foreign parentage; and, lastly, in the States on the Pacific coast—Washington, Oregon, and California—we find that over 42 per cent of the people who are making their homes on the farms are of foreign birth or of foreign parentage.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I ask you if this is not proof that the immigrants do go on the farm; that they do not all remain in the larger cities?

For the further edification of the gentlemen who are of the opinion that this influx of immigrants is harmful to our country, I wish to read some additional statistics taken from a report of the Director of the Census, which show that in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin 75 per cent of the farm land is improved, whereas in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida but 46.7 per cent is improved. In the States of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas 70.6 per cent of the farm land is improved, as contrasted with 53.9 per cent in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi.

Mr. Chairman, from the hasty statements made by a number of gentlemen it would appear that there is no law against immigration and that all aliens can come in without restraint, regulation, or examination. Our present laws are strict enough in every respect. We now exclude idiots, imbeciles, feebleminded persons, epileptics, insane persons, paupers, persons likely to become public charges, professional beggars, persons afflicted with tuberculosis or a loathsome or contagious disease, persons mentally or physically defective, persons who have been convicted of a crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, anarchists, prostitutes, contract laborers, assisted aliens, and all who are admitted must have passports viséed by our consuls in the respective countries from which they come.

Mr. Chairman, it is to be regretted that so many Members of this House should be misled by false statements relative to the tremendous number of immigrants coming to the United States. The only justification for such statements is due to wild, unreliable articles from men who willfully double and in some cases quadruple the number of immigrants that are coming. I regret that even the committee, due to the haste in preparing their report, should have fallen a prey to these erroneous, yes, false and misleading, articles. These statements and articles emanate from sources whose only aim is to mislead, prejudice, and alarm the American people. I have in my hands a report from the Secretary of Labor and of the Commissioner General of Immigration, which is marked "confidential," and which is not to be released until the 16th of this month. This report shows that for the fiscal year 1919 the total immigration to the United States was 237,000, while the number of aliens who departed was 216,000, an increase only of 20,790. The same report for the fiscal year 1920, which ended June 30, 1920, shows that the total immigration amounted to 621,000 and that 428,000 departed, a total increase in the fiscal year 1920 of 193,000, and the majority of these are the wives and children of our own citizens and of those who have filed their declaration of intention of becoming American citizens.

These gentlemen are endeavoring to make the country believe that within the last few months millions of immigrants have come to our shores. I hope that the membership of this House will not rely upon the willful misstatements and articles of professional propagandists and paid lobbyists, but will investigate carefully all statements coming to them from such sources.

From the same sources come wild statements of the great unemployment which they variously estimate from two to four millions. These statements are just as unfair as those in regard to the millions of incoming immigrants. I maintain, though this is the slackest and dullest time in the year and that, due to the financial depression created by certain interests, there has been a lull in some of our industries and some lay offs of employees, but in a majority of cases it will be found that it has been done not because there is not enough work on hand but for the purpose of forcing down wages. It has been noticed in many instances within the past 10 days or two weeks that where lay offs have occurred the men have been reengaged wherever possible at a lower scale of wages.

During the months of December, January, and February we always find some people unemployed. This is due to the fact that many industries are at a standstill in the winter months, and to the further fact that thousands of farm employees, having no work on the farms, come to the large centers to seek employment during that period. But even with the influx from the farms and with the lay offs from some of the industries, I find in every newspaper of the large cities that there are three times as many advertisements for help as there are advertisements for situations wanted. Even if people are out of employment in certain sections of our country, I am satisfied that within three months there will be a greater shortage of labor than has been experienced during the summer of 1919 and 1920.

In the current number of the American Federationist Mr. Gompers, the veteran head of the American Federation of Labor, says:

> The world needs production. The employers have been saying so for months. They began with the armistice and continued until a few days ago. Now they have stopped saying so.
>
> The reason is not that the world's needs have been satisfied. The reason is twofold: Inflation is coming out of the business structure, and in the process employers see what they believe to be an opportunity to cut wages, though there has been no inflation in wages; secondly, the more unscrupulous employers believe that by laying off workmen with an announcement of curtailment necessities, the same or other workmen can be hired within a brief time at a sufficient wage reduction to make the temporary reduction justifiable from a profit point of view.

The following extract of a communication to me from the National Federation of Construction Industries speaks for itself:

> It is evident that a proportional relationship exists between our national requirements for skilled labor and unskilled labor, over which we have no control except in so far as our inventive genius may devise tools of production by which the effort of labor is made more effective. Experience has shown that the law of supply and demand applies in employment the same as in the material market. If the supply of unskilled labor in the United States begins to exceed its proportional relationship to skilled labor, immigration automatically adjusts itself because of the decreased demand for unskilled labor. Any attempt artificially to regulate the fundamental law of supply and demand in the labor market through the restriction or stoppage of immigration can result only in national disaster; for it will be seen that, if immigration were to be stopped, the necessary proportion which must exist between skilled and unskilled labor, without which industry can not survive, could be maintained only by a curtailment of production to permit demotion of labor into unskilled capacities in sufficient numbers to restore the balance which must be maintained between skilled and unskilled labor. The direct result of such curtailment of industry would be disastrous to our national welfare for the reason that the law of supply and demand as it relates to commodities would operate to obtain a higher price level because of decreased production.

Mr. Chairman, in the interest of those who are so unduly alarmed as to the conditions and prosperity of our Nation, I have hastily prepared a statement which, if closely studied by these alarmists, will allay their fears as to the future and will compel them to wonder at the great strides our Nation has made in the last 50 years. It shows that though our population has increased threefold our wealth has increased sixfold, our exports twentyfold, and that the value of farm products has increased nearly tenfold. I regret that I have not been in position to secure the complete statistics, but I insert those which I have been able to secure:

Mr. Chairman, for several days I have been striving to ascertain the source of the misinformation that has been used in arguments in behalf of this measure, and not until to-day have I been able to find that they are based principally upon an article written a few days before the election by Frederick Boyd Stevenson. It purports to be an interview with Commissioner Wallis, who, the writer states, has revolutionized Ellis Island. It undoubtedly is from this article that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and the other members of the committee who are advocating this bill secured their inspiration and information. I do not desire to make any charges or even insinuations as to why the interview was given or printed two days before the election, but I do charge that the gentlemen in using some of the guess figures of the contemplated or expected immigration and some paragraphs bearing on the class of immigrants were unfair not only to this House and the country but also to the commissioner. I make this statement because they have only used the most prejudicial statements and figures, ignoring completely whatever may have been stated in explanation.

The writer of the article states that of the 430,000 immigrants, 173,000 have no occupation, but he also states that 182,000 were women and children. Does he expect that all the women and children should have an occupation? He also lays great stress on the point that among these 430,000 immigrants an old woman 70 years of age came to a son, who had a wife and five children, and that should the son die, the five children, who no doubt were born in this country, and the wife and mother would become dependent upon charity. He does not know whether the son had property of his own, or whether the children may be of an age to earn their own living. In response to that statement I can not help calling attention to the fact that neither the commissioner nor the writer can point out many cases of those who become charges or dependent upon charity, and he will not find a single one of the Jewish race in a public charitable institution.

The gentlemen who have favored the passage of the bill and who have quoted from this article so frequently have failed to quote the commissioner when he stated that he is not a believer in the illiteracy test, and that a man may not know one letter from another but still make an honest and useful citizen. I wonder why they have not read that paragraph?

For the purpose of showing how unfair some of the advocates of this legislation have been by selecting a few short paragraphs out of this lengthy statement, I insert a greater portion of that article, which was originally published by the Brooklyn Eagle and which has been reproduced and reprinted and sent broadcast by the restrictionists bureau:

The greatest problem in America to-day is immigration.

Under the new régime at Ellis Island, where 90 per cent of the immigrants to this country arrive, important physical, mental, and moral changes have taken place and are still taking place. Under a former régime physical, mental, and moral conditions were a disgrace, an abomination, and a menace. Filth has given place to cleanliness, brutality has given place to kindness, and degradation has given place to uplift.

The immigrant who comes to Ellis Island to-day is treated as a human being. The changes to-day are due to the splendid administration of Frederick A. Wallis, the present commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island. Great as these changes are, important as they are in influencing the lives and actions of the future Americans, composing as they do part of the solution of the overtowering problem that must be solved, there is another part of the problem that outranks them and reaches far above them. That part concerns the whole future of the United States of America. The beginning and the end of that major part of the problem is embodied in the questions:

What benefit will the United States receive by the admission of aliens to this country?

What detriment will accrue to the United States by the unrestricted admission of aliens to this country?

On the answers to these two questions hang the rise or the fall of a mighty nation.

For three hours the other day I talked with Commissioner Wallis on immigration. He explained to me the work he has done in the five months in which he has been in control. He told me of the efforts he has been making to create the impression in the newcomers to this land of the free and this home of the brave that it is a land of the free and a home of the brave in fact and deed as well as in song and story. He told me of the impressions he has sought to convey to the frightened and dazed foreigners that America welcomes them here if they come with the spirit of America in their hearts.

"But," said Mr. Wallis, as the climax to our talk, "if among 1,000 aliens seeking entrance to America we suspect that there is even one who is plotting against America I would rather refuse admittance to the 999 worthy than to take the chance of admitting the unworthy one. So long as I am in charge here my slogan shall be:

"'When in doubt, deport!'"

There is room in the United States for all who are sincere. There is room here for all who can be helpful to the country; for all who want to grow up with and become part of the United States.

There is not room here for anyone who promises to be a charge upon the United States or a burden to the people. There is not room here for anyone who is not in full accord with the Constitution of the United States and who does not possess the spirit which created the Constitution.

Now, to what extent are the people who are coming to this country to-day imbued with the qualifications that will make them desirable citizens and to what extent are they imbued with the qualifications that will make them undesirable citizens?

First of all, what sort of people do the United States need at the present time?

We need workmen.

We need mechanics—carpenters, masons, plumbers, tinsmiths, engineers—skilled workmen of all kinds.

We need day laborers—men to build railroads, roads, dig ditches.

We need miners to get the coal out of the mines.

We need men to run the street railroads—conductors and motormen.

We need farmers to plow the millions of unutilized lands, to sow the harvests, and to gather the harvests now rotting on the fields while millions are suffering for the want of food.

We need servant girls—millions of them—women and girls who are ready to go into good homes and get the benefits of the families in those homes, and do honest work and not expect to be the "lady of the house."

We need cooks and waiters.

We need laundry women and laundry men.

We need drivers for milk wagons and grocery wagons and delivery wagons.

We need help in our factories and shops and in our big industrial plants.

We need all sorts of help.

We do not need men and women whose first thought upon coming to this country is how much they can squeeze out of the country in wages and how little they can give in help.

We do not need men and women whose first thought upon learning conditions here is to mount soapboxes and public school rostrums and try to convince those who have been contented with those conditions that the conditions are all wrong.

These are a few of the men and the women whom we want and whom we don't want.

What kind are we getting?

It is gratifying, Mr. Chairman, however, to find once in a great while a member of the judiciary of our country taking an interest in the immigration affairs of the Nation, and in this connection I wish to insert an editorial appearing in the Chicago Daily News of December 4 dealing with an address of Judge Evan A. Evans, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, delivered at Indianapolis, which shows that that able jurist has studied the question from an honest, unbiased standpoint, and that he has been able to discern the far-reaching effect upon our country should immigration be stopped. His suggestions of improvements in dealing with the immigrants and the means we should employ to assist them to more quickly become good and useful citizens of our great Nation in a great measure meet my views and should receive the attention and study of the membership of this House. I regret that time will not permit me to read the editorial, but with the permission of the House, I shall insert it in the RECORD:

JUDGE EVANS ON IMMIGRATION.

In the comparatively short and informal address which Judge Evan A. Evans, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, delivered at Indianapolis and which was published in the Daily News of yesterday were contained many valuable and thoroughly practical suggestions to Members of Congress and students generally of the twin questions discussed, namely, immigration and naturalization. In fact, a whole legislative program is outlined in Judge Evans's observations, which comprise six definite proposals.

Judge Evans believes in keeping the doors open to deserving foreigners, but he advocates the following notable improvements in our methods of dealing with immigrants:

More careful investigation of the qualifications of applicants for admission; provision for a five-year probation period for all admitted immigrants, they during this period to be required to learn the English language, under penalty of deportation for failure to do so; legislation expressly stipulating that naturalization is a privilege contingent upon good behavior, and that the commission of any one of certain designated offenses be made legal ground for the revocation of the privilege; a substantial increase in the naturalization fee, but not for the benefit of the Treasury.

There should be a national fund, Judge Evans asserts, for the sole purpose of assisting the newcomer to America from the day of his admission until he is settled and able to support himself in comfort. He should be protected from oppression and at the same time prevented from aggravating such evils as unemployment and urban congestion through ignorance or inertia. He should be directed to places that need workers and have undeveloped resources.

America is for Americans, Judge Evans well says, in the broad enlightened sense that only those who wish to become citizens and useful, honest members of the great community should be welcomed and permitted to stay. Those who do not value American institutions and are not appreciative of American advantages have no possible claim on the hospitality of the Nation. But there is still ample room for thrifty, upright, industrious, well-intentioned foreigners who desire to contribute to the welfare of the country while taking legitimate advantage of its exceptional opportunities.

As to the deplorable conditions under which the immigrants are being brought here, permit me to call your attention to the fact that for years I have advocated and insisted on legislation that would eliminate the hardships to which the steerage passengers are subjected, insisting that they should be accorded more humane treatment not only while aboard ship but also on arrival at our ports. The delays to which these immigrants have been subjected at Ellis Island also are to be regretted and conditions there should be immediately improved. If the Congress had appropriated a sufficient sum of money to enlarge the medical force as well as the force of inspectors these conditions would not exist. I hope that at least a portion of the tremendous sum which is collected from these immigrants by the imposition of the head tax will be utilized to improve the conditions at Ellis Island, and that provision will be made for a force that will be sufficient to handle this temporary increased immigration. I hope that these gentlemen who have described the conditions will aid me in securing the appropriation and also the enforcement of the provisions of our laws for the protection of steerage passengers.

In conclusion, I will suggest that some of these gentlemen from the Southern States who so strongly favor shutting the doors of immigration for 10, 20, or a longer period of years should read the evidence given by the cotton growers and sugar-beet growers and others when they appeared before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization at the last session of Congress, appealing for the suspension of the immigration laws to enable them to secure labor to pick the thousands of acres of cotton and to harvest the sugar-beet fields, which they claimed they could not do unless a permit was granted to import illiterate Mexican laborers. I also suggest that they read the article which appeared in the Washington Star on December 9, which I also take the privilege of inserting in the RECORD.

FIGHT IMMIGRATION BAN—SOUTHERN BUSINESS INTERESTS TO OPPOSE ACTION BY CONGRESS.

NEW ORLEANS, December 8.

The general immigration committee, which was recently formed by representatives of various interests in Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi, met here to plan a vigorous fight on proposed congressional legislation restricting or barring immigration into the United States for the next few years.

Resolutions were adopted urging the board of directors of the New Orleans Association of Commerce to take prompt action in opposing the Johnson bill, which proposes to stop all immigration for two years. The committee also asked the board to take action in connection with any other bill which may at any time be introduced in Congress that will in any way limit or restrict the amount of farm labor that might be available for this country.

I also will read from the booklet just issued by the Federal Trade Information Service the following:

The most valuable asset any country has is its people; indeed, without population no country has any value. The changes which take place with the advance of years in the distribution, character, and occupation of a country's inhabitants properly may be considered the most important changes, of any nature whatsoever, which enter into national experience.

The growing supremacy of the United States among the nations of the world has resulted from the ever-changing distribution of its population. Had the American people remained through the decades within a few restricted areas near the seaboard, the vast natural resources of the land would not have been brought forward to serve, not only our own people but the whole world.

Mr. Chairman, were it not for the fact that I do not desire to abuse the privilege granted me I could insert hundreds upon hundreds of other letters, resolutions, and articles that have come to me within the last few days, protesting against the enactment of this pending legislation, but I have not heretofore and shall not now abuse the privilege. I also realize that it matters not what additional arguments, facts, and proofs I might submit it will have no possible effect upon the prejudiced membership of this House. As stated before, I feel that the Senate will not be carried away by this hysteria and pass the bill in its present form, but if that body should fall a prey to the propaganda now being carried on for this bill, I feel that President Wilson, who history will accredit as the greatest Executive, statesman, and humanitarian, will, without doubt, refuse to approve such legislation.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have five minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will yield that five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA].

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Chairman, there are some who oppose the pending measure because they do not believe that the existing conditions warrant the temporary restriction of immigration at the present time; it is, however, very evident that the country is becoming alarmed by both the growing avalanche of immigrants and the increasing unemployment at home.

There are others who, discounting the abnormal world conditions of to-day, believe that immigration should at all times be free and unrestricted. This, I believe, is but enunciating a doctrine to which present-day America can not afford to subscribe.

I believe that a sound national protective policy demands that immigration to this country should at all times be regulated and controlled, based on the principle that changing conditions require appropriate legislative adjustments. The world to-day is facing unparalleled conditions. The tremendous upheaval and reconstruction abroad and the economic and social readjustment at home demand not only amendments and changes in the immigration law, but necessitate efficient new legislation.

I subscribe to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said about America being a harbor of refuge, but I also believe that the first law of nations, as of individuals, is the law of self-protection. [Applause.] One of the essential rights inherent in sovereignty and independence of nations is that of self-preservation. To temporarily restrict immigration for a reasonable length of time as a precautionary measure is the exercise of the national power of self-preservation. The arguments and reasoning which controlled the formulation of an immigration policy 10 years ago can not logically be applied to the present situation.

All of the available reports show that there is a constantly growing and unprecedented influx of immigrants to the American shores from all parts of the Old World. Notwithstanding the difficulties in transportation, notwithstanding the abnormal differences in international exchange of money, notwithstanding the hardships and difficulties of land travel in Europe, and all of the various obstacles in obtaining permission to leave their native land, immigration from foreign lands during the past months has been increasing at an alarming rate. The tidal wave of immigration has been constantly assuming greater and greater proportions until it now promises to exceed all records. If the experience of the recent past is any criterion, the situation is one of grave concern and calls for prompt and effective measures and safeguards.

For the past few months, even under restrictions that survive war time, immigrants have been pouring into the port of New York in such large numbers that officials have been overwhelmed and all facilities overtaxed. We can readily foresee what the ensuing year may bring, with the inevitable removal of war-time restrictions from certain countries and when ocean travel will be stripped of the prevailing difficulties and inconveniences. Immigration will only be limited by the extent of transportation facilities.

I am not unmindful of the fact that there has been and will be considerable emigration of foreigners from America. This, however, will by no means offset the enormous number of immigrants. The available data also proves that those who left America during the past year for a visit to the lands of their birth are returning in large numbers. The distressful conditions in their native countries, consequent upon the war, the lack of opportunity of obtaining gainful employment prompts them to return to America as speedily as they can obtain necessary return passage.

The pending bill can not be called really a suspension measure. It should be properly called a restrictive measure. The provisions permitting the admission to this country during the life of the law of certain classes of blood relatives is rational and humane. It is designed to eliminate separation of families and prevent heartaches. It will enable the dependents of naturalized American citizens and of declarants for American citizenship who are residing abroad to join their families.

Some advocate the unrestricted admission of immigrants because of their desire to obtain a surplus of unskilled workmen. In normal times and in periods of industrial, agricultural, and commercial expansion we need unskilled labor on the farm and in the various industries. In the past it was the labor of the immigrant that supplied this need. He was engaged in occupations that produced the raw material upon which skilled labor depended for employment. But the present and immediate future will not witness a shortage of unskilled laborers. The present surplus in the labor market from all present indications will remain for some time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] who voiced his opposition to the pending measure, has himself recognized this condition and has introduced a few days ago a resolution seeking a solution of the problem of the unemployed. A large number of unemployed always tends to reduce the scale of wages and under existing conditions such a reduction would not only reduce the standard of living conditions of the American laborer, but would produce want and suffering. The interest of the Nation and of all its classes is paramount to that of any small class which is only actuated by self-interest. Extensive immigration, like that now in progress and coming at a time of business depression and in a period of readjustment which produces not only uncertainty but temporary stagnation in business and industry resulting in unemployment, will increase suffering among those already here and those who come later. The first duty of America is to relieve the present acute conditions and by all available means provide employment for those who are here. American labor is entitled to first consideration. When the surplus of unemployed will be absorbed, we can open our gates to admit those who would make desirable citizens.

The proposed measure will not only accord protection to American labor and to all classes of our population, but will provide protection to the immigrant himself. The welfare of those whom we admit to this country can not be ignored. When we permit the immigrant to land on our shores, we assume a certain moral obligation for his welfare. Permission to enter here implies a tacit assurance that he will find opportunity of employment and of betterment of his own and his family's condition. A desire to escape from burdensome conditions and hardships is not the sole reason for the increased immigration in recent months. The compelling factor is the expectation of highly remunerative employment. Under existing conditions he will be unable to find employment and with the million or more now without work and the thousands coming daily to our shores, the problem of the unemployed will become constantly more acute.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KLECZKA. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask, if the gentleman will permit, why it is that a provision is contained in this bill to permit people to come in here from Mexico as many times as they want on the payment of the head tax, if it is necessary to keep the people out because of unemployment?

Mr. KLECZKA. That section of the bill only continues in force the existing law, which permits otherwise admissible aliens to be temporarily admitted from certain contiguous territory, for a period not exceeding six months under rules prescribed by the Immigration Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of Labor. My personal view is that Federal legislation of the character of the pending measure which affects the entire country should not afford special advantages to certain sections thereof.

Unemployment always creates dissatisfaction and unrest and any cause that increases the number of unemployed accentutes and increases the danger of discord and strife and trouble. With the energies of the people directed to the solution of domestic problems and the promotion of domestic contentment and tranquillity, we can not encourage or permit the existing difficulties to be increased. The admitted aliens, if they fail to find employment, will become sadly disillusioned in their hopes and expectations, and will not only become a burden to the community but will become an easy prey of revolutionary agitators and fomentors of strife.

Personally, I believe that since the pending measure is one of emergency the life of the bill should not extend beyond the probable existence of the conditions which call for its enactment. Hence I believe that the period of restriction should be limited to one year. I do not believe in a policy of permanent exclusion of desirable and necessary immigration, nor in the adoption of unreasonable and drastic and harsh restrictive measures. To-day, however, there is no visible limitation to the excess immigration which is threatening us; there is almost a world tendency to emigrate to America. To admit all of the peoples who are fleeing from the economic chaos of their own countries is simply to transfer the chaos to our own land.

If this measure is adopted, it will enable Congress to study conditions and formulate new and necessary legislation providing means and measures not only for the assimilation of immigration but likewise for its proper distribution, to the end that the standards of living and employment of American workers will not be impaired, and to the end that the desirable immigrant himself will have that protection and opportunity of self-development which will enable him to share all the privileges, advantages, and responsibilities of American citizenship. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as used in this act—

The term "United States" means the United States and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof except the Isthmian Canal Zone; but if any alien, or any alien seaman, leaves the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempts to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens, or to all alien seamen, respectively;

The term "immigration act" means the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States"; and the term "immigration laws" includes such act and all laws, conventions, and treaties of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens; and

The word "alien" includes any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed nor citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to make an inquiry. What is the special reason why at this time we should forbid any immigration into the Philippine Islands, and what is the special reason for forbidding any European immigration into Hawaii, inasmuch as if immigrants went there they might help us overcome the preponderance of Japanese now there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This amendment is made to apply to the Philippine Islands. The reason is the original immigration act is made to apply in the same manner, unless superseded by an act passed by the Philippine Legislature.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is perfectly patent that the Philippine Legislature could not act instantly, and if they wanted to have immigration continued there it would be a long time before they could permit it under the terms of this bill. Now, is there any necessity at present? Have they asked for legislation? Is there a condition over there which makes it advisable to prevent anyone going into the Philippines? In other words, we are trying to give them self-government, and we pass a law, and under that they pass a law, I assume. Now we propose to butt in and pass another law, which they can not change until it is too late to be of any effect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The present act applies to the Philippines and is enforced there by the commissioner of the United States, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Your present act authorizes the Philippine Legislature to pass an immigration law itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, they could pass an exclusion act, I assume, if they wanted to, approved by the President. But they have not done so. They are satisfied with the existing law, so far as I know, anyhow. Of course, I do not know what the circumstances are. I doubt the desirability of Congress passing any more laws respecting the Philippines than are desirable.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman will notice that the bill under present consideration provides in section 4 that the provisions of this act are in addition but not in substitution of the acts of the immigration law. The immigration law, I think, as the chairman has stated, provides for the action of the Philippine Island by the Philippine Legislature.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The existing immigration law, and this bill, for that matter, gives to the Philippine Legislature authority to pass immigration laws approved by the President.

Mr. VAILE. They will do so then.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But we put this law into effect, and before they can pass a law and have it approved the time has expired. We put this law into effect against them. They have had a chance to do it themselves, but they have not done it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has the gentleman an amendment to offer exempting the Philippine Islands?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have not prepared any amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Personally, I am inclined to agree with the gentleman, and I have an amendment that I can offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, how about Hawaii?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Hawaii is in a different class. It is a Territory of the United States.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Hawaii is suffering now from a shortage of citizen population. She is in danger of being a military possession, being controlled by a military government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think so. I think Hawaii is in danger because the great mass of the people who work there are Japanese. They have a very large Japanese population, and the children of the Japanese population born there are citizens of the United States. It is highly desirable to get the Portuguese or any other European nationality to send their people to Hawaii and let them remain there, and have families there, rear children there, and become the class who do the work there, instead of compelling the Hawaiians to depend upon the Japanese. It would be easy, of course, to forbid those people coming to the United States from Hawaii. I think you have already done that. I make this suggestion, because the one thing that impressed me when I was in Hawaii with a number of other gentlemen over here was the desirability of bringing a class of people into Hawaii who would work, besides the Japanese, and not make the workmen there exclusively Japanese.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. You might provide some way where the political refugees from various broken places in Europe might go to Hawaii.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That might be a good thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 1, line 6, after the word "Zone," insert the words "And the Philippine Islands."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I note that the bill, on page 1, provides for something in relation to alien seamen, and I believe it carries no definition of what an "alien seaman" is, as does the general immigration law, which we passed in 1917, and I am wondering whether the chairman of the committee deems it advisable to insert in the bill a definition of "alien seamen" as it would appear in that law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This bill is in addition to the present law, and that definition stands as you find it in the act of February 5.

Mr. GARD. I make the inquiry because the words "United States" are defined, and "citizen of the United States" is redefined in this bill, and the word "alien" is redefined in this bill. I ask whether it was necessary to define the words "alien seamen"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], in order to ask the chairman of the committee if he took into consideration the conditions in Porto Rico, whether this should apply there, or whether they have sufficient labor there to take care of agricultural needs?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think so, and a very low rate of wages. We are not going into all of those islands, any more than we can help, to regulate their affairs.

Mr. WALSH. You did take into consideration their condition there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. You mean personally or by examination and inquiry?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Well, would the gentleman object to an amendment including Porto Rico in the amendment that he has offered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall not object. I shall oppose such an amendment. The gentleman might offer it if he desires.

Mr. WALSH. Then will the gentleman tell the grounds of his opposition? I do not desire to offer an amendment which the chairman would oppose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. From the best information we have available we understand that there is little or no immigration to Porto Rico.

Mr. WALSH. The molasses crop can be adequately handled with what they have, I take it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this act, from 60 days after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of two years next after its passage, the immigration of aliens to the United States is prohibited, and during such time it shall not be lawful for any alien to come from any foreign port or place, or, having so come, to remain within the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 2, line 18, strike out the word "sixty" and insert "one hundred and twenty."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, of course, personally, I do not expect to vote for the bill, but if it must pass—and I hope it will not—I hope that we will at least give these people who already have made all arrangements, who have sold all they possess for the purpose to pay for their passage and transportation into the United States, a chance, an opportunity to come. This bill may go into effect shortly. Under it we are giving them only 60 days. It will be absolutely impossible for these people to secure passage within 60 days. Meanwhile they have disposed of their households, they have disposed of their homes or the little property which they possess, and if this law goes into effect they will be made beggars.

I know that it is not the intention of the majority in the House, it matters not how the majority of the committee feel, to be unfair and to be unreasonably harsh, and it is for that reason that I am offering this amendment, hoping that this additional time may be given to these unfortunate people who have placed themselves in the position they are in, especially in view of the fact that they had a perfect right to rely on the expectation that there would be no such harsh, unjust, and un-American legislation enacted as is proposed in this bill. It is for that reason that I am offering this amendment, hoping that the majority of the Members of this House will see the justice of my contention.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SABATH. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 2, line 19, after the word "of" strike out "two years," and insert in lieu thereof "six months."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, since this debate commenced we have been told by practically all of the members of the committee that this is simply a temporary measure, designed to temporarily keep out certain elements of immigration which are deemed undesirable. We have also been informed that the committee proposes to prepare a comprehensive measure which will cover the entire subject. None of us knows at this time what conditions will prevail in this country within the next three or four months, but I am a sufficient optimist to believe that we are going to have better business and economic conditions than prevail to-day.

Under this measure as it is at the present time no brother or sister of any person in the United States, whether a citizen or declarant, can possibly come into the United States, and I thought that by simply making it six months, until we get a comprehensive bill, we will be serving not only the country but act fairly and squarely to those who have come here and are helping to make the Republic stronger in every way.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Certainly.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman, since the committee has been 22 months in preparing an emergency bill, if he thinks that within six months they can prepare a comprehensive general bill?

Mr. SIEGEL. Let me answer my colleague that if he would realize that it is simply 13 months since the so-called Siegel resolution was passed here—last November a year ago—that we went to the western coast for the purpose of satisfying certain gentlemen that we should personally observe the Japanese conditions, and that our work at Ellis Island resulted in 249 anarchists being sent away on the Buford, I believe the committee has performed valuable services. I would at the same time call his attention to the fact that it has not been the fault of the committee, but that of the department in administering the present law that the abuses in the present instance have come to light and because Congress has not made a sufficient appropriation.

Let me add, Mr. Chairman, that if the administrative officials had acted expeditiously under the law as it is, it would have been unnecessary to bring in that resolution. At this very moment the Secretary of Labor has not acted on the Martens case, which has been pending about a year. If there is no evidence against him sufficient to find that he comes under the terms of the act, then, in justice to him, he should have been formally discharged. If otherwise, then the people are the sufferers.

I should like to say also to my colleagues that I could change and relieve the congestion at Ellis Island very quickly if Congress would abolish the office of Commissioner of Immigration and in lieu thereof place the Assistant Secretary of Labor at Ellis Island, so that he could act on each and every appeal promptly. If an immigrant is not fit mentally, morally, or physically, or if he is a crook, criminal, or an anarchist, see that he is sent back by the next ship. But you do not do that. Under the present law you bring the appeals from Ellis Island to Washington, and here they take from a week to four or five months before the appeals are acted upon. If you had your Assistant Secretary of Labor at Ellis Island to pass on the question, you would not only get rid of all the correspondence and delay, but you would relieve the congestion. For many reasons that is the policy which should be adopted.

Now, I propose a six months' limitation again for this reason: We are very unfair in this bill. Do you realize that thousands and thousands of brothers and sisters will be kept out whose applications for admission have been viséed under our law, which does not expire until March 4, 1921? They have disposed of everything they have got. A soldier boy came to me yesterday. He lost an arm in the service of this country. He said, "Under this bill you keep out my brother and sister. I was good enough to fight for you and to give up my right hand for you, but you keep out my brother and sister." That is what he said to me yesterday. I urge you to make this six months, so we can bring in a proper bill and enact proper legislation, after careful consideration as to what is best for America. Under the unanimous consent to extend my remarks, I feel that the people of the country can best understand my views upon this important question by giving them the minority views, which are as follows:

The undersigned members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization dissent from the report of the majority of the committee on H. R. 14461. The bill was introduced on Monday, December 6, 1920. Although there was a desire for a hearing in opposition to this measure, and an opportunity was asked for the presentation of facts bearing thereon, a hearing was refused. The report of the majority of the committee favoring the enactment of this bill only became accessible to us on Tuesday, December 7, 1920. In the short time that has been allotted for the presentation of the minority report we are therefore constrained to present our objections with extreme brevity and are of necessity limited in the presentation of facts.

The purpose of the bill is to prohibit practically all immigration for a period of two years. This is so drastic a change in the historic policy of the United States as to be startling. Immigration practically began a century ago. During that time the doors of opportunity have been kept open. Men and women of various nationalities have been welcomed here and they have become incorporated in our population. Without them the United States would not have reached the development of its resources or that degree of prosperity that has been achieved. They have added valuable elements to American citizenship. It is well known that a large proportion of Americans are either immigrants or the descendants of immigrants of the first and second generations.

They will be found among the leaders in the commercial, industrial, and professional activities of the United States. The ranks of labor, skilled and unskilled, have been recruited by them. They have added intellectual, moral, and spiritual values as well. They have done their share in the national defense. During the Civil War they fought for the preservation of the Union, and during the great conflict that has just been waged they constituted a large proportion of those who served in our Army and Navy.

From August, 1914, until the present year immigration was practically suspended because of the war and of the lack of transportation. Although the exact data are not at this moment accessible to us, it will be found that during the same period emigration from the United States reached a very high figure, so that covering a period of six years the number of emigrants from the United States about equaled the number of immigrants. In the meantime the demand for man power in practically all of the American industries has greatly increased and can not be met except through the medium of immigration, particularly that of unskilled labor.

There is, therefore, no occasion for the extraordinary haste manifested in the attempt now made to enact this prohibitory measure without giving to it the consideration and deliberation that its importance demands. Nothing can be more unfortunate than legislation inspired by hysteria.

The majority report shows that it was not until July, 1920, that there developed a perceptible flow of immigration. Much is made of the fact that in that month the number of immigrants arriving at Ellis Island was 55,900; in August, 57,874; in September, 70,052; and in October, 74,665. As against these arrivals the departures in September were 35,689 and in October 25,597. These are not abnormal figures. The total immigration from January 1 to December 1, 1920, was 840,509. The total number of departures from the United States during the same period was 366,915. The net immigration, therefore, during the period of 11 months was 473,594. Prior to 1914 there were a number of years in which the net immigration exceeded 1,000,000, and there was no difficulty in absorbing this influx.

The majority have, in their report, as we believe, unfairly selected three days for the purpose of showing that on them a large number of immigrants arrived at Ellis Island. That is not a proper test. But even if it were indicative of the average number of arrivals, which it certainly is not, the total number per annum would not exceed the number of immigrants arriving here annually for a series of years prior to 1914.

Apparently the committee was impressed by the fact that, when it visited Ellis Island on a recent occasion, it was found that the number of inspectors stationed there was insufficient to attend to the immigrants with sufficient expedition and that as a result there was a congestion of aliens. The remedy for this state of affairs, that has frequently been called to the attention of Congress, is not to prohibit immigration. It is rather to improve the administration of our existing immigration laws. Long before the war it was well known that the number of inspectors, examining physicians, clerks, and interpreters was inadequate, that the compensation that was paid to those who had been provided was insufficient to procure the high degree of efficiency called for by the duties imposed by the law. The bill as reported makes no attempt to relieve these conditions. No consideration is given even to the subject of creating a sufficient staff of inspectors and physicians to serve along the Canadian and Mexican borders. There are 76 points of entry along our northern boundary. There are only 23 examining physicians there at the present time to perform the duties imposed upon them by the statute, although it is estimated that 12,000,000 are passing to and from Canada annually.

As bearing on the subject of administration, one of the subscribers has for a long time urged the abolition of the office of commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island and the assignment there of an Assistant Secretary of Labor, in order that appeals may be promptly passed upon. The delays that are now occasioned because of the loss of time in transmitting appeals to Washington are intolerable. They are unfair to the Government as well as to the immigrants. By adopting the plan proposed, much of the existing congestion could be eliminated and substantial economies introduced. It is obvious that under the existing methods a considerable clerical force is required, both at Ellis Island and in Washington, to attend to the correspondence occasioned by the appeals taken that might otherwise be dispensed with.

There has been and is no reason for the inadequate policy of administration at Ellis Island that has been pursued in the past and for necessitating the transaction of business there in a manner which is necessarily inefficient because of the lack of inspectors and physicians. Under the present law it is contemplated that every immigrant shall be examined by two physicians, but in a large number of cases this can not be done because of the lack of an adequate staff. Congress has failed to make the necessary appropriations, overlooking the fact that the United States has collected in head taxes in the past nine years from the immigrants that have arrived here approximately $11,000,000 in excess of all appropriations heretofore made by Congress for the enforcement of the immigration laws, including all administration expenses. The theory on which the head taxes have been levied has been that they should be devoted to an effective supervision of the arriving immigrant and to his protection against exploitation.

The reason for the increased head tax was to effectuate these purposes.

Yet the immigrants have been made the source of revenue without regard to the crying need for improved methods of administration.

The majority report calls attention to the fact that many of the new immigrants are not such as might go to the farms and that a large proportion of them were bound for cities. The exclusion of these immigrants would not tend to solve the problem of urban and rural distribution. That affects our present population as much as it would any increase in our population due to immigration. The subject is one that requires careful and scientific study. It can not be disposed of by the rule of thumb. The committee has not attempted to enter upon such a study. On the same theory all of our problems might be met after a fashion by a policy of prohibition. It is intimated in the majority report that in some of the cities named there is unemployment and a lack of housing facilities. There is no evidence to warrant the statement that a state of unemployment exists except sporadically or voluntarily. On the contrary there is everything to indicate that there is sufficient opportunity for employment for those who desire it throughout the country. So far as housing facilities are concerned, there is every indication that the artificial restraints against building that have to a large measure been the cause for such dearth of housing as has existed are rapidly disappearing, and to some extent will be diminished through immigration.

The majority report refers to estimates that have been made that from 2,000,000 to 8,000,000 Europeans are seeking to migrate to the United States. There is nothing in the report or otherwise to warrant these estimates. It is well known that men are given to exaggeration. Congress should not act on this kind of evidence. A man seated at his desk in Washington or New York, ignorant of European conditions, can just as easily estimate the number of immigrants at 10,000,000 in a single year as at one-tenth that number. The utter absurdity of the estimates is, however, apparent on its face, and the majority report very properly refers to it as "idle."

The majority report is especially unfortunate in its references to the number of Jewish immigrants arriving in this country. Classification according to the religion or race of immigrants is without justification. It is opposed to that Americanism that prevailed in the past. The data contained in Appendix A attached to the report are at the most ex parte statements very likely based upon information furnished by prejudiced and unfriendly local authorities.

The inaccuracy of the generalizations becomes at once apparent to those familiar with conditions. Speaking of the immigrants from Poland, it is said "that immigrants of similar class are to be found already in the United States who, taken as a class and not individually, have proven unassimilable." The splendid record and conduct of the 3,000,000 of immigrants of that nationality who are now in this country amply refute that charge.

While it is true that, since last July, a considerable number of immigrants have come to the United States from eastern Europe, that is due to the fact that, before the outbreak of the European war, members of the families of these immigrants, in many instances the head of the household or the supporting member of the family, had come to this country for the purpose of establishing a home, with the expectation of having the members of the family who had been left abroad rejoin them as soon as it was practicable. The intervention of the war made this impossible until communication was once more restored. As soon as that occurred there was a laudable effort on the part of the members of the family who had arrived in this country to bring about a reunion of the broken family circles. Hitherto this practice has been encouraged. It has been regarded as in the public interest. The majority report, however, seeks to decry this natural demonstration of love and affection, of duty and humanity.

It is insinuated that a Polish labor commissioner has stated that 225,000 Jews "have been furnished this year with funds for passage to the United States." If the inference is sought to be deduced that any moneys have been thus supplied in violation of the immigration laws, it is utterly unfounded. We are reliably informed that no moneys have been sent abroad except by members of the family residing in the United States to those of the same family residing abroad, in order to enable the latter to be reunited with those who had legitimately come to the United States in advance. To forbid such action would not only be brutal, but would not be tolerated by any right-thinking citizen. If there has been any violation of the law; it can be easily ascertained and prosecuted. We are confident, however, that the most careful investigation would disclose that whatever has been done for the relief of the distressed in eastern Europe has been most laudable. It would be a sorry day in American history if our country, that has heretofore been an asylum for the persecuted, were to slam its doors in the faces of those who have been and continue to be the victims of oppression, persecution, and discrimination in the lands in which they live. When the literacy test was adopted, an exception was made as to its application in the cases of those who were subjected to discriminatory laws and regulations, as well as to overt acts of persecution because of their race and religion.

A reading of the majority report would lead one to believe that this truly American policy is to be departed from and that the very fact that a people has been subjected to suffering of an unexampled character should be made the basis of adverse legislation. Thus the majority has called attention to the fact that 80 per cent of the passengers coming on the steamship Rotterdam and 90 per cent of those coming on the New Rochel are Jews. We are credibly informed that is due to the fact that those steamers sailed from ports which were accessible to the Jews coming from the various parts of Poland; just as the immigrants arriving on steamers leaving from Italian ports bring Italians, and those from Scandinavian ports those of Scandinavian descent. Representative Siegel had occasion to speak to many of the immigrants arriving on the Rotterdam in the presence of three other members of the committee. He found that practically all of them were women and children who were coming to this country to rejoin the heads of their families and other near relatives in the United States. The children were especially intelligent and would unquestionably within a very brief period be thoroughly assimilated.

The allusions to the Jews contained in the majority report are offensive, although we can not believe that they are intentionally so. We would not refer to these allusions were it not for the fact that they have a tendency to create in this country an atmosphere of prejudice against all immigrants and because of the further fact that there has recently been conducted a secret and malicious propaganda designed to arouse prejudice against the Jews in various parts of the United States.

We point to the fact that although the Jewish population of the United States does not exceed 3,000,000, not less than 225,000 Jews served in the Army and Navy of the United States during the late war, thus supplying a quota much greater than their numbers would have required. They served honorably and faithfully. Jews of New York composed the "Lost Battalion," which achieved immortality in the Forest of Argonne.

At the time war was declared many of the advocates of the proposed legislation feared that on account of the numerous races and nationalities in America we would not present a united front to the common enemy. The war showed that although there might have been newcomers from Italy, Poland, Ireland, Czechoslovakia, and many other European countries they had become fighting Americans. They entered each battle determined to win. They fought side by side with the native born and demonstrated their loyalty to their adopted country.

We are opposed to this bill because it is based on unsound premises, because it is unnecessary, and because it will inevitably prove injurious to the public welfare. The creation of such a precedent as it affords will tend to legislation productive of isolation and to the retardation of our national growth.

So far as the national prosperity of the country is concerned, this bill is bound to injure the mass of our workers who are skilled. It is admitted by every fair-thinking American that what we need in this country is the so-called common labor. Again, the average American does not compete with what we call the unskilled laborer. Most of the work requiring the exertion exclusively of brawn and muscle has been furnished chiefly by the immigrant. Under this bill the unskilled laborer will not be allowed to enter. The skilled laborer can come in. This is a fact which should interest every employer and employee, as we know that the skilled laborer will not desert his position in order to do unskilled work. Where the unskilled worker is to come from will become a serious problem should the bill pass.

The bill is likewise objectionable in that section 4, which is intended to permit certain persons to be brought into the United States, provides that only a citizen of the United States 21 years of age or over who may secure such permission under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, and then he is permitted only to bring his parent, grandparent, an unmarried son under 21 years of age, an unmarried or a widowed daughter, a grandson under 16 years of age whose father is dead or unmarried, or a widowed granddaughter whose father is dead. It does not even allow him to bring his wife.

The bill is further objectionable in that it makes the Secretary of Labor the sole judge as to whether a person shall be admitted. He must be satisfied that the relative is likely to prove a desirable resident of the United States, and in that event he may issue a permit to the applicant under such regulations as he may prescribe which shall authorize the immigration officers at the port of entry to examine such relative upon arrival at such port. In other words, instead of creating a legislative standard of admission, the entire subject of admission becomes one of special favor. If there is anything that should be avoided in American legislation it is that of making the right to enter the United States a matter of discretion on the part of an administrative officer instead of a matter to be regulated by the Congress of the United States.

ISAAC SIEGEL.
ADOLPH J. SABATH.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment. I believe it should be adopted. In the first place, we ought not to put a perpetual embargo on immigration. In the next place, if we are to put an embargo on at all, it should be put on pending the development of such legislation as is thought to be necessary to meet the case. In the next place, if you can not prepare legislation to meet the case in six months, you can not prepare it at all.

Again, if you make this for two years you may regret it. If you make it for a year you may regret it. If you make it for six months, and you find it necessary to continue it, you can reenact the legislation. My own judgment is that the conditions do not justify a period of exclusion for longer than six months, and I believe that before six months have elapsed you will find men in the executive branches of the Government who will prove beyond any question that you do not need any further exclusion legislation at all. The legislation now on the books is sufficiently rigid, if properly enforced, to meet every case with which the country is confronted. I believe we ought to be just to ourselves. We realize that the laws have not been enforced, that many people have been permitted to enter America who should have been excluded, but that was not the fault of the law. That was the fault of those who failed to execute the law properly. Now we are going to have a change of government, and the time is fixed when the change will take place, and I undertake to say that the man who is to be President after the 4th of March will appoint men to office who will execute the law as it is written. [Applause.] I believe that if the law is executed as written you will not need this legislation. But pending that, and to give a sufficient opportunity for the study of the question by the incoming administration, I am willing to vote for this exclusion act for the period of six months. I would not be willing to go beyond that.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. That would leave only four months, since there are 60 days before it will take effect, and that would give only three months after the new administration comes in.

Mr. MADDEN. That would be plenty of time to give them all the opportunity to put themselves in a position to execute the law, and I honestly believe, as I have said, that if the law now on the statute books is properly executed it will prove to the people of America that we have every law on the books that we need.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will make that one year instead of six months I am not so sure but what I will vote for it.

Mr. BUTLER. I will vote for it.

Mr. MADDEN. I think one year is too long a time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to call your attention to the fact that on January 29, 1919, practically two years ago, a bill similar to this in principle was unanimously reported. Only two members of the committee filed minority views, and they said it should be two years instead of four which the bill provided. The Committee on Immigration, with a new chairman, and the majority having control of that committee, after going over the facts, have investigated the matter and have determined that it was a mistake that the House did not pass that bill when it was presented. They have found that immigration should be suspended. It is growing more acute all the time, and anyone who is desirous of making an investigation not only at Ellis Island but Boston, Philadelphia, and the West where aliens enter can not help coming to the conclusion that with all the readjustment conditions in this country and abroad it is in the interest of the community, to say nothing about the interests of our own country, that we should suspend immigration until we can get on our feet.

The most remarkable thing I have heard in this House for 10 years, since I have been here, has just been delivered by the gentleman from Illinois, that on the 4th of March there will be a "change of Government." My God, gentlemen, is it possible that we have come to that state of affairs. I want to call your attention to this fact—you talk about the administration of the law now on the statute books.

You all know, the members of the committee all know, and you ought to tell it to the House, that the gentleman who has had the most to do with the administration of the immigrant law is a man who has been in the service of your party for the last 15 years, and that 90 per cent of all the men in the service are civil-service men, and 80 per cent belong to your party. It is an absolute fact and all you have to do is to go and look at the record. Why discuss and cavil over the question of the enforcement of the law when it has been brought to your attention by the Commissioner of Immigration that in every port where the immigrants enter there are not sufficient men to guard and protect the country. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization said that the men can come over the line at will. He had sent men back as often as six times, and there is no law on the statute books whereby it makes it a crime for a man to enter the country from Canada or Mexico. We can not get a bill to that effect.

Why complain when your committee has refused repeatedly to make sufficient appropriations and when you took off the guards on the Mexican border where the Japanese and Chinese can come right through anywhere on a stretch of 100 miles? On the Canadian border you have taken off inspectors, and every man in the service who has testified before this committee says that there are not enough men in the service to guard the borders and keep these men from entering. Now be honest, be frank, be fair and criticize yourselves. Do not place the burden on these men who are doing their best irrespective of the party to which they belong. Do not come in here and criticize when you deliberately refuse to give them enough men to enforce the law.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is that the only reason the gentleman gives for the nonenforcement of the law, because of lack of force?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I think I can state that absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York. That is, to strike out the words "six months" in the amendment of the gentleman from New York and insert in place thereof "one year."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "of," strike out "six months" and insert in lieu thereof "one year."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am led to offer this amendment, because I do not believe it to be the purpose of the committee or the purpose of the House to adopt at this time a definite policy of exclusion. The chairman of the committee has said that this is a temporary matter, a matter of expediency. Other members of the committee have said that it was not alone a temporary necessity and one of expediency, but they were in favor of a longer time of extension. So that I fear that under the guise of what is called a temporary extension we may be writing a bit of permanent immigration law. So if it be as the chairman of the committee has said a temporary expediency, if it be but a recognition of the hysteria at home and the hysteria abroad, then why not place it at such a time as will enable this excellent committee on immigration to formulate a law. The policy of the United States has always been a policy of the open door to every person, no matter how humble he is, to come to this country and who was willing to accommodate himself to our ways and customs, and to submit to our form of government and become an American citizen. It has been the refuge of the oppressed of all nations, and I do not think it timely now that we in this hurried fashion should write what may be a permanent policy of our Government.

So, following the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, following the original argument of the chairman of the committee, I say that recognizing the hysteria abroad and recognizing the fact that hundreds of thousands of men and women are under such conditions over there that they embrace any opportunity to come to this country, I say this can be reconciled in one year, and it will enable the committee to write a law, and that is what the people of the country want. They do not want to have to stand on a policy of exclusion, but the people of America want a reasonable and sane immigration law, a law which will protect the United States, protect the citizens of the United States, and will admit only such as are willing to make good citizens of the United States. In a year this can be done because I am confident that with what investigation the committee has now had an additional investigation of one year, there will be afforded abundant opportunity to submit to the House of Representatives or the Congress of the United States a definite and proper policy of immigration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. If I have the time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that if his amendment should be adopted it would provide, then, for exclusion for only a period of 10 months?

Mr. GARD. I understand that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 19, after the word "of," strike out the words "two years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "26 months."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if we were to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL], known as the six months' amendment, the actual period during which this law would be in force and effect would be only four months. If we were to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], known as the one-year amendment, the actual period during which immigration to this country would not be allowed would be only 10 months, because the law is exempted from operation for 60 days after its passage. The law does not go into effect until two months after its passage. The committee told us that it was their purpose to make this law apply for four years, but because of the opposition, I believe, of two or more of the committee, who insisted upon reducing the time to two years, the committee finally adopted the views of the minority and made the proposed law apply for what is commonly believed two years.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. The committee led us to believe that they were giving us a two-year act; that they were to exclude immigration for two years, when, as a matter of fact, according to the reading of the bill, even if the committee bill be adopted, immigration will not be excluded for two years but for only a year and 10 months. I think that the smallest period of time needed by this Government to readjust matters, to rehabilitate affairs, is two years.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The gentleman can get recognition in opposition to my amendment.

Mr. VAILE. I do not want recognition, but I do want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment, and then I will yield. The gentleman from New York says that his New York laborers will not work in the ditches; that you can not get them to work in the trenches; that you must have foreign labor to do that. The time is coming, if it is not already here, when some American laborers are going to be glad to get jobs working in the ditches, and some of us here may be glad to get jobs of that kind if we do not stop the present modus operandi of running the Government business. We have got to readjust, we have got to protect this country, and we have got to protect the honest laborers of this country, many of whom now are out of jobs. What are we going to do with the millions of people who say they are out of jobs now, if we let these hungry immigrants come in from abroad and take the very bread and meat out of the mouths of their wives and little children? I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. VAILE. I want the gentleman to yield, to see if I can not bring the committee back into the light of his smile. If he will be good enough to read the report on page 7, he will find the following:

Section 2 is the two years' suspension, with an allowance of 60 days to take care of those on the seas or who have made a start for the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I say.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is not my friend from Texas making a pretty good protectionist speech?

Mr. BLANTON. Right along that line, if the gentleman from Kentucky will read the figures which I put in the RECORD yesterday, he will see that to a certain extent I am with him on that ground. [Applause.] The point I am trying to make now is that we do need this committee bill; that we do need this 1 year and 10 months. If you adopt my amendment, you exclude the 60-day exemption from the period of the operation of the law, and by making it 26 months we actually will get a full 2-year period of operation, when there will be no immigration from abroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas by striking out the word "twenty-six" and inserting the word "fourteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN of Illinois to the substitute offered by Mr. BLANTON: Strike out the word "twenty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fourteen."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to accept that amendment, and on behalf of the members of the committee sitting at the table at this time I accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONTAGUE) there were—ayes 87, noes 25.

So the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. RAKER. Would we not have to vote first to adopt the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. If the substitute should be adopted there would then be no opportunity of voting upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD to the amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Strike out "six months" and insert in lieu thereof "one year."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, since my amendment is practically incorporated in the amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Texas, offered by the gentleman from Illinois, which has been adopted, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment in the nature of a substitute of the gentleman from Texas as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The question is upon the substitute as amended.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I think the vote is on the amendment offered by me.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The question is on the substitute as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the substitute as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended by the amended substitute was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: Page 2, line 21, after the word "to," strike out the word "come" and insert in lieu thereof the words "enter the United States." And in line 22 strike out the word "come" and substitute the word "entered."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The committee accepts these amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee can not accept an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was going to put the amendments. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss the amendment. May we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. GARD. Does the chairman of the committee think the incorporation of the word "enter" in the place it does carries out the original legislative intent of the prohibition of the coming of the alien? In other words, it seems to me there are three elements to be embodied. One is the coming of the alien, the other is the entrance, and the other is the remaining. Now, in the original text it prohibits the coming of the alien and the remaining of the alien. And it seems to me the text was deficient in respect to the prohibition against entrance; but as it is now, the prohibition is removed against coming and instead entrance is substituted which would leave it defective, following the original text, of prohibiting the coming of the alien. In other words, does the gentleman intend to make threefold this prohibition against the coming, entrance, and remaining of the alien? If he does, I suggest most respectfully the word "come" should be allowed to remain and the word "enter" should be placed before the word "to" in line 22.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It makes very little difference what word we use we can not stop a man starting to come to us, but we can prohibit them against entering the United States. That comes down to the principle the Japanese have put to the people of this Government. They do not recognize that there is any surreptitious coming to us and——

Mr. GARD. That which I desire to call to the attention of the gentleman is that by the retention of the word "come" there may be some effect upon the other side—that is, they can not start from a foreign shore to the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; but we can not legislate for the other side.

Mr. GARD. Certainly we can not legislate but we can give expression to the term. It seems to me that it can best be supplemented by the word "come" in addition to the words "enter and remain." However, I may be wrong. I accept the judgment of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) Section 2 shall not apply to otherwise admissible aliens lawfully resident in the United States, nor to otherwise admissible aliens of the following status or occupations, when complying with the requirements of this section and with all other provisions of the immigration laws:

(1) Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees;

(2) Travelers or temporary sojourners for pleasure, business, or curiosity, who may enter the United States during the time of suspension of immigration for a period not exceeding six months each, which period may be extended in individual cases by the Secretary of State;

(3) Bona fide students who may enter the United States solely for the purpose of study at educational institutions particularly designated by them; and upon graduation, completion, or discontinuance of studies they shall not be entitled to remain in the United States.

(b) An alien belonging to one of the classes or persons enumerated in subdivision (a) shall be permitted to enter the United States only upon presentation of a valid passport or other official document in the nature of a passport (hereinafter referred to as a passport) satisfactorily establishing his identity, nationality, and to which of the classes so enumerated he belongs, together with a signed and certified photograph of the bearer attached. A wife, or a female child under 21 years of age, or a male child under 16 years of age, may be included in the passport of a husband or parent, but a photograph of each must be attached to the passport. Each male child 16 years of age or over must carry a separate passport.

(c) Each such passport must be viséed by an American consulate, or a diplomatic mission if specially authorized, in the country from which the holder starts on his trip to the United States, and if such country is not the country to which he owes allegiance the passport must also be viséed by a diplomatic or consular officer therein of his own country. In all cases the passport must also be viséed by an American consulate, or the diplomatic mission if specially authorized, in the country from which the alien embarks for the United States, or if he comes by land, the country by which he enters the United States.

(d) Each alien coming within the provisions of this section, except a duly accredited Government official, must furnish to the American diplomatic or consular officer who visées the passport in the foreign country from which he starts on his trip to the United States, and to the American authorities at the port of entry or elsewhere in the United States, a written declaration setting forth: (1) The date and place of the bearer's birth; (2) the nationality and race of his father and mother; (3) the place of the bearer's last foreign residence and the other places, if any, where he has resided within the past five years; (4) if he has ever been in this country, the dates and objects of his visits and the places and addresses where he resided or sojourned; (5) the date set for his departure for the United States, the port of embarkation, and the name of the ship on which he is to sail, if he goes by water; (6) names and addresses of persons acquainted with the applicant in the country from which he starts and in the United States, if any; (7) the expected duration and object of his proposed visit to this country, the documentary or other proofs of such objects submitted, and the place or places in the United States where he expects to sojourn or reside; (8) that the bearer knows and understands the provisions of the immigration laws, excluding certain classes of aliens from the United States, and is certain that he does not fall within any of such classes; (9) that the bearer understands that if, on arrival at a port of the United States, he is found to be a member of a class excluded by the immigration laws, he will be deported if practicable, or, if for any reason deportation should be found to be impracticable, will be held in detention in an immigration station or other place of confinement, and that he is, with full understanding thereof, assuming all risks involved in a possible return trip in consequence of being rejected under such law.

(e) A wife or minor child who does not expect to reside with the husband or father in the United States must carry a separate declaration.

(f) Each declaration must be affirmed or sworn to before a consular officer, or a diplomatic officer of the United States if specially authorized, and signed in triplicate, and a photograph of the declarant must be attached to each copy with an impression of the official seal. The declaration must be made at least two weeks before the date of intended departure, except in cases of extraordinary emergency. One copy of the declaration must be filed in the embassy, legation, or consulate by which the passport is first viséed, one copy forwarded immediately to the Commissioner of Immigration or inspector in charge at the port of entry by which the declarant expects to enter the United States, and one copy fastened to the passport of the declarant in such a way that it may be removed upon his departure from the United States. The copy last mentioned must be presented with the passport to the official at the port of entry into this country who examines passports, and to the immigration official who inspects the holder, and to such other officials in the United States as may be authorized to inspect such documents.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman in regard to paragraph 2 of page 3. It seems to me that that paragraph opens the bill wide and allows every person to come into these United States except the honest man who wants to come in here and go to work. If something could be done to keep out and leave at home the people who are coming to this country for pure curiosity and agitation I should think it would be better than to keep out men who come here for honest, legitimate purposes, and I would like to have the chairman of the committee explain what it means in the first two lines of section 2, what the word "curiosity" means and what it covers?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The present law had a long list of exemptions to the provisions of the immigration law——

Mr. SNELL. I know; but this is a prohibition act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This is a suspension act, but it permits those who were entitled to travel between countries and had the right to come and go to continue to do so, and provides a continuation of the passport law and makes the passport regulations apply to those who come and go between countries. The treaties carry such intent, and this just follows the usual language of treaties. Now, it is not possible to make a suspension law that overlooks that fact, and the suspension or prohibition acts that have been introduced in the last four years have had that defect. After making the suspension they immediately come around and made exceptions, by name, of doctors, lawyers, nurses, teachers, civil engineers, but did not say any other kind of engineer.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact, under the exemption from this section, the very people would come into this country who would give us more trouble and be apt to be against our laws and our institutions than any other class of people?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If they have passports they have to be viséed by the consul, and the only place the State Department can exercise the visé business is in regard to this section in the immigration law which applied to the anarchist, the dynamiter, the revolutionist, the man opposed to all forms of government, and so on, and this clause of the immigration law is absolutely written into the instructions of consuls in regard to viséing passports. The State Department thinks it can not say to a man who is evidently a paralytic that they refuse the visé. They warn him.

He comes just the same; and when he is at Ellis Island, and held there among the temporarily detained, his relatives get busy and ask his Congressman, among others, to intercede in his behalf and take the matter down to the Secretary of Labor, who sits there and whose word is final, and who, if there is pressure enough, must almost invariably give way.

Mr. SNELL. Would it be contrary to various treaties if the words "or curiosity" were stricken out of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not care what words are used. The words "business or pleasure" might be sufficient—tourists or men of business.

Mr. SNELL. The word "curiosity" would cover any class on the face of the earth.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman must remember that they must have passports.

Mr. SNELL. They do now. Mr. Chairman, I move, on page 3, line 7, that the words "or curiosity" be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 3, line 7, after the word "business" strike out the words "or curiosity."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, that being adopted, we want to offer an amendment to strike out the comma after the word "pleasure" at the end of line 6 and insert the word "or," so that it will read "pleasure or business."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 7, line 6, after the word "pleasure" strike out the comma and insert the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is agreed to by the entire committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KLECZKA: Page 3, line 15, strike out the period and insert a semicolon. After line 15, insert a new subdivision as follows:

"(4) Ministers of any religious denomination."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KLECZKA. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Page 2, line 25, after the word "aliens" insert, "who have been or who at the time this act takes effect are."

Mr. LUCE. This amendment is aimed at the situation contemplated by section 7 of the bill, under which aliens coming from near-by territory will be admitted for only six months.

In my district there are about 50,000 persons who were born, or who had a parent born, in Canada. About 30,000 of these come from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edwards Island, and are among our most valuable citizens.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If they are citizens, they are not in trouble in any possible way in this or any other bill.

Mr. LUCE. Part of them are citizens, to be sure; but whether citizens or not, they are substantial and useful neighbors, they have occasion frequently to go back to the places of their birth. They may work with us for a few months, and then illness or slackness of labor takes them home, to return when strong again or when the activities of industry warrant. They are going back and forth all the time between New England and these adjacent Provinces. About two-fifths of these people from beyond the line are French Canadians, who for the most part work in our factories and are among our most useful toilers, thrifty, industrious, law-abiding. It will be, I think, unfortunate to interpose any barrier in the way of this constant going and coming which is so beneficial to the whole community. It seems, however, after consultation with the committee, that perhaps it will be impossible to escape the six months' requirement in section 7. But I am told by an expert in these matters, in whose judgment I think the committee places great confidence, that possibly the situation will be largely met by this amendment which will secure that any person who at any time has been lawfully resident or who at the time of the passage of the act is lawfully resident of the United States, may go to and fro between the countries without hindrance. Possibly this amendment may be acceptable to the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is the amendment offered to section 3?

Mr. LUCE. To section 3.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. GARD. As I got the gentleman's proposed amendment it is to insert after the word "lawfully," on line 25, page 2, the words:

Who have been or may be at the time this act goes into effect residents of the United States.

Mr. LUCE. Before the word "lawfully," instead of after it.

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think that the first words he uses are words of very great extent, because if this amendment is adopted he would say that a man who was lawfully resident of the United States 20 years ago and has gone back to some other country and stayed there 20 years, under this amendment could come in again.

Mr. LUCE. That is perfectly true, and I can see no damage to the welfare of the country that will occur by such a one who would return.

Mr. GARD. If there is to be any test of the immigrant it certainly should be applied to one who, while he was lawfully in the United States, returned and went back to his mother country for 20 years, and then comes to the United States again. If he is to come in again after having been there and wants the benefits of our institutions, after leaving them and having been away for 20 years, he should at least qualify, I think.

Mr. LUCE. I think the gentleman will find a requirement of qualifications already in the section, which says, "to otherwise admissible aliens." Every qualification imposed by the law will be still in effect.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. Would your amendment obviate this difficulty: A is resident in the United States of America. A acquires citizenship, remains here for a year or more. A then goes to Germany and acquires citizenship there. Would he then be, by the provisions of your amendment, admitted to the United States?

Mr. LUCE. That depends upon the interpretation of the word "admissible," with which I am not acquainted.

Mr. DEWALT. But I put it as a legal proposition. My judgment is that he would be admitted to the United States. And if that is so, the gentleman's amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. I am not familiar with the decree in the Goldman case. Would it be possible under this provision for Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman to return to the United States?

Mr. LUCE. I do not think they would be admissible under the existing law.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, answering for the gentleman, I wish to say that even if the amendment should be adopted Emma Goldman, or anyone else from Europe would be offensive, because this applies only to Canada, Cuba, and Mexico.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. The gentleman from Massachusetts, in referring to this section, anticipates the previous one.

Mr. SABATH. What I desire to ask is, Does the gentleman expect to offer his amendment later on, as he has expressed the idea that he wishes to do in section 7?

Mr. LUCE. It is my intention to offer that amendment if this does not prevail. The gentleman to whom I referred as an expert in these matters said this was the best way to meet the doubt. He said that the words "lawfully resident" are uncertain, and that they ought to be clarified, and this is the way to clarify them. If the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE], whom I now see on his feet, will explain what those words mean I shall be glad.

Mr. VAILE. I have one suggestion as to what they mean, and that is that there are two clauses in section 2 to which it does not apply. One clause, the latter, is to "otherwise admissible aliens." The clause to which the gentleman's amendment applies, "other admissible aliens," covers those now lawfully resident in the United States, and he suggests that we add to that "those who have been or are now lawful residents of the United States." Would not that apply to Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, who once were residents of the United States?

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman's insertion of the word "now" discloses the difficulty.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will repeat his language again I shall be glad. I did not catch it as it was read by the Clerk. I understood it was "whoever had been resident in the United States."

Mr. LUCE. Yes. I am told that this word "resident" is held to be met by six months' residence, a purely arbitrary interpretation. What I am trying to clarify is "lawfully resident," an uncertain phrase, by some legal definition.

Mr. VAILE. I think that, of course, would be a question of intention. A man might be away for a short time, as, for instance, on a few days' absence in Canada, with no intention to take up a permanent residence there. He would still be a resident of the United States.

Mr. LUCE. Here is an illustration: In the Waltham watch factory, in my city, there are a large number of persons employed who live in the Canadian Provinces. Suppose work is slowing down, the force reduced. Those people are going home to the Provinces. What test shall be applied when they desire to come back when work revives? Are they or are they not lawful residents?

Mr. VAILE. Did they give up their residence in the United States, or did they have a residence in the United States? What is their intention?

Mr. LUCE. That is purely a matter of conjecture. My contention is that those people ought to be allowed without any interference to return whenever the conditions warrant their employment in this factory.

Mr. VAILE. I should think they should take up a residence in one place or other, and if they are permanent residents of Canada they would come under the provisions of the bill as prepared by the committee.

Mr. LUCE. These are mostly young women.

Mr. VAILE. I know that this country appeals to young women.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have recognition from the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. A few moments ago an amendment was pending, and an amendment to that amendment, a substitute, and an amendment to the substitute. The Chair started to put those amendments in their usual order, putting the amendment to the amendment first, then the amendment to the substitute, then the substitute, and finally the amendment to the amendment, whereupon a storm of protest arose, joined in by such veteran parliamentarians as the ex-Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. The parliamentary clerk at that time had had no opportunity to look up the precedents in the matter. Under such pressure the Chair yielded, and put the question upon the amendment to the substitute before putting the amendment to the amendment. In doing this the Chair erred. I wish to make this correction now, so that it will not hereafter be considered as a precedent.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] rises in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, if I correctly understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, then, in substance, it is this, that anyone who has been lawfully a resident of the United States, and may have become a citizen of the United States, if he afterwards leaves this country, and perhaps may have acquired citizenship in another country, he would have the privilege, by the gentleman's amendment, to come back into this country, and not be subject to the restrictions of this bill. Am I correct in stating that as the gentleman's proposition? I think that would be the effect of the gentleman's amendment.

Now, let us take the situation as I tried to propound it to the gentleman from Massachusetts a few moments since. I am to-day a citizen of the United States, but I came from a foreign country, we will say. For some reason, best known to myself, either a business reason or hostility to the present Government, I leave the United States and go to Germany, admittedly a hostile Government to us. I there again acquire citizenship by remaining in Germany the specified length of time, and then for some reason I determine to come back to the United States. By the provisions of the gentleman's amendment I would be entitled to come back. Now, I say that is all wrong. [Applause.]

Now, in the next place, while I grant that the peculiar conditions affecting labor in the gentleman's district appeal to me, it ought to be met in a different way; just what way that is I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Inasmuch as the committee thought it best to agree to accept an amendment which was offered here to reduce this temporary suspension of 14 months by 2 months, making it a year, 2 months less than was contemplated, any condition that might arise in any quarter bordering on Canada would exist for only one year. A resident domiciled here and going back to Canada needs only one extension.

Mr. DEWALT. I understand that, and therefore the more reason for objection to the amendment. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman bases his illustration on one who has citizenship. He might go further, because lawful residence does not require citizenship.

Mr. DEWALT. I grant you that, but I was taking an extreme case, in order to show the great fault of the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Let me give the gentleman another more extreme illustration than that. Suppose there had been a citizen of Austria in the United States when war was declared, and that he went back to Austria and fought against the United States. Yet he was a lawful resident of the United States.

Mr. DEWALT. Then he could come back.

Mr. WINGO. Then he could come back under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. PELL. Would the Austrian whom the gentleman cites be otherwise admissible?

Mr. WINGO. As soon as the treaty of peace was proclaimed he would be.

Mr. DEWALT. When the treaty of peace was ratified he would be eligible for reentrance if the gentleman's amendment is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. I move to strike out the last two words. So that there may be no misunderstanding, the chairman of the committee did not intend to state what he did a moment ago. The committee did not agree upon the 14 months' proposition

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I undertook to say that the members sitting on this side had accepted it.

Mr. RAKER. Of course, that is a different proposition. I want to call the attention of the committee to provision 3 of section 3 on page 3 of the bill. It is a vitally important section, and has caused a great deal of trouble, but the committee believe they have obviated the difficulty which now exists. Under the present immigration law the exemptions apply simply to "students." Under that law many hundreds—and I use the word "hundreds" advisedly—of aliens have come to this country, have stayed sometimes a day, sometimes a week, and sometimes longer at the universities and schools, and then have gone out as common laborers, using that provision as a subterfuge to get into this country. The present subdivision 3 requires "bona fide students" and the applicant must designate the particular institution which he desires to attend. The further subdivision that is intended to cure that situation is section 12 on page 10 of the bill, whereby the Commissioner General of Immigration is to issue all the rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act, which will, of course, apply to this subdivision; and the committee understand and feel satisfied that the Secretary of Labor and Commissioner of Immigration, either the present one or if there should be another one appointed later, will issue rules and regulations under which the student will have to advise the Commissioner General of Immigration, and through him the Department of Labor, when he completes one of the three provisions provided in this subdivision, the first of which is graduation.

This contemplated student who has been admitted as a bona fide student will have to designate by writing to the Secretary of Labor when he graduates. Then we have a complete record of him, and after he graduates he will then be entitled to return home, and if he does not will be deported. Second, when he completes his studies, whether he graduates or not. The third provision, which eliminates the present imperfection in the law, is when he "discontinues" his studies. This does not mean a temporary discontinuance, because the school closes for the holidays or for vacation or because the term ends for the summer and he is going back in the fall. But when he discontinues his studies that bona fide student will be compelled under the rules and regulations promulgated by the Department of Labor under section 12 of this bill to notify the Secretary of Labor, and there will therefore be a complete record of all the students who enter, where they are, when they graduate, when they complete their course, or when they discontinue their studies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. May I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. By this means we will avoid the present dissatisfaction. It will cause harmony, will make better feeling, and the country will be more open than it is to-day to admit any qualified man or woman who can come up to the qualifications of admission to this country, so far as health is concerned, to come to our institutions or learning, so that they may graduate and get the benefit of our various schools, seminaries, colleges, and other institutions of learning, and then return to their homes and benefit their own people, but not use the law as a subterfuge to come here as common laborers. We believe we have met this situation clearly and fully.

Mr. VOLK. Mr. Chairman, before offering an amendmen I should like to move to strike out the last word in subsection 3 on page 3 for the purpose of asking a question for information. That subsection provides:

> Bona fide students who may enter the United States solely for the purpose of study at educational institutions particularly designated by them; and upon graduation, completion, or discontinuance of studies they shall not be entitled to remain in the United States.

I wish to ask if this would apply to the Rand School in New York City?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In my opinion we have laws now for the deportation and sending out of the United States of those who are anarchists, those who preach the overthrow of organized government, the assassination of officials, and so on. Students coming in will be required to designate the educational institution which they intend to attend, and any person designating the Rand School would be subjected to a particular scrutiny as to where he came from and what his policies were with reference to certain matters covered in our present immigration laws, with regard to deportation, which I think would cover that.

Mr. VOLK. Suppose a student matriculates in one institution and thereafter he transfers to the Rand School. Would this law cover his case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think so.

Mr. FESS. Is the Rand School a real school?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. VOLK] yield the floor?

Mr. VOLK. I should like to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. VOLK] withdraws his pro forma amendment and offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 3, line 15, insert a new section:
> "SEC. 5. Otherwise admissible aliens who at the time of the passage of this act have in good faith applied for and are in possession of a properly viséed passport."

Mr. VOLK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is so evident that I think it hardly needs any discussion. It was stated here on the floor that vessels are held in ports which are crowded with immigrants who want to get here. These people may be three or four months in reaching this country. They may be three or four months before they get a vessel to bring them here. If these people are left in foreign countries and must return to their original country, having sold all their possessions and subject to persecution, as they will be, for trying to leave the country, they will be in a bad situation. Therefore I believe that if in good faith they have applied for passports at the time of the passage of this act and are in possession of properly viséed passports they should be allowed to enter, and the 60-day limit should not apply to them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I think it must be apparent to the members of the committee that if you cut the prohibition at one end and extend the time at the other you will lose all advantage of the act. These people have applied, of course, in good faith for their passports, but they have not got the passports, and on top of that the Italian Government has sent word that they are proposing to suspend the issue of passports from there. The Italian Government notifies us that they would like to have the time extended to six months.

Mr. RAKER. If this amendment is adopted, you might as well do away with the bill, because there are millions who have made applications for passports, and they would come over here by the millions.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think the bill could except those who have applied for and actually hold passports viséed by the American consular officers at the time the bill goes into effect?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. My impression is that the State Department is endeavoring to have the viséing of passports greatly reduced. In addition to this act, the State Department is doing all it can to prevent people, as they are, moving hundreds of miles to find the United States consular office where they can stand in line and get passports. It is proposed by the State Department, whether this bill passes or not, to put up great posters in the language of foreign countries warning them against trying to come to this country.

Mr. HUSTED. I see that it would not be practicable to cover everybody who has applied, but I do not see any good reason for excepting those who have not only applied but who actually hold visèed passports. I imagine many of those would not be able to get transportation in 60 days.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to some of the provisions in this section 3. Of course, I understand what the general proposition is, but you provide that those who enter for the purpose of studying at an educational institution may be admitted. The educational institution might mean a public school. If you put the restriction on students who come here to study in institutions of the first class, that would make it definite, and I throw that out as a suggestion.

Now, is it possible if a man comes from England or Ireland and enters the University of California or of Texas or Harvard University, stays four years, graduates at the head of his class, acquires not only a thorough knowledge of the institutions of this country but a thorough education, that he must go back to the country from which he came at the end of the four years, no matter how good a citizen he might become if permitted to remain? I think that they might require him to enter institutions of the first class, remain until he graduated, and then upon graduation let the matter be determined as to his fitness, unless—and the gentleman from California can tell me if I am correct—unless the purpose is to exclude a certain class that ought to be kept out of the country altogether. If you are afraid that they will come in, then it might be that the tail will go with the hide.

Mr. MILLER. Would not the act expire before he completed his study for four years.

Mr. BEE. I imagine if this act is passed and it proves beneficial, as some of its proponents claim, it will be extended.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, he has first to attend an educational institution designated by him. He may designate half a dozen, he may designate a high school in Massachusetts, he may designate Harvard University or the University of California. He will be entitled to go through all of these schools. The gentleman's suggestion that he should have an examination after he has passed through these institutions is hardly practicable. Let him return, and after he goes back to his own country, and after the suspension of two years, then if otherwise admissible he can come back here.

Mr. BEE. Would he not be able to enter a primary school under this?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; why not? A primary school or a high school or university, but do not let him come, as in many instances they have, as students and within a week quit the school and go to work.

Mr. BEE. I am not discussing that phase of it; I am discussing the question of a man coming here and becoming a bona fide student in an institution of the first class.

Mr. FESS. I think that my friend has overlooked the differentiation that lies between the word "student" and the word "pupil." You never speak of a student going to a secondary school. One who attends a secondary school is a pupil or a scholar.

Mr. BEE. That is not a legal definition, is it?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BEE. But surely one can be a student in a primary class.

Mr. FESS. Oh, he would then be a pupil, not a student in a primary class. The word "student" is applied to institutions of higher learning.

Mr. BEE. Does the gentleman contend that the word "student" is a legal expression, applied to an institution of higher learning?

Mr. FESS. I insist that the term "student" is not applied to one attending any institution below the rank of one of higher learning.

Mr. BEE. By custom.

Mr. FESS. And the word "pupil" or "scholar" are used as applying to those attending secondary schools. This is the legal language.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Do I understand that any bona fide student of any nationality, professing any particular form of political philosophy—a Bolshevist, or a socialist, or anything of that kind—is permitted to come in under this provision?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; no. The gentleman should not be misunderstood. He must be "otherwise admissible." A Bolshevist, an I. W. W., a revolutionary, an anarchist, shall not come in, student or otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending offered by the gentleman from New York, and unless the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is an amendment to that amendment his amendment is not yet in order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from New York be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from New York be again reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. VOLK.

Mr. VOLK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out of it the words "have in good faith applied for or," making the amendment read:

Otherwise admissable aliens, who at the time of the passage of this act are in possession of properly visèed passports.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLK: Page 3, after line 15, a new subdivision:

"Subdivision (5). Otherwise admissable aliens who at the time of the passage of this act are in possession of properly visèed passports."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry. I probably shall not vote for the bill, and the bill probably will not become a law before the 3d or 4th of March, if it becomes a law at all. How many passports can be issued between now and then, and how many immigrants can actually be brought into the country within a year after that on the available vessels?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I read the figures here yesterday that the passport visés of 17 principal places had increased very rapidly in the last quarter—that is, up to September.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What I want to know is if they can visé as many passports between now and the 4th of March as they can bring in for the next year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and more.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VOLK].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that he was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 22.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Page 3, lines 13 and 14, after the word "upon," in line 13, strike out the word "graduation," and in line 14 strike out the words "completion, or," and after the word "studies," in line 14, insert "before graduation," so that the paragraph will read: "and upon discontinuance of studies before graduation."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the purpose of this bill is to prevent undesirable citizens of other countries coming into the United States. If there is a person who desires to be educated, or if there is a reason why a person should be admitted into our country, if that person wants to be educated and wants to learn and wants to study and wants to become a good citizen of the United States, it seems to me he ought to be admitted. That appeals to me. If a person wishes to come into the United States for that purpose, there is no other purpose that appeals to me that is before and above that of acquiring an education. Now, we allow——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In just a minute. Now, we allow resident aliens to remain here, and if a person comes here and graduates from one of our institutions, in the light of civilization, in the light of good citizenship, it seems to me if he has taken a degree from Harvard or from Yale or the University of Michigan, Cornell or Stamford, or any other of our great educational institutions, and desires to practice law, medicine, or any other profession and live according to the ideals of our institutions after he has graduated and gets his diploma, after he has the certificate of one of the colleges of our country, is a good citizen and entitled to graduate, he ought to remain here at his pleasure as long as he is a good citizen.

Mr. DAVEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A short question, because my time is limited.

Mr. DAVEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is a guaranty of good citizenship for a man to graduate?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is to me. If he has so graduated, there is no better guaranty of citizenship.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If the gentleman will yield further, Is it not possible under the terms of the gentleman's amendment to take a 6-weeks course in some college that graduates men in a very short time and yet comply with the literal terms of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If he has a certificate of graduation—why the present law is the literacy test. A man needs only to read 40 words in his own language. What does that signify besides graduating from college? They say this amendment will allow anarchists to come in. If that is so, we ought to send the anarchists out we now have here. They ought to be deported and ought not to be permitted to remain here. Whoever advocates the overthrow of our Government by force or violence ought to be hunted down the same as a traitor for treason. That is all it is. [Applause.] You say this might allow a man advocating such a doctrine as that to come in. Well, under the present law and under our institutions——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Does my friend from Michigan realize that just before the last election nearly one-third of the senior class of a university in one of the States not so far from Washington expressed a preference for Eugene Debs, a convicted traitor to his country, now in the penitentiary under our laws?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I never heard of that, and I hope I never will again.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it is a fact.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Those are the ones who are giving us trouble to-day, and I do not believe in this sabotage, anarchy, or treason. Neither do I believe in the destruction of our institutions or our grand Republic. I believe in law and order. I would punish to the extent of the law, and use the entire force of our Government to expel, all of those radicals; but I say in the interest of education and good citizenship that these people who graduate ought to remain. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: At the end of line 15, on page 3, insert a new provision as follows:

"5. Bona fide farm laborers who may enter the United States solely for the purpose of engaging in labor on a farm or farms or in a truck garden or truck gardens, and upon the completion or discontinuance of such employment they shall not be entitled to remain in the United States."

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the attention of the committee, and the serious attention of the committee, to this amendment which I propose. It permits the admission of farm laborers to work on farms or in truck gardens and requires them to leave the country whenever they discontinue that employment, and they can not engage, under this amendment, in any other employment while they are in this country. There is nothing new about legislation of this character. In Germany before the war they had most rigid immigration laws excluding skilled laborers but not excluding common laborers. A common laborer, a man who wanted to work on a farm, could be admitted always to Germany before the war under the limited passport system which prevailed there.

When his work was finished he was compelled to leave, and he could not engage in any skilled employment. And Germany protected by the most rigid laws any interference with skilled laborers who worked with machines. Her approaching supremacy among the industrial nations at the outbreak of the war was due largely to this fact, that she reserved for skilled employment her own laborers and admitted the cheap laborers from Russia and from Italy within her boundaries to work on the farms and even to dig ditches and sewers in the cities and to build subways. The bill we are considering is presented now largely at the demand of organized labor, in order to keep up to their present standard the living wages they are now receiving. But organized labor does not enter this field. It refuses to enter the field of work upon farms.

A great commission firm in the city of Chicago has just advised the raisers of sheep to feed their sheep to hogs. They are not valuable enough on the markets to be even manufactured into fertilizers. Farmers are selling corn at 50 cents a bushel and at less than that. With the high-priced labor they are compelled to employ, they are producing corn at a loss. This year farmers, unless they are relieved in some way, will produce wheat at a loss, as well as all kinds of bread grains. They are not organized. Their attempts to organize I am afraid will fail. But I want to tell you what they will do unless they can get cheaper labor on their farms. They can not compete in labor prices with the prices that are being paid by the great industries. You will find farmers, who are able to till a small part of their farms with their wives and their children, tilling their farms and producing sufficient foodstuffs for themselves, but just as little in addition to that as they possibly can. The farming industry is up against it in this country at the present time as no other industry is.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I ask this for information. If this amendment is adopted will it not put this cheap labor in competition with the farmer who with his family is trying to make a little money in addition to a living?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Certainly not. It gives him an opportunity to employ cheaper labor and produce something of a surplus for these high-priced laborers in our factories who are moving to keep up the high wages they are now receiving.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Would not the adoption of this amendment stimulate the exodus of the colored laborer from the South to the industrial centers?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I do not think so at all.

Mr. WALSH. Well, there has been, as the gentleman knows, quite a lively movement along that line.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I am aware of that. But the colored laborer of the South is not going to be employed in the skilled industries to any considerable extent.

Mr. WALSH. They are employed in large numbers in the city of Chicago.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. In the stockyards?

Mr. SABATH. They imported about 60,000 in the last few years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Remember that under this short-term extension you can bring the labor from Jamaica, Brazil, or Mexico, wherever you can find labor cheap enough to go to that employment.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Or in the Eskimo country at the north.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the Eskimo country, or in the island of Java, where there are 35,000,000 people.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Certainly. If the farmer is going to be compelled to produce foodstuffs, or is expected to do so. You can not compel him to do it; at the present price he must have cheap labor. My proposition will not interfere with organized labor in the least.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has the gentleman any information to the effect that the very thing that is setting central Europe on the move is the very thing that happens here, where the farmer draws into his shell and says, "I will raise only enough for myself"?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The farmer here will do that very thing. The farmer can not be compelled to be a philanthropist always. [Applause.] He can not be compelled always to work for nothing for the people who live in the cities. He can not be compelled always to work for these wage earners who are organized and who get $8 and $10 a day. He must have an opportunity to make something for himself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. What has produced this great movement in central Europe? As we get it, the farmers have done that thing, for the reason that their products have been taken by the cities or gobbled up by the army.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. My proposition is to bring them here and produce cheaper foodstuffs.

UMI

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What we got here up to September 30 was 2.8 per cent of farmers and about 3 per cent farm laborers. Even among those coming now are men who had once been jewelers or watchmakers, and so on, whose occupation is gone when the farmer draws in his business.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Oh, they bring in here farm laborers from Italy, the best farm laborers in the world; but the big industrial establishments gobble them up in New York as fast as they come—these industries which pay high wages that the farmer can not expect to pay.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. By what process will you be able to keep them on the farm when they come here?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. By the same process that you keep students in colleges who are to come here under this bill, and compel them to go back; by the same process that you now apply to criminal aliens when we want to get rid of them. There will be numerous people in the localities where they work who will know them and who will know all about them.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In order to relieve the farms you would have to have a large number of such farm laborers, and it would require a great army of people to keep track of them.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. It is a perfectly simple proposition. It was worked out in Germany under provisions exactly similar to this before the war, and it can be worked out here. The working or administrative sections of this very clause are sufficient to accomplish the fact that they can not engage in any other employment.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would not an employer of that labor fall under our peonage statute? If a man is compelled to engage in a certain occupation, would not the farmer who employed that man in that labor be subject to indictment and trial under the peonage law in the United States?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Certainly not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why not? If a man is compelled to labor or suffer a disadvantage if he does not continue in that occupation——

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. He is not compelled to labor by the farmer. He will come in here to work on a farm at his own volition. The farmer does not make him work.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not antagonistic to the gentleman's proposition. I am simply asking for information. If the laborer is compelled to stay in a particular employment or suffer disadvantage, is not that exactly what our courts have said constitutes peonage?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No. Let me ask my friend, for whose legal opinion I have great respect, this question: Who would be guilty of that offense?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, may I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will say to the gentleman that the laborer comes in by permission of the United States Government and under a contract with the United States Government to work at this employment and none other. The United States Government can not violate the peonage laws.

Mr. CARAWAY. Our friends amended the Constitution. Legislatures have proposed to meet that situation so as to provide that we could not compel the negro to work overtime. Now, in a situation where there is any kind of penalty attached to a man's quitting labor that he does not like there becomes a condition of enforced servitude. An act of a landlord attempting to make a man pay all his debts before he could remove his effects and quit the place of his employment has been held a violation of our peonage statute.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. It would not be possible for such a condition as the gentleman describes to occur in this case.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman's idea is that the farmer should have cheap labor in order that he might have a greater profit?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. In order that he might have some profit. He is not getting any now.

Mr. LAYTON. Some profit?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. In order to produce foodstuffs——

Mr. SABATH. And reduce the cost of living.

Mr. LAYTON. Do you think it possible in these United States to have a cheap class of labor upon the farm and high-priced labor in industrial pursuits?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Certainly; that is true. Wages vary now on the farms and in the industries. There are men in Pittsburgh who as laborers during the war got $1,000 a month. Of course, wages vary and always will vary.

Mr. LAYTON. During the war prices went up absolutely upon an equal plane, from the bootblack up.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; but they are not coming down on an equal plane.

Mr. LAYTON. But they will.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The farmer is getting the worst of it.

Mr. LAYTON. That is true, but other things will come down also.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the annual report of the Governor of the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
10 December, 1920.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. REED of West Virginia, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family (at the request of Mr. GOODYKOONTZ).

To Mr. BLACK, for 10 days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, for to-day, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. KLECZKA. I make the same request.

Mr. GARD. Is it understood that these requests relate to remarks on the pending bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair assumes so.

Mr. RAKER. I make the same request.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA], the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] ask leave to revise and extend their remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—MARTHA A. WADE.

Mr. MCKINLEY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Martha A. Wade (H. R. 11218, 66th Cong., 2d sess.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, December 11, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

185. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report as to the right of Stevens and Ferry Counties, in the State of Washington, to the payment of taxes on allotted Indian lands under existing law; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

186. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement from various bureaus and offices of the Treasury Department showing in detail what officers and employees performed travel on official business from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, December 11, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee with our daily tasks because we are engaged in a struggle for the supremacy of truth. We know that truth in its highest form emerges only as the result of human effort and human consecration. We turn to Thee praying Thee to give us the purpose of heart, to give us the spirit of endeavor and of consecration, that we may deliver the forces of our lives for the establishment of the truth here and everywhere. Save us from error. Save us from compromising with half truths. Give us the spirit of perfect consecration to the truth as it is in Jesus. We ask it in His name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL SOCIAL HYGIENE BOARD (H. DOC. NO. 892).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the United States Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board for the first fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

BONUS TO EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the average number of employees receiving the increased compensation of $240 per annum for the four months of the fiscal year 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Natrona County Stockgrowers' Association, at Casper, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation permitting honorably discharged soldiers and sailors be permitted to enter upon and take up 640 acres of the unoccupied public domain without residence or improvements, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EMBARGO OR TARIFF ON WOOL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, yesterday certain telegrams and letters in the way of petitions were presented regarding the sheep and wool industry of this country, among others the returns from the Chicago market on a very considerable shipment—some 2,000 or more head—of sheep which it seemed netted the producer only a fraction over 32 cents per head.

Wishing to ascertain something of the condition of the market elsewhere I wired yesterday to one of the large sheep-growing concerns in the West for their latest returns on mutton shipped to Kansas City, and I have in my hand a telegram in reply stating that the "net per head, ewes, was $1.22¼." That was the Kansas City market upon good sheep. The sheep-growing concern referred to, which has been many years in the business and which shipped these sheep, has been at an expense of from $7 to $12 a head in raising animals of that kind during the past few years.

While speaking of the market on mutton, I might as well mention the market, or rather lack of market, for wool. This same western concern received for its wool clip of 1919 a net return of two hundred and sixteen thousand and some odd dollars over and above all shipping and selling expenses. The clip from that same corporation is now lying in Boston, equally good, possibly better, and would not bring in the gross, from all the indications that I am enabled to secure, $100,000, and from this will have to be deducted something over $25,000 for transportation of the clip more than 2,000 miles, the commission percentages, storage, grading, and so forth. In other words, it would not bring at the present time more than about one-third of what it brought a year ago, even if it could be sold at all; and, of course, the expenses of raising the present year's clip have been higher than they ever were before.

I have a great many letters and telegrams respecting the extreme distress that prevails in the wool-growing industry. Of course there is some distress in the agricultural line as to all products, but these particular products—sheep and wool—seem to be the ones which suffer most and which will result, unless quick relief is afforded, in very many financial failures. The worst of it is that such failures are not confined altogether to the growers, but from documents that I have in hand, and many more in my office, bankers in those communities that are undertaking to carry these farmers through, as they have done before and as is usual in all parts of the country, are in deep trouble, and so they are sending in many of these petitions. I do not propose to burden the RECORD with any particular number, but I am going to read one or two expressions contained in some of them. I have one letter from an individual grower, a very conservative man, and from that I quote:

Am writing about the necessity for an embargo or temporary relief on wool at the present session of Congress. It seems to me that the Government owes us something after fixing wool prices at less than the market price during the war—and it seems to me that it would be to the advantage of the country at large to save this industry from absolute ruin. After having gone through the period of high wages and operating expenses, increased tremendously by the drought and hard winter, we have no market for wool on account of the foreign wool dumped in here with no tariff and the advantage to the importers of the present exchange rates, giving them a premium of some 30 per cent.

And that is a fact—

Here is a letter from a banker situated in the very heart of the wool-growing section——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question, if he will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator said that foreign wool has been dumped in here because we had no tariff. I will ask the Senator if he thinks that is the only reason why it has been dumped here?

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it not a fact that the chief reason why we have had the heavy importations of wool lies in the fact that the American market was able to take the surplus wool from abroad, while many other countries which had heretofore been the chief market for such wools were not in a condition to take them in the usual quantity?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is speaking in the right direction, but does not cover the entire ground. The wool was brought here very largely by the Government of the United States, which feared that the wool produced in this country, even though it were all absorbed, as it was absorbed at their own figures, would not carry them through. So they imported enough to keep the manufacturers busy in manufacturing the cloth needed by the Government, and were forehanded enough so that at the time the armistice came they had on hand some 600,000,000 pounds of wool, which was made up quite largely of wool brought from foreign countries, and which has very much helped to glut the market, since the War Department has engaged in wool selling almost continuously from that time.

As the Senator from North Carolina has said, this was a market where there was money for wool; there was an equally good market with the British Government. The British Government agreed to take the wool of all of the growers in its Provinces at an agreed price during the war, and until some years thereafter; in other words, until June 30, 1920.

Owing to high freights across the water and the good market here, the wool market was sustained until May last, when, in fact, it dropped nearly out of sight in value in almost the twinkling of an eye. Inside of 10 days wool that had started in transit on its way to reach a market about equal to that of last year found no market, and now lies dead in the eastern markets, while the cost of handling, owing to high cost of labor and advanced freight rates, and so forth, is greater than ever before.

I will read a quotation from the letter written by a banker. He says:

I have nothing to add to what you may know better than I do. The only purpose of this letter is, if possible, to add weight to the tide of current opinion in this country which would urge that immediate legislation be enacted to save the sheepmen and others from going broke. Many of them are badly crippled, and some are sure to fall. There has been something very far wrong in any system of government that immediately following a war setting up an almost exclusive barrier against foreign importations would permit not only the free importation of foreign wool but permit those wools to come in with a bonus to the foreign importers of an amount equal to the difference in exchange, which is now about 30 per cent, as I understand it.

The writer further says:

I do not think we could be accused of having been free and easy in the matter of loaning money last year, as at that time there was the usual 50 per cent margin. What I have said of the sheepmen applies more or less to the other branches of the live stock and farming industry. I do not know what is going to become of us unless there are early remedies applied.

Mr. President, I have only a word to add, and that is that the sheepmen, with all other producers, had expected lower prices for their products; they have, so far as they could, provided for a recession of prices; but there is nothing in history equal to the severe and crushing giving away of the wool market. As I have indicated, and as was brought out here yesterday, the same condition largely applies to the live-stock market. So to-day the grower of sheep, not being able to sell wool at all has to ship the live stock, has to go out of business, and put the sheep upon the market although they net him not much more than the freight, and his debt to the banker still confronts him.

Is that industry worth saving to the country? If it is worth saving something in the way of an embargo or of a measure equally effective and immediate, no matter how disagreeable or repugnant it may be to our ideas of ethics and the ordinary rule of legislation, must be enacted. It is an extremity in which this industry is appealing for immediate help, and the emergency is so acute as to be actually startling.

Of course we had very low prices and severe stress in this industry in 1893 and 1894, after we had had a season of free wool, but the condition which existed then came on more gradually and was nothing in comparison to the present distress. I want to indorse what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said yesterday, that this industry will absolutely perish unless some relief is soon afforded it.

An embargo for a few months against all receipts of wool from foreign countries could, it seems to me, hurt no one. Those countries have large stocks of wool for home consumption. So have we. And while prices might not be greatly increased wool could be sold for home consumption and the congestion would thus be relieved.

I send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Finance certain letters, many of them being from bankers, which I have received.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communications will be received and referred.

Mr. WARREN presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Mr. G. C. Muirhead, president of the Stockgrowers' State Bank, of Worland, Wyo., favoring an embargo or restoration of the tariff on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram and letter in the nature of a petition from Hon. John Clay, of Clay, Robinson & Co., of Chicago, Ill., favoring an embargo or restoration of the tariff on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Mr. E. P. Heald, Cody, Wyo., favoring an embargo or restoration of the tariff on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from James T. Elliott, editor of the Sheep and Goat Raisers' Magazine, San Angelo, Tex., favoring an embargo or restoration of the tariff on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Hon. A. H. Marble, president of the Stock Growers' National Bank, of Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring an embargo or restoration of the tariff on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Mr. Roscoe M. Wood, member of the executive committee of the National Wool Growers' Association, of Douglas, Wyo., favoring an embargo or restoration of the duty on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Hon. Ira B. Casteel, vice president of the Stock Yards National Bank, Denver, Colo., favoring an embargo or restoration of the tariff on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 397), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended March 1, 1919, transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, pursuant to law, be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

JOHN SULLIVAN—CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. MOSES. I move that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4513) to correct the military record of John Sullivan and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The reference was made by error.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4601) for the relief of Lewis Myshrall; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 4602) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern judicial district of the State of West Virginia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 4603) extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.," approved October 5, 1917; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 4604) granting a pension to Lewis V. Boyle (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4605) granting a pension to Gilbert Adams; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 4606) to amend section 24 and section 256 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary; and

A bill (S. 4607) to provide compensation for maritime workers of the United States suffering injuries while in the service of merchant vessels of the United States, their owners, or charterers, and for the dependents of such maritime workers in case of death, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4608) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 27, 1916, and section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4609) to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4611) to establish and maintain a forest experiment station in the Southern States; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and

A bill (S. 4612) for the relief of Harold Kernan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4613) to establish in the Interior Department a bureau of veteran reestablishment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, Mr. William P. Eno, of this city, has for many years given especial attention to traffic regulation in large cities and has been instrumental in bringing about many reforms. He has recently prepared a bill relating to the same subject in the District of Columbia. So, at his request, I introduce a bill, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 4610) to provide standard general highway traffic regulations and adequate special highway traffic regulations for the District of Columbia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

NET EARNINGS OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

Mr. STERLING. I introduce a joint resolution, and, because of the importance of the subject and its immediate interest, I ask unanimous consent that it may be read.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 222), relating to the use of the net earnings derived by the United States from the Federal reserve banks in the years 1921 and 1922, being the earnings accrued and accruing during the years 1920 and 1921, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 222) relating to the use of net earnings derived by the United States from the Federal reserve banks in the years 1921 and 1922, being the earnings accrued and accruing during the years 1920 and 1921.

Whereas it is anticipated that the net earnings derived by the United States from the Federal reserve banks during the years 1921 and 1922, being the earnings accrued and accruing during the years 1920 and 1921, will exceed $100,000,000;

Whereas such earnings are derived from interest charges collected from the borrowing public; and

Whereas it is deemed to be in the public interest at this time that such earnings should not be withdrawn from the use of productive industry; and

Whereas there is a scarcity of credit for the orderly marketing of farm products and the production of live stock: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may use not to exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000 of the net earnings which shall be derived by the United States from the Federal reserve banks during the years 1921 and 1922, being the earnings accrued and accruing during the years 1920 and 1921, as hereinafter provided:

Immediately upon the receipt by the Treasury in 1921 of such net earnings for the year 1920, and the receipt in 1922 of such net earnings for the year 1921, the Secretary of the Treasury shall advise the Federal Farm Loan Board of the amount available for the purposes hereinafter designated, and the Federal Farm Loan Board shall thereupon immediately allot the same to the several Federal land bank districts in proportion to the needs of such districts for the purposes described.

The sums so allotted to the several Federal land bank districts shall, upon the request of the Federal land bank of any district, approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board, be placed with such Federal land bank as financial agent of the Government of the United States, to be used for the purpose of purchasing paper based on staple agricultural products or live stock.

Any Federal land bank, as such financial agent, may purchase, in the name of the Government of the United States, with the funds so deposited from banks within its district, whether members of the Federal Reserve System or not, paper based on staple agricultural products in the hands of the producer or on live stock, according to regulations to be prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

No loan purchased under this act and based on agricultural products shall be for a period longer than nine months, and no loan based on live stock shall be for a period longer than two years.

No Federal land bank shall purchase from any bank, under the provisions of this act, paper in an amount greater than three times the capital and surplus of the selling bank, nor shall any paper be purchased from any bank located in a reserve city.

All loans purchased under the provisions of this act shall be indorsed and guaranteed unconditionally by the bank selling the same to the Federal land bank.

Loans purchased under the provisions of this act shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable in advance, if the loan be for a period of six months or less; if for a longer period than six months, payable semiannually in advance, but any borrower, under the provisions of this act, may be charged for the expenses incident to his loan a sum to be approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board, not exceeding an amount equal to 2 per cent per annum for the period of the loan, of which 1½ per cent may be retained by the indorsing bank and one-half of 1 per cent by the Federal land bank making the loan.

No loan shall be purchased by any Federal land bank, under the provisions of this act, which exceeds 85 per cent of the cash value of the staple agricultural products or live stock by which such loan is secured.

Any paper purchased by any Federal land bank, as herein authorized, may be by such bank renewed or extended wholly or in part and the proceeds of any paper collected may be by the proper Federal land bank reinvested as herein authorized: Provided, No paper shall be so renewed, nor shall any loan be so made as to create a maturity later than January 1, 1924.

The several Federal land banks shall so administer the trust as financial agents of the Government as to complete their transactions hereunder as near as may be by January 1, 1924, and shall forthwith thereafter account for and pay over to the Treasury all moneys collected, both principal and interest.

Such money when paid into the Treasury shall be subject to the uses prescribed by the second paragraph of section 7 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, for the net earnings derived by the United States from Federal reserve banks.

EXCLUSION OF ALIENS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment proposing to prohibit for five years the immigration of aliens to the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN CLAIMS.

Mr. HARRISON submitted an amendment proposing to refer to the Court of Claims the cases of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians, arising under or growing out of any treaty stipulation or agreement with the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10105) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to extend the time for suspending the law during the year 1921, which requires that $100 worth of labor be performed on all mining claims of the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 216) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed.

THE WOOL INDUSTRY.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, some attention was given on yesterday morning to the question of the appropriate committee for the consideration of the so-called embargo bill. Since then my attention has been called to the bill introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] which is a bill (S. 4557) to provide revenue and to maintain the wool-producing and manufacturing industries of the United States in a condition of preparedness for national requirements.

It was the opinion of the Senator from Utah that the bill should appropriately go to the Committee on Finance, and I have not been understood as offering any objection to that reference, but the Senator will observe that the title of the bill characterizes it as a bill to raise revenue, and it purports to amend the revenue act. Now, if it is such, of course, this body has no jurisdiction over the subject at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that the reason why I introduced the bill was because it might be possible to agree with Members of the House that whichever body could act first should do so. It does change and will necessarily change the revenue law because of the fact that manufacturers of woolen goods are involved, upon which there is a duty, and it repeals certain sections of the law and necessarily will have to do so.

I am not going to push its consideration in the Senate, if after conference to-day with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House he desires that the House shall act first. I shall not ask for any action upon it here in that event, but if after that conference he has no objection to it or there is no objection upon the part of Members of the House, to hasten the matter, I shall ask that it be considered by this body, although the bill does not raise revenue, but prevents the collection of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is not really the matter to which I have desired to direct the attention of the Senator. Of course, the Senator must expect that in this body there will be some opposition to the measure, and anyone opposing the measure in this body may immediately arise and assert, and he must be sustained, that this body has no jurisdiction whatever over the subject, and we can not get consideration for the measure at all in this body. So I suggest, in the interest of expedition, that the Senator consider whether the bill is really a measure for raising revenue.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not raise revenue. The bill is to amend the act that is recited in the title of the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If that is the case, then there is no use in this body doing anything at all about it. Indeed, we can not do anything about it until the House of Representatives acts. My own opinion about the matter is that the Senator is in error on that point. The Constitution provides that bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. We do not propose to raise any revenue; we propose to prevent revenue from being raised; and therefore my own opinion about the matter is that the bill is not a bill of which the House of Representatives has original and exclusive jurisdiction. But I suggest to the Senator that the form in which the bill is prepared lends much strength to the argument that it is such, and accordingly that this body has no jurisdiction.

Mr. SMOOT. That question will be discussed if it is decided to bring the bill before the Senate for action before action is taken in the House. I rather agree, and have stated so in the Committee on Finance, that the position just taken by the Senator from Montana is the correct one, and it will be discussed, and I shall take the same position as the Senator if the question is raised. I do not want to have any feeling between the Senate and the House, and therefore I have asked for the conference to which I have referred. That conference will take place to-day. The Senator, I think, has the same idea that I have in relation to the necessity for the legislation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suggest to the Senator that if he introduce a bill embracing just the last two lines of his bill, namely, "the importation of wool, manufactures of wool, wool wastes, and wool on the pelt are hereby prohibited," that is all he needs. If he will refer that bill to some committee other than the Committee on Finance this body might then, it seems to me, appropriately proceed to consider it. If we find, then, any differences arise between the House and the Senate those could be very readily adjusted and the Senator could go on with the consideration of the matter in this body. But it occurs to me that we will not be permitted to take a step under the bill introduced by the Senator as it stands now.

Mr. SMOOT. I think otherwise. I think that if we get this legislation enacted into law we must not antagonize the House, and therefore I am going to take every precaution that I can to see that there is no difference between the two bodies.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is my purpose, and I suggest to the Senator that he is precipitating it by this course.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the suggestion of the Senator would meet the same objection that the bill I have introduced has met. The bill which I have introduced simply covers the situation and explains in detail just what the legislation is.

REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it will be recalled that under article 8 of the covenant of the League of Nations the council is charged with the duty of preparing plans for the reduction of armaments, to be submitted by it to the various Governments for their consideration and action. The council has entrusted to a commission created by it the work of drafting such a plan, to be submitted to it, and when approved by it—if it shall be approved—to the various governments.

The commission, proceeding with its work, immediately encountered the embarrassing fact that the United States was not in any manner represented. Obviously no plan for a reduction of armaments could receive the approval of the other great powers of the earth unless the United States joined in the plan, a consummation to be wished but not likely to be reached unless it should participate in the formulation of the plan; and, the situation being presented to the council, an invitation was sent by it to the Government of the United States to send a representative to sit with the commission thus created by the council when it should consider such, such representative to act in a consultative capacity.

To this invitation the President of the United States sent a letter declining, in the course of which he said:

> The President of the United States is deeply interested in this question and is most desirous of cooperating to this end, but as the Government of the United States is not a member of the league he does not feel justified in appointing a commission to take even a de facto participation in the deliberations of the council or of the commission acting on behalf of the council in the execution of provisions in the covenant of the League of Nations.

That appears to me to be an utterly inadequate reason for not sending a representative from this country to engage in this great work. To me it appears to be a matter of entire indifference in connection with the effort thus inaugurated, whether we are or are not members of the League of Nations. The great powers other than the united nations are engaged in what appears to be a bona fide effort to bring about a reduction of armaments. I can see no reason why we should not participate in that effort.

I feel not only that the position taken is utterly inadequate to justify a determination not to participate, but that it will be regarded by the world as so inadequate and indefensible that the conclusion will naturally be indulged that we declined for some reason other than that which is thus stated, and it is an easy step from that to the conclusion that we do not desire to participate in the movement because we are opposed to any plan for a general reduction of armaments, and from that to the conclusion that we are opposed to any reduction in armaments because we have imperialistic designs, calculated to excite suspicion in the minds of the people of many of the nations of the earth. That, to my mind, would be an utterly unjust and unfounded suspicion. I know the people of the United States harbor no such purposes, and I am entirely convinced that they have never receded from the position which they have long maintained, that there ought to be a general plan arrived at by all the great powers for a reduction of armaments.

Mr. President, we are advised that the estimates for the Army and Navy of the United States for the current year mount to the almost inconceivable sum of a billion and a half dollars. If there were no other reason, the condition of the world at the present time would give force to the suggestion that a reduction ought to be accomplished in order to relieve the labor of the world from the ever-mounting cost of armaments.

The position of the United States upon this subject has often been expressed. I refer to the last formal expression, found in the Naval appropriation act of 1916, from which I read as follows:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to adjust and settle its international disputes through mediation or arbitration, to the end that war may be honorably avoided. It looks with apprehension and disfavor upon a general increase of armament throughout the world, but it realizes that no single nation can disarm, and that without a common agreement upon the subject every considerable power must maintain a relative standing in military strength.
> In view of the premises, the President is authorized and requested to invite, at an appropriate time, not later than the close of the war in Europe, all the great Governments of the world to send representatives to a conference which shall be charged with the duty of formulating a plan for a court of arbitration or other tribunal, to which disputed questions between nations shall be referred for adjudication and peaceful settlement, and to consider the question of disarmament and submit their recommendation to their respective Governments for approval. The President is hereby authorized to appoint nine citizens of the United States, who, in his judgment, shall be qualified for the mission by eminence in the law and by devotion to the cause of peace, to be representatives of the United States in such a conference. The President shall fix the compensation of said representatives, and such secretaries and other employees as may be needed. Two hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and set aside and placed at the disposal of the President to carry into effect the provisions of this paragraph.

Mr. President, I can very readily understand how, in view of events that have transpired within the past year and a half, the President of the United States should have made such a reply. I dare say that if he had sent a representative in accordance with the courteous invitation extended by the council of the league, it would be charged upon many hands that it was another effort upon his part to force us into the League of Nations and that he was, despite what has transpired, actually participating in its deliberations. I undertake to say that if the great powers of the earth had, without reference to the council, extended an invitation to the United States to send a representative to meet representatives sent by them for the purpose of considering a reduction in armaments, no one would be heard to urge that such an invitation should be declined. What is the difference if they choose to send the invitation through the council of the League of Nations, they to be represented by their delegates to the council rather than by representatives selected for that specific work?

But, Mr. President, the Senate of the United States, as I conceive it, has a duty in this matter as well as the President of the United States. This body is a necessary and integral part of the treaty-making power. We can not fail, as it seems to me, to take cognizance of this invitation extended to the Government of the United States to participate in this effort to accomplish a reduction in armaments.

Accordingly, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 308) was read, as follows:

Whereas pursuant to article 8 of the covenant of the League of Nations, wherein it is recited that "the members of the league recognize that the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations," the council of the league has appointed a commission with authority to formulate plans for such reduction, to be, when approved by the said council, submitted for the consideration and action of the several Governments; and

Whereas it is reported that the said commission labors under some embarrassment in its work by reason of the fact that the United States is not represented either on the said commission or the said council; and

Whereas the people of the United States have long hoped for some international agreement for the reduction of armaments, not only to preserve peace but that the labor of the world may not be unnecessarily burdened with the ever-mounting cost of maintaining armed forces in accordance with the policy of the powers in the past; and

Whereas the said council of the League of Nations has addressed to the President of the United States a communication inviting it to designate a representative to sit with such commission in a consultative capacity during the study by the commission of the question of the reduction of armaments: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to express to the council of the League of Nations the earnest desire of the Government of the United States to cooperate with the commission so by the said council appointed and with the said council in the formulation of plans looking to a general reduction of armaments, for submission to the several Governments for their consideration and action, and that he be, and he hereby is, further requested promptly to designate, with due authority, such representative.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, just one word touching the second request of the resolution, namely, that a representative be designated by the President to participate in the discussions as requested. I should like very much, indeed, if favorable action is taken on the resolution, to have it so arranged that the nomination by the President should be sent to the Senate for confirmation. I am not sure that that can be accomplished, although I daresay it can, and I want to suggest the means by which it can be done.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this seems to be a resolution of very great importance, and I think it ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It was my purpose, of course, to ask that it go there.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon; I did not know that that was the purpose of the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Constitution gives to the President of the United States power to make treaties by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Our practice is that the initial negotiations are with him. He may conduct them in person or he may designate some representative to act for him. The discussions to be entered upon would be in the nature of negotiations for a treaty, and I think it is understood by the world now that no agreement of the kind proposed can be entered into by the United States only upon the advice and consent of the Senate, two-thirds of its members concurring. It has been the practice for the President to designate, without the concurrence of the Senate, negotiators of treaties. That practice was followed in the negotiation of the treaty of Ghent. It was challenged at the time, but the validity of the exercise of such power by the President I believe has never since been seriously questioned.

Notwithstanding that, Mr. President, in the particular circumstances which confront us, I should like to have the matter considered carefully by both Houses of Congress, and to see taken the judgment of both on the proposition as to whether we ought not to meet in the most hospitable spirit any proffer coming from any responsible quarter of an opportunity to join in arranging a plan for the reduction of armaments.

The expression to be desired might be accomplished by a bill providing for the appointment of negotiators, substantially like the provisions of the act of 1916, to which I have adverted. If the suggestion is deemed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to be of any value, its recommendation can be made accordingly. That is, I desire primarily to test the temper of both Houses of Congress with respect to disarmament—essential, I believe, to the salvation industrially of the world.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that this is a joint resolution?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; it is a Senate resolution. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; I also ask that the invitation extended by the council of the league and the reply of the President of the United States thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, December 6, 1920.]

UNITED STATES "CONSULTANT" INVITED ON LEAGUE'S WAR BOARD—STATE DEPARTMENT UNDECIDED ON ACCEPTING GENEVA PROFFER TO SEAT AMERICAN ON MILITARY COMMISSION.

The League of Nations at Geneva has transmitted to the State Department an official invitation to name American representatives to sit in a "consultative" capacity on the permanent military, naval, and air commission of the league.

It was announced at the State Department last night that the Government had not as yet made up its mind what its eventual attitude toward the proposal would be. A high authority in the department expressed the opinion that as the United States is not a member of the league it was hardly likely to avail itself of an opportunity to participate even "consultatively" in a league commission.

The communication telegraphed by M. Hymans, president of the council, reads:

"The council of the League of Nations, acting on a unanimous recommendation of the permanent military, naval, and air commission of the league, passed at its meeting in Geneva on November 25, invites the Government of the United States to name representatives to sit on that commission in a consultative capacity during the study by the commission of the question of the reduction of armaments, a study which the council has requested the commission to undertake forthwith.

"The permanent advisory commission was constituted by the council of the league at its meeting in Rome last May and held its first session at San Sebastian in August. The commission is at present composed of military, naval, and aerial officers of States represented on the council of the league. Its decisions are purely advisory and not in any sense binding, but they represent the common technical judgment of the experts of many countries.

"It would, of course, be perfectly understood that the presence of the representatives of the United States would in no way commit the American Government to whatever opinions may be finally put forward in the report of the commission. Nor indeed can that report itself be more than a basis for the consideration by the members of the league of the measures of reductions in armaments which united action may enable them to achieve. Nevertheless, just as in the case of the financial conference at Brussels the presence of an American representative, whose function was only that of giving and receiving information, was an important factor in the success of the work of the conference, so it can not be doubted that the general consideration of the subject of the reduction of armaments will be greatly facilitated if the Government of the United States can see its way to be represented in a similar manner at the meetings of the permanent advisory commission.

"The problem is one to which public opinion in all countries attaches the highest importance.

"It is unnecessary to point out that the reduction of armaments is essential for the well-being of the world and that unless some measures of relief can be found by international cooperation for the excessive taxation due to armaments the general economic situation must become increasingly worse.

"The council in extending this invitation can not but hope that the Government of the United States, particularly in view of the attitude of America toward the question of the competition in armaments, will not refuse to associate itself with the Governments of the members of the league in beginning the preliminary work necessary for ultimate success and to lend to the present effort an assistance which can in no way encroach upon its own perfect liberty of action."

WILSON DECLINES LEAGUE INVITATION—TELLS COUNCIL HE DOESN'T FEEL JUSTIFIED IN NAMING DISARMAMENT ENVOYS—BARRED BY NONMEMBERSHIP—PRESIDENT DECLARES UNITED STATES IS IN SYMPATHY WITH PLANS OF COMMISSION.

[By the Associated Press.]

President Wilson yesterday declined the invitation of the League of Nations to send delegates to take part in the discussions of the disarmament commission.

The President informed the League of Nations council that inasmuch as the United States was not a member of the league he did not feel justified in appointing a commission "to take even a de facto participation."

The United States, however, the President declares, is in sympathy with any plan for world disarmament.

SENDS REPLY TO HYMANS.

The reply was transmitted yesterday through the State Department to Paul Hymans, president of the council. It follows:

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your cablegram of December 1 inviting the Government of the United States to name representatives to sit with the military, naval, and air commissions of the league in a consultative capacity during the discussion by the commission on the reduction of armaments, the consideration of which is to be undertaken by it forthwith at the request and on behalf of the council.

ADMITS A DEEP INTEREST.

"The Government of the United States is most sympathetic with any sincere effort to evolve a constructive plan for disarmament, which is necessary for the economic rehabilitation, peace, and stability of the world. The President of the United States is deeply interested in this question and is most desirous of cooperating to this end, but as the Government of the United States is not a member of the league he does not feel justified in appointing a commission to take even a de facto participation in the deliberations of the council or of the commission acting on behalf of the council in the execution of provisions in the covenant of the League of Nations."

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. On yesterday, before adjournment, the unfinished business, Senate bill 3944, was laid before the Senate, with the understanding that the War Finance Corporation joint resolution should be taken up. I therefore ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily so that Senate joint resolution 212 may be taken up for consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not had time to discuss this joint resolution with the chairman of the committee, and I am going to take just a few minutes of the Senate's time to call his attention to section 2 of the joint resolution.

I can not conceive why section 2 is in this joint resolution, and there are certain expressions in it which I know it is impossible to interpret. I can not see why the Senate should undertake to direct the Federal Reserve Board, by language which no one can understand and will not tend to secure the object the Senator introducing the joint resolution had in mind. For instance, it says, "That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby directed to take such action as may be necessary."

That is a broad expression, Mr. President; who knows what will be necessary; and I do not know of any direction in the past by Congress to any agency of the Government couched in such words.

Then it proceeds to say:

To permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking.

Another very strange expression to be enacted into law.

Following that it says, "by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at the lowest possible rate of interest." If that were interpreted by the Federal Reserve Board literally, it would be 1 per cent or less. Section 2, it seems to me, will not clarify things, but will bring into the law expressions which it will be impossible for members of the board to follow.

I can not see any reason for section 2 to reach just what the committee has in view; that is, to revive the War Finance Corporation. If it is revived, then the act creating the corporation will be in force, and that provides just what the corporation can do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Idaho will pardon me a moment, the Senator from Utah has failed to read that portion of the paragraph which is vital, and that is the language, "in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking."

Mr. SMOOT. I read that.

Mr. GRONNA. Can the Senator imagine any language more definite than that particular language?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. If the Senator had said, "in accordance with law" and left out the words "and consistent with sound banking," it would have been understood by all. What is deemed "consistent with sound banking"?

Mr. BORAH. That is the question I wanted to ask.

Mr. SMOOT. One man may say one thing, another man may say another, and I do not see how we can direct the Federal Reserve Board to proceed in a way that will be "consistent with sound banking."

What we ought to do, if we are going to direct them to do anything, is to say positively what we want them to do; and I think that "in accordance with law" is sufficient, because I do not believe they have any right, nor should they have, to proceed in any other way than in accordance with law. When this corporation is revived, then the act creating the War Finance Corporation will be in force again, and they will operate under that law. I think that is all the Senator wants.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, I can assure the Senator from Utah that it would be very satisfactory to me to strike out the language "consistent with sound banking," if the Senator from Utah is satisfied with the language, "in accordance with law." I shall not now take the time of the Senate or speak further in the Senator's time, but I had assumed that any man who had had anything whatever to do with banking would at all times know what "sound banking" means.

Mr. SMOOT. There are men appointed on boards and commissions in the departments who never before in their lives followed the business which they are appointed to handle. I do not believe that any man ought to use his judgment as to what sound banking might be, if it conflicts in any way with the law.

Mr. GRONNA. There can be many theories, but there can be only one practice or method of sound banking, and no one knows that better than the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, it seems to me that the only thing to do is to strike out section 2. Perhaps it will shorten this discussion, as far as I am concerned, if the Senator will really tell me why section 2 is in this joint resolution. What is the object of it?

Mr. GRONNA. The object of section 2 is this: That the committee recognized, as every Senator will recognize, that some of this relief must come with the cooperation of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SMOOT. They can only do it under the law.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, a careful reading of the War Finance Corporation act will show that it is exactly in compliance with the law. The Senator will upon reflection see that it is nowhere in opposition to or in violation of the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act.

Mr. SMOOT. If section 2 becomes a law, can the Federal Reserve Board do more than they can now do under the law?

Mr. GRONNA. It is more of a suggestion. As the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] so well said yesterday, the first section is absolutely mandatory. Section 2 is a very helpful suggestion——

Mr. SMOOT. I am not criticizing section 1.

Mr. GRONNA. Because every business man knows that much valuable relief can be given through the Federal Reserve Board cooperating with the War Finance Corporation. Nobody knows that better than the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I expect, Mr. President, that both those agencies will act along the line that is provided by the laws which are upon the statute books. All the Senator wants to do is to revive the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. GRONNA. That is one of the objects.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires to do more than that, then this joint resolution is not sufficient. When the War Finance Corporation is revived, then it finds its power in the act approved April 5, 1918, by which the corporation was created. In this joint resolution we are not giving them any more power.

Mr. GRONNA. No.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing here that is giving more power to the Federal Reserve Board than they have under existing law. Therefore it seems to me that what the Senator wants to do is to revive the War Finance Corporation, and not say anything about the Federal Reserve Board, unless you want to amend the act creating it.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not the intention of the committee, so far as I know, to make any amendment to that law, nor do the provisions of this joint resolution amend the law in any respect, neither the original law nor the amendment which was enacted on March 3, 1919, which of course extended the jurisdiction of the War Finance Corporation to do business with foreign nations, as the Senator well knows. I have not had the time to confer with the other members of the committee, but so far as I am personally concerned I have no objection to striking out the language "and consistent with sound banking." However, I do insist that section 2 is material and important, and I would not be willing to strike it out.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I shall certainly offer an amendment to strike out section 2 of the joint resolution when the time comes. I do not think for a moment that when the attention of Senators is called to it they will insist upon section 2 remaining in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, I think the main object of this section is to call the attention of the Federal Reserve Board to the high rate of rediscount obtaining now, and to the necessity, as a great many see it, of lowering the rate of rediscount on this class of paper, under the power which they have under the law. It is not without precedent that that is sought to be done, because in 1914 and 1915 the Federal Reserve Board gave a preferential rate to agricultural paper. It did it for the benefit of the country, and it resulted in benefit to the country.

Mr. SMOOT. It was done under the existing law.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It was done under the existing law. I think myself that perhaps the language "in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking" might be left out, and, going right to the heart of the matter, which is to give a preferential rate to agricultural paper, the section should read, just leaving out any reference to sound banking principles or "in accordance with law," as follows:

That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby directed to take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them, by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at the lowest possible rate of interest.

The Senator must remember that the rate of rediscount now is 6 per cent, and in North Carolina the usury rate is 6 per cent, so that a bank in North Carolina could not rediscount a dollar at Richmond. According to the Comptroller of the Currency the resources of the banks of the country are $53,000,000,000. We all know that there is money enough in this country and brains enough in this country to bridge the chasm between us and the nations of Europe, who need our commodities, and to get the securities that would be necessary to move our products from this country abroad; but the man who has the products is the man who has not the organization and the capital to relieve the situation, and the man who has not got them generally wants them to go down. That is the situation, and that is what we are trying to obviate now.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the object of section 2, why not express it so that everyone will understand it? Section 2 does not say that at all. If that is what we want to do, we ought to amend the law and say that the rate of interest shall not be above a certain percentage.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me to make a further observation, the law allows them now to use discretion in their rates of interest on certain classes of paper. Why, even the merchant dealing in the wool of the West and the cattle of the West and the cotton of the South is absolutely or practically without a market, not because there is not a potential demand, but because everybody has lost faith, because the word went out, "Deflate, deflate," and certain loans were called; and the intricate relations of all the business of this country are such that you can not vitally affect one without affecting every one. When you began to knock your ninepins down they all went down.

Why should we not say directly that it is the judgment of Congress that we should extend a preferential rate to the fundamental business upon which this country rests—agriculture?

Mr. SMOOT. The law now gives that right, and if we are going to change it let us say what we want them to do and not infer by language that they can act in any way they want to. The law now gives them the right to make different rates.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The law now is for the War Finance Corporation to operate, but it is not operating, and we are directing it to operate.

Mr. SMOOT. You are rehabilitating that, and there is a question about its power to function.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is still the law.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a question about that. There is no need of going into that, because I think the Senate is pretty well convinced of the need for the rehabilitation of that corporation; but section 2 is an entirely different proposition. It has been stated upon the floor of the Senate that as a result of section 1 and the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation the corporation will not sell more bonds. If they are not going to sell more bonds nothing will come from the passage of this resolution. The War Finance Corporation will go into the market immediately and sell their bonds, and that is what we all understand they will do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me again, I do not know that the second section is so vital if the other functions according to its purpose and intent. But I do know that the rate of rediscount on commercial paper in this country now was raised to a point where it is for the express purpose of contracting the currency. Now that, in conjunction with the widespread propaganda, was the expressed policy of our Federal Reserve officials, that we must deflate, but perhaps they got the terms "deflation" and "expansion" mixed in their minds. However, whatever was their purpose they have accomplished it—there is no doubt about that—to the bankruptcy of the country.

We thought one of the elements that had entered in was their lack of inspiring confidence along certain fundamental lines, namely, the agricultural interests, and in expressing a preferential rate toward them and toward certain other things that might not be as necessary we would not only render real material aid but inspire confidence, the Government recognizing the fact that the agricultural interests of this country were the bedrock upon which everything rests, and that the prosperity of agriculture means our prosperity and its ruin our ruin. That is the object, I think, of section 2.

Mr. SMOOT. No matter how much I may desire to see section 1 passed, I do not want to make any statement upon the floor of the Senate that would not be justified. We have heard much about the deflation of currency. We have had no deflation of currency to the present time.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question for my own enlightenment? I know the Senator has given a great deal of consideration to this subject. I find from some figures which have been furnished me that New York City banks have on deposit from country banks at this time $1,021,211,022. That is money drawn from the country which ought to be out doing the service of the country. Does the Senator know of any method under the present law by which that condition of affairs could be remedied?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the law of each State requires that its banks shall have a certain percentage of their deposits on hand. No bank keeps the full percentage in its vault. Such banks deposit a part of their reserves in the New York banks and receive from 2 to 2½ per cent on their daily balances. The interest received is one reason they keep it there. Not only that, they keep credits in New York banks in order that they may issue drafts to their customers to pay their debts for eastern purchases and carry on all sorts of transactions that occur in all parts of the country. A New York draft is taken in San Francisco; it is taken in Kansas City; it is taken in Chicago; it is taken everywhere; and nearly every bank in the United States of any size keeps an account with the New York banks and receives 2 to 2½ per cent on their daily balances. That is one reason the money is held in New York, I will say to the Senator. If they had this money now in the banks in New York out in their own vaults, they could not lend any more of it than they are lending now, because of the very fact that the law requires that they shall keep a certain percentage of their deposits on hand.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator contend that the law requires that they shall keep this amount on hand?

Mr. SMOOT. The amount that is named, and a great deal more, in my opinion, I will say to the Senator. I do not think there is a bank now in the United States that has very much more on hand than the law requires. They are loaned down as low as at any time in the history of the country.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I think I must have misunderstood the Senator from Utah if he contends that there is any law, National or State, that compels any bank to keep a balance in any correspondent bank in New York City.

Mr. SMOOT. I never made such a statement.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Idaho asked why the money was in New York.

Mr. SMOOT. And I told the Senator why it was in New York.

Mr. GLASS. I do not think the Senator from Utah was exactly accurate in his statement.

Mr. SMOOT. What did the Senator from Utah say?

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps I did not hear the Senator fully.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Virginia did not understand what the Senator from Utah said.

Mr. BORAH. What I would like to know from some one who knows is why all this money is congested in New York City, where, we are informed, they are using it in large measure for purely speculative purposes and dealing in a class of securities which does not help the country in a crisis like this. This money seems to be used largely for loans on call at a very high rate of interest and for a class of business which serves the country in times like these very little indeed.

Mr. GLASS. I understood the answer of the Senator from Utah to be that it was drawn there by the payment of a low rate of interest on deposits. As a matter of fact it is drawn there to be loaned out as call money at a very high rate of interest.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the Senator from Utah said, and the Senator from Utah knows what he is talking about——

Mr. GLASS. I do not deny that at all. Perhaps I did not understand the Senator from Utah aright.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the Senator from Utah said. The Senator from Utah said that most of the banks in the intermountain country, in the West, and in the Middle West as well, maintain an account in the banks in New York City and the amount that is deposited in New York is a part of the percentage of their deposits that is necessary to keep on hand. The reasons why banks deposit money in New York are twofold. One is that they must have funds in New York to issue drafts against the same to their customers to meet their customers' obligations and——

Mr. GLASS. For which there is no use at all under the Federal Reserve System, and the money kept in New York by the country banks is not there as a part of the legal requirements of the money on hand. That was all changed by the Federal reserve act. The money required to be kept on hand and deposited is kept with the Federal reserve banks and not with the New York banks or any other banks except the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. SMOOT. I know what we do in our banks. I know we count it as a part of the reserve; and I know other banks do it, so there is no need of discussing it.

Mr. GLASS. They have no right to count it.

Mr. SMOOT. I know they count it as a part of their reserve.

Mr. GLASS. They are not permitted under the law to count deposits with correspondent banks as a part of their reserve.

Mr. SMOOT. Not for the Federal reserve bank, but they are permitted to do so as to the amount of money on deposit that the States by law require, and I said that was under the State law, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will sustain me in that statement.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator may be correct.

Mr. McLEAN. May I ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] if this statement which he has just read referred to the Federal reserve banks and member banks or all of the banks of the country?

Mr. BORAH. This is given to me as the amount of money on deposit in New York City banks by the country banks.

Mr. McLEAN. Very likely the 20,000 banks that are not in the system would account for a large portion of those deposits.

Mr. BORAH. In addition to that, the banks of eight of the large cities in the United States have on deposit in country banks $1,977,460,000. You see where the money of the country is. It is congested in these money centers, and the very object of the Federal Reserve System was to prevent that condition of affairs. The fact is that the Federal Reserve System does not seem to be operating as it was intended to operate. It looks like there was undue influence in some quarters. I trust I am in error, but this is not a healthy condition of affairs.

Mr. McLEAN. So far as the Federal Reserve System is concerned, I think the Senator will find that the reserves of the member banks are being deposited of course in the Federal reserve banks, and these reserves are kept there, and the eastern Federal reserve banks are now lending very largely to the southern and western banks, and there is no concentration of currency in New York.

Mr. BORAH. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I have the loans also which accompany this proposition to the country banks, and it makes very little difference in the sum total of the figures.

Mr. McLEAN. According to Gov. Harding's statement before the Committee on Agriculture on this very matter, the southern and western banks are now borrowing large sums from the eastern banks. The western banks are borrowing very largely from the eastern banks belonging to the Federal Reserve System. That was Gov. Harding's testimony.

While I am on my feet I want to say to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that section 2 of this joint resolution is absurd, in my opinion.

Mr. SMOOT. It is perfectly absurd.

Mr. McLEAN. There is no question about that. It does not attempt to add one dollar to the reserves of the Federal reserve banks or of the member banks. When we pass a law directing the Federal Reserve Board to do all that may be necessary to extend credits to the farmers at the lowest possible rate of interest, we direct them to do what can not be done, unless we provide some way by which the reserves in those banks may be increased.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Utah will allow me, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency a question. In reference to the tremendous loans, which appear on paper, to the agricultural districts, South and West, East and North, I desire to ask, Has the Senator from Connecticut any way of ascertaining how much of these so-called loans are bond accounts, transferred to commercial accounts and rated now, in contradiction of promises, as commercial accounts, when they are really loans for the purchase of bonds?

To illustrate, this occurred in my State: A man was approached by a banker and asked to buy a $1,000 bond. He replied, "I have only a $2,000 credit with your bank to run my farm, and if I take this $1,000 bond—and you say you will carry 90 per cent of it—it will be charged against my commercial account." The banker said, "Oh, no; this loan will stand on its own bottom; this bond will be a distinct loan and will take care of itself." When the spring opened and the farmer went to open his account the rate of interest on the bond, in moneys that he might draw, was increased beyond the rate that the bond bore, and it was charged to his commercial account. That, I am informed by bankers, was universal all over this country. The volume of seeming loans to our agricultural interests consists merely in the conversion of the indebtedness of the people who, buying beyond their means under the promise that the loans would be carried as special bond loans, find them now converted into commercial loans, which are charged against their commercial account, thereby stagnating everything.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will pardon me, the question of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is one which would have to be answered by the members of the Federal Reserve Board. Of course, whatever has been done, has been done according to law. The Senator from South Carolina does not dispute that. The pending joint resolution does not undertake to change the law. I might reply to the Senator from South Carolina by again quoting Gov. Harding's testimony before the committee. He said that there were cotton growers in the South who were trying to get accommodation from the banks to hold cotton that was grown in 1917 in order to peg the price of that cotton until they could sell it for a profit. Probably that is one of the reasons why the members of the Federal Reserve Board have been trying to conserve the resources of the Federal Reserve System and to direct them to the accommodation of the legitimate commercial needs of the country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut, if the Senator from Utah will permit me——

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator will pardon me one moment, I think this question is one which has to be faced in a courageous way. My sympathies are entirely with the purposes of the joint resolution, but I am not in favor of enacting legislation which is purely deceptive. I think we had better tell the whole truth about the situation and not try to fool the farmers. If the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or the Senator from South Carolina can point out that section 2 of the joint resolution will provide a single additional dollar for the accommodation of farmers seeking credit, I will withdraw my objection. That can not be done under the section. The officials are left to administer this section according to law, and it is absurd to direct them to do everything that is necessary to provide the farmers of the country with money at the lowest possible rate of interest when we know it is an impossibility.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Why is it an impossibility?

Mr. McLEAN. Because we have not the reserves.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Comptroller of the Currency, in a public statement which I have in my pocket, which he issued some time in October, officially declared that there was enough gold reserve held by the Federal Reserve System to issue $2,000,000,000 more of circulating notes than were then outstanding, and that was in the midst of the deflation period.

Mr. McLEAN. I want to tell the Senator that the reserves in some of the Federal reserve banks are now below the legal requirement and that the average is close to the legal requirement.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; and if the deflation and destruction of prices go on—and we have changed the basis of our credit to where it is largely a commodity basis—we shall not have any reserve in any of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that the Federal Reserve Board has had very serious difficulty in determining what should be the discount rate, and we must not forget while we are trying to serve a certain clientele that it is the course they have taken which has kept our financial system safe, and which can differentiate it from some of the financial systems of Europe. Let me suggest to our friends who are seeking to serve certain localities—and I sympathize with them; I realize the difficulties under which they are laboring—that existing conditions do not affect the agricultural interests any more than they affect the manufacturing or commercial interests. More than that, let me make the suggestion that it is not the rate of discount which the Federal reserve bank may decide to be the proper rate of discount that is going to control the rate of interest which is charged to their customers by the banks of the several States. In the State of Ohio, for instance, the legal rate is 6 per cent; the contractual rate may be 8 per cent; in many of the States the legal rate is 10 per cent; and if we have a discount rate of, let us say, 5 or 6 per cent, who is to get the difference? Will the customer get it or will the local bank get it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I can state that in 1914 and 1915 and a part of 1916, I believe, a preferential rate was given agricultural products, and that the banks themselves allowed a lower rate for the benefit of the farmers. There may be some instances where that was not so. The Senator from Ohio knows that the higher the rediscount rate necessarily the nearer will it be to the legal rate in a given State; the margin between the two will grow smaller.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, apropos of what the Senator from Ohio has just said, the major provocative for raising the rate of rediscount by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks was the fact that there were thousands of banks in this country located in the States in which the rate of interest was high which were almost subsisting by the profits they made out of rediscounts. They were getting money from the Federal reserve banks at 5, 5¼, and 6 per cent and loaning it to their customers at 10 and 12 per cent. Thus the system placed a premium on rediscounting rather than responding to the commercial requirements of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are not the national banks limited to 8 per cent in connection with the interest charge to their customers?

Mr. GLASS. There is a considerable money-making profit in the difference between 5¼ or 6 per cent and 8 per cent, if the volume of transactions be large enough.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President. I do not know where I left off when I was interrupted half an hour ago, but I was answering, I think, a question asked me by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I had made the statement that the western banks held deposits in the banks of New York for the purpose of issuing drafts against their accounts and meeting the requirements of their customers in connection with the purchase of goods in all parts of the United States. I know the Deseret National Bank, of Salt Lake City, a member bank, keeps a deposit in New York all the time. I know they have never loaned on time a single dollar of the money deposited in New York, and I know that they have never speculated in a commodity or stock from the time that they were organized up to the present day. They do, however, as I have said, keep a deposit in New York for the accommodation of their customers and to facilitate their own business. They also draw interest upon their daily balance.

Mr. GLASS. I hope the Senator did not understand me to deny that proposition. I said they are not legally obliged to keep deposits there.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor did I say that they were; I have never intimated such a thing. I said that they kept deposits there because they could draw 2 per cent or 2½ per cent on their daily balances and because they desired deposits there for the accommodation of their customers.

I know, Mr. President, that there has been a great deal of money made by the little banks by the rediscounting of paper, getting money from the Federal reserve bank in the district in which they are located and then lending the money just as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has said they have done; but there are many of the banks, I believe, that have not followed that practice. I know the bank in Provo, of which I am president, has never discounted a cent of paper from the day that it was organized down to the present time. It has never asked assistance of another bank, and I hope and trust that it never will be compelled to.

However, what I desired to do was to call the attention of the Senate to the absurdity of section 2 of the joint resolution. I do not want the farmers of the country to think for a moment that section 2 places one dollar more at their command than is at their command to-day. Why is that section of the bill here? I think it would be better for the Senate of the United States to strike it out. Let us say what we want; that is, to rehabilitate the War Finance Corporation, and when it is rehabilitated to employ $500,000,000 of capital stock. Section 12 of the act creating the corporation gives them the power of making loans, as I remember, to the extent of six times the amount of the capital stock, or $3,000,000,000. Let us not deceive ourselves. How much money are we going to advance and how are we going to get it? There is only one way to get it, and that is to sell bonds, as provided by the law.

I am not saying this in opposition to the measure at all. If a Senator can show me what section 2 will do toward assisting the agricultural interests of the United States I will admit that I was wrong. But there is nothing in it, Senators.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have suggested adding in the seventh line, after the word "agricultural," the words "and other products," so that it will read "the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products."

Mr. SMOOT. That is right. Everybody must admit that that is right. Why should we direct an agency of the Government of the United States, organized for the purpose of assisting the exportation of all kinds of goods, that it shall from now on grant assistance to one class? We want to be fair to ourselves. We want to do such things that at least the American people can point to us and say that we are using good judgment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, of course the chairman of the Agricultural Committee is here, and other members of the committee, but I want to say, in justification of myself as a member of the committee and as one helping to report out this joint resolution, that it was the opinion of the committee as expressed in my hearing that the law was such that if the War Finance Corporation were rehabilitated they already had power to look after these other industries; but, on account of the fact that agriculture and cotton were suffering more than anything else by the very nature of the case, since they are not organized and have no reserve capital like our corporate interests in this country have, we just attempted to emphasize here the needs of agriculture, though not to the detriment of the others. Of course the War Finance Corporation will operate for the aid of others, but we drew particular attention to the distressing condition of agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would have voted for section 1 of the measure just as it is, because if the War Finance Corporation is rehabilitated I know what it will undertake to do, but we are not going to get any more money from section 2, and if we rehabilitate the War Finance Corporation with its $500,000,000 of capital, and section 12 of the law, authorizing the sale of bonds to six times that amount, or $3,000,000,000, that ought to take care not only of the agricultural interests of the country but of every other interest. I want to say that if we can not take care of the country on that basis the country will not be taken care of, because more bonds than that can not be sold in this market. In fact, it would be an impossibility to place that amount. So why load down a measure with a provision that is so inconsistent, that means nothing to the industries of the country, and that means nothing to the farmer in the way of assistance?

I think it is the part of wisdom for the Senate to strike out that section, and I think the joint resolution would have a far better chance of passing in the other body, the House of Representatives, if that were stricken out, because when it goes to the House it may be the means of holding it up for discussion for a long, long time. What is wanted is immediate relief. Time is of the essence of this thing. There is suffering at this very moment, not only on the part of the producer, but on the part of the banks that are loaning and have loaned the producer money.

It is impossible for the stock men of the West to borrow more money. How are they going to get feed for their cattle this winter? How are they going to take their sheep from the summer range to the winter range, and provide for carrying them through the winter, unless they get immediate relief? Senators, let us not put anything in this joint resolution that is going to take time by bringing on discussion.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act mean that that corporation can deal with anyone except banks—that it can deal with any individual in the way of furnishing him money?

Mr. SMOOT. I have the act here, and I will read it.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that through the general course of business the money will be placed with the banks?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, of course anybody that gets a salary, or that borrows a dollar from any source, as a general thing deposits the money in a bank.

Mr. GRONNA. I mean the transactions will be made through the banks.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly; unquestionably.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, I ask the Senator from Utah, and also the Senator from Connecticut, why is it so absurd to call the attention of the banks that get this money to the requirement of the law that they shall loan to these people at a liberal rate of discount? The Senator must not overlook the fact that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has held extensive hearings; and if he will refer to page 53 he will find, in the statement of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, that he calls attention to the fact that since January 27, 1920, when the word went out raising the rate of discount, the loans have decreased. Now, what difference does it make whether you have the banks full of money or not if the public are not going to get the money? Does that help the farmer, I will ask the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Dakota is a banker himself; and I will ask him if a farmer at the present time made application to his bank and the bank's reserves were as low as it was safe for them to be whether he would make the loan?

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be very glad to answer the Senator. I have never dealt with the Federal Reserve Board; I have never had a dollar from the Federal reserve banks; I have never rediscounted with them.

Mr. SMOOT. Neither have I.

Mr. GRONNA. But if I could have the advantage and the benefit of this particular law, I could extend that benefit to the farmer, and I could not do it in any other way.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is a banker, and he knows that if he will take up the bank statements that were issued last month he will find that nearly every bank in the United States is loaned to the very limit of safety. They are not going to take any chances of loaning below the amounts the law requires that they shall hold on hand against their deposits. If they do, those who know the banking business know what will happen to them. Therefore I say to the Senator that the money that will come from the sale of these bonds ultimately will find its way into circulation. That is the object of it. That is what it is for. If it is not going to do that, then let us not pass the resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. Does not the Senator from Utah overlook one important fact? In the amended law of March 3, 1919, the War Finance Corporation is permitted to do foreign business to the extent of a billion dollars. That is the way the Senator understands the law, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from North Dakota mean the Edge law?

Mr. GRONNA. No; I mean this law, the War Finance Corporation law.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; as I remember it.

Mr. GRONNA. I know that one citizen who was a member of the War Finance Corporation intended that we should extend our business with foreign nations. We do not depend for that extension entirely upon the sale of bonds. We want to sell our products, and the only way we can dispose of them is to seek a market in foreign lands.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we do not need any legislation for that purpose.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that this legislation will remedy that.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, yes; because of the very fact that we have to advance the money in order to do it; that is all. The Senator knows that Germany has not the money now to buy the wheat of this country, or the wool of this country, or the cotton of this country. We might just as well understand it as not. The people of Germany have not got it; and if they are going to buy these products they will have to get credit or advances in order to do so.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that when the revenue bill was under discussion we were asked here upon the floor of the Senate time and time again how much money our Government was going to loan to foreign countries and when we were going to stop such loans. I answered the question as briefly as I could by saying that I did not know how much it would be, but it would be equivalent to the amount of the balance of trade between the two countries. England did not have the money; France did not have the money; the money was not in the world to pay such trade balances, and we would simply have to loan them the amount of the difference between the trade of the United States and the trade of those countries; and that is what we did.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Utah and I do not really disagree on the questions that are fundamental; and if the Senator will pardon me for digressing a little from the real question that he is discussing, I think what I am about to say is pertinent to this discussion. If the Allies do not have the money necessary to set up this vanquished nation in business—I do not know that they intend to do it, but I am going to state my own views with reference to that matter. If I owe the Senator from Utah a large sum of money, he is too good a business man to tie my hands and my feet and prevent me from earning a dollar. If the Allies of Europe want money or credit for the people of that nation, it is their business to make the arrangements that will make it possible for this Government to extend credit, which it can do, I will say to the Senator, without the use of any money. We can extend our credit by selling our products to the people of that country, and nobody knows it better than the Senator from Utah; and that would be a business proposition.

If the Allies are in earnest and really intend to give the people of Germany a chance to make good in paying their debts to the Allies, and if unable to extend credit to Germany, then they should make it possible for us to extend credit, because we are able to do so; but before we can consider such a proposition we must know absolutely that the securities are good.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be all right if the producer would furnish the credit to the foreign countries; but the producer has to have the money, and somebody has to pay him the money, and somebody has to extend the credit to the foreign nations, and that is what the War Finance Corporation is going to do if anything comes from this legislation. Why, we can not lift ourselves up by the straps of our boots. We can not extend credits to foreign countries, and with the same money and at the same time pay the producer for the goods that are shipped to the foreign countries. That is impossible.

Mr. GRONNA. I think we all agree on that. If the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him, I want to read to him just a short paragraph from the statement made by the governor of the Federal Reserve Board. What does he say? After giving the various amounts which have been loaned and stating how the loans have been extended, he says:

> It is evident that any continuation of such a rate of increase as that would soon exhaust the resources of any banking system, no matter how strong. However, from the 27th of January, 1920—

I said 1919 a moment ago; I should have said 1920—

> when Federal reserve bank discount rates were advanced, until the present time there has been only a moderate increase in the invested assets of the Federal reserve banks, but a substantial increase in the volume of Federal reserve notes outstanding, and while the angle of ascending credit during the period September 19, 1919, to January 27, 1920, was 45 degrees, the angle since the 27th of January has been but about 2 degrees.

What does that mean? It means that at the very time the farmer is ready to garner his crop and dispose of his crop there is a deflation; there is an absolute stop to the using of the resources. How is he to get along with that sort of a condition? You force the farmer's product upon the market immediately, and what does it mean? It means that he must dispose of it at any price he can possibly get.

Mr. SMOOT. We have gone far afield, Mr. President, from what I rose to discuss, and I do not think it is necessary for me to take any more time of the Senate.
